If Eve had had sex with a reptile, Yahweh had not forgiven Noah.

The Bible, the only book he has fulfilled (thousands of) his prophecies says that Noah was pure. And also says that Yahweh killed all the Nephilims.

This idea is a cult called the 'serpent seed doctrine'. How is this any different to David Icke's lunacy?

The Bible is clear that Adam was a sinner and that everyone is born a sinner descended from Adam.

wades77 - July 11, 2011 02:43 PM (GMT)

yes its serpents seed doctrine, adam still sinned. Difference from Ickes is that its from the bible. I used to believe that commonly believed idea of nephilim which came from the writing of josephus. That angels 'pressed' themselves into flesh and took wives and the offspring was the giants. Thats what caused the giants according to them. This is what is the most widespread belief in christianity. I was reading William Branham's books and changed my belief.

Could Behemoth have been a dinosaur?

by Allan K. Steel
http://www.livingdinos.com/behemoth.html

Summary

In Job 40, the Lord is infallibly describing a real historical creature, called 'Behemoth'. No known living animal, such as the elephant or hippopotamus, fits the passage adequately. A detailed analysis of the key clause Job 40:17a suggests that the most natural interpretation is that the tail of Behemoth is compared to a cedar for its great size. Consequently, the most reasonable interpretation is that Behemoth was a large animal, now extinct, which had a large tail. Thus some type of extinct dinosaur should still be considered a perfectly reasonable possibility according to our present state of knowledge.

user posted image

The passage Job 40:15–24 gives a detailed description of the creature named 'Behemoth'. There has been controversy as to what Behemoth really is. This paper focuses on the clause Job 40:17a, which is crucial to the proposition that Behemoth could have been a type of dinosaur. The other common proposals are also analyzed, and some general considerations are made concerning the whole passage.

Basic considerations

The word 'Behemoth' (Job 40:15) is literally a plural form of a common Old Testament (OT) word meaning 'beast'. However, practically all commentators and translators have agreed that here we have an intensive or majestic plural, so that the meaning is something like 'colossal beast'. This case is similar to the word 'Elohim' (the most common name of God in the OT), which is actually a majestic plural form, but is always used with a singular verbal form, just as is encountered in this passage. Also, we read in verse 19 that Behemoth was the 'chief of the ways of God', which suggests that Behemoth was one of the largest (if not the largest) of God's creatures.

There are basically three animals that have been put forward as candidates for Behemoth which we will consider in this paper: the elephant, the hippopotamus, and some type of dinosaur.

Gordis gives an interesting overview of how Behemoth has been interpreted throughout history, noting that 'the interpretation has oscillated through the centuries between two poles, mythical and real'.1 The interpretation that Behemoth was an elephant is very old and was common among mediaeval scholars. The original KJV-1611 had a marginal note 'Or, the Elephant, as some thinke [sic]'. But the French Protestant pastor Samuel Bochart in his Hierozoicon (1663), which analyzed the animals in the Bible in great detail, suggested that Behemoth was a hippopotamus, and this has since remained as the most common interpretation. The suggestion of a dinosaur has only arisen in relatively modern times.

We will first dismiss the idea that Behemoth is some kind of mythological creature. Gordis gives many good reasons why Behemoth cannot be interpreted in this way. For example:

'the First Speech of the Lord deals with flesh-and-blood animals and birds, from the existence of which important conclusions are drawn regarding the nature of the world and man's place in it. … The same consideration supports the idea that Behemoth and Leviathan are also natural creatures, the existence of which heightens the impact of God's argument.'2

The descriptions of the physical and behavioural characteristics of Behemoth are also not consistent with mythological creatures.

At this point we will also dismiss the idea, common amongst 19th century commentators (e.g. Delitzsch3 and Gesenius4), that the word 'Behemoth' actually comes from an Egyptian word p-ehe-mou meaning 'ox of the water', and thus refers to the hippopotamus. But Driver and Gray reply: 'there is no evidence that the often cited p-ehe-mou ever existed'.5 Likewise, Gordis rejects the proposed Egyptian word; he states that it just doesn't exist!6

Now if we believe in the inspiration and inerrancy of the Bible we must maintain that the words spoken about Behemoth (and also Leviathan), were spoken by their Creator, who would have known the intimate details of His own design. The description of the animals in chapters 38 to 41 is given to convince Job of his ignorance and folly. It is thus a critical observation that, when the purpose is to show how marvellous an animal is, surely the most amazing facts about that animal, and the ways in which it is different in habits or appearance from all others, should be stated.

The key clause

Bearing all this in mind, we will now consider the key clause in Job 40:17a. First of all, here are some of the English translations of the clause that have been done:

. KJV: He moveth his tail like a cedar.
. NASB: He bends his tail like a cedar.
. NIV: His tail sways like a cedar.
. NKJV: He moves his tail like a cedar.
. REV: His tail is rigid as a cedar.
. RSV: He makes his tail stiff like a cedar.
. RV: He moveth his tail like a cedar.

Older translations are also of interest:

. Septuagint (Greek): He sets up/erects (estesen) his tail like a cypress.

. Vulgate (Latin): He ties up/binds (constringit) his tail like a cedar.

. Luther (German, 16th C): His tail stretches (streckt sich) like a cedar.

. Statenvertaling (Dutch, 17th C): According to his pleasure (Als ‘t hem lust), his tail is like a cedar.

. Diodati (Italian, 16th C): He raises (rizza) his tail like a cedar.
As can be seen, the translations have varied significantly! The reason is that the Hebrew verb in this clause is very problematic, so we shall study it in some detail.

The verb

The Hebrew verb in this clause is yachpôts. First of all, note that there is certainly a common OT verb châphâts, meaning ‘delight’, and yachpôts could be the Imperfect Qal form of this root. However, according to most lexicons and commentators, yachpôts here is actually a form of a different root, which occurs only here in the OT! The celebrated Brown, Driver and Briggs Hebrew lexicon (BDB) presents the two roots as follows:7

A) châphêts: means ‘delight, take pleasure’, usually with preposition be (‘in’), thus: ‘delight in’. A proposed Arabic cognate word means ‘be mindful, attentive’.

B) châphâts: means ‘bend down’. A proposed Arabic cognate word means ‘lower, depress’. They then translate our clause: ‘he bendeth down (extendeth down stiffly) his tail’.

The much more recent and widely acclaimed lexicon of Koehler and Baumgartner, which takes advantage of the advances that have been made in Semitic linguistics since the BDB lexicon, still presents a similar assessment, with two different roots:8

A) châphêts: means ‘desire’. A Syrian cognate means ‘to try to get’, and an Arabic cognate means ‘to keep, to take care’.

B) châphâts: has an Arabic cognate meaning ‘to make lower’. They then suggest that the verb in our verse, coupled with the word zânâb (‘tail’) means ‘to hang’, while an alternative translation is ‘to hold stiff’.

Most commentators basically agree that there are two separate roots. James Barr notes that the philologist Felix Perles suggested in 1895 that the verb here is not root (A) but root (B) with meaning ‘make straight, stretch out’.9 Driver and Gray state that root (A) is a different root from root (B) and give the same Arabic cognate as BDB for root (B), with meaning ‘lower, depress’, which is used in the Koran in the context of a bird lowering its wings (‘here, it seems, somewhat more generally, to bend’).10 Jenni and Westermann suggest that our verse has a different root from the common ‘delight’ root (A), and suggest the sense ‘to let hang (?)’ for root (B).11

Now most commentators also assume at the outset that Behemoth is a hippopotamus. Some of these then admit that our verse does not fit this very well. Andersen states that the hippopotamus fits the passage best, but then says: ‘But it is hard to see how his tail can be compared to a cedar’.12 Pope says: ‘As applied to the tail of hippo the hyperbole is extreme since the tail is absurdly small …’.13 Most absurdly of all, Hanson and Hanson say: ‘Our author must have been misinformed about the hippopotamus’ tail’!14

In contrast, other commentators, still labouring under the hippopotamus assumption, try to make the meaning of the verb fit this assumption! Many give to verb (B) the sense of ‘harden’ or ‘stiffen’, so that the whole verse is interpreted as meaning that Behemoth’s tail is compared in some way to a cedar tree for its stiffness or hardness. This idea is followed by Rowley,15 BDB (translation for (B), above), and Koehler and Baumgartner (alternative translation for (B), above), for example, and is probably the idea behind the translations of the REV, RSV and Vulgate versions of the Bible, quoted above. But there are no cognates given in Arabic or other languages to justify the sense of ‘harden’ or ‘stiffen’. It seems that this translation has only been proposed by those who make the a priori assumption that Behemoth must have been a hippopotamus! Furthermore, it doesn't fit anyway, since the hippopotamus' tail is short and fat (as Andersen, etc. above realized)!

Others have suggested the idea 'stretch out' (e.g. Perles, above). Gordis states that the verb 'is generally derived from the Arabic hafasa "lower, depress", hence "bend, arch" (P.), but the reference to the cedar makes this meaning inappropriate'.6 But he then dogmatically states that the context (i.e. his assumption that Behemoth is the hippopotamus!) requires the meaning 'stretch out'.

So what can we make of all this?

The verb châphêts (A) ('delight') normally takes the preposition be ('in', 'with'), but that is missing in this clause, which does give weight to the view that we do not have root (A) here. Also, because the preposition kemô ('like) is normally used adverbially, so is tied to the verb, the 'delight' sense is dubious: it is hard to know how the animal could 'delight in its tail like a cedar' (with the 'like a cedar' referring to the manner in which it delights!). Note that the Dutch Statenvertaling is the only translation quoted above which interprets the verb in this way, but the whole clause is rather meaningless in this translation.

The sense 'hang' proposed for root (B) (e.g. by Koehler and Baumgartner, above) at least has a sense related in some way to its proposed Arabic cognate meaning 'to make lower'. Furthermore, all translations and commentators quoted above have tended to assume that the creature Behemoth is the subject of the verb and 'his tail' is the object of the (presumed transitive) verb. However, if the 'hang' sense were admissible, then 'his tail' could be the subject of the verb, so that the clause could be translated 'His tail hangs like a cedar'. This would certainly be valid grammatically, if the verbal sense were correct, but it remains difficult to give a good sense to the clause if the expression 'like a cedar' must be tied adverbially to the verb.

We must also bear in mind that the vocabulary of Job has several distinctive features. Pope notes that Job has more hapax legomena (words which occur only once in the whole Bible) than any other Biblical book.16 Driver and Gray note that Job contains several Aramaic words,17 and Young also stresses the 'significant occurrence of Aramaisms' and concludes: 'In any case it is evidently true to say that a free expression of dialectal features is characteristic of the poetic style of Job'.18

In conclusion, it seems very unlikely that we have the 'delight' root (A) here, while we cannot be sure what root (B) precisely means, since the only proposals are based on tenuous connections with other Semitic cognates, and there is also a good possibility that root (B) is some dialectal word not in standard Biblical Hebrew. But from current philological considerations alone (ignoring the context of the whole clause), we can say that the only meanings of the verb which might be admissible are the 'delight' concept or something like the 'lower' or 'hang' concept. There is absolutely no philological justification for the 'hardness' or 'stiffness' idea!

Finally, note that the Septuagint (LXX), as quoted above, translates the key verb as 'erects', and it is just possible that the LXX translators were following an interpretative tradition which was based on a better knowledge of the Hebrew word or its origin, so that this would be the true sense of the word. But this is pure speculation—the LXX translators most probably just guessed at the meaning of the verb here, as most other translators appear to have done.

The tail and the cedar Moving on from the verb now, how could one compare a tail to a cedar?

Since several passages in the OT make a comparison with cedars because of their great height (e.g. 2 Kings 19:23, Isaiah 2:13, 37:24 and Ezekiel 17:22, 31:3), it may be that in Job 40:17a the tail is compared to the cedar for height. This could suggest the interpretation that Behemoth's tail is lifted up high. We noted previously that the LXX sense of ‘erects’ could just possibly be the correct sense. It would give a reasonable sense to the whole clause, as animals can lift up their tails, and this might be applicable to some kinds of dinosaurs. But it must be emphasized again that this is pure speculation.

Another thought is the following: since the book of Job is independent in several ways from the other OT books (that is, it does not mention Israel, etc.) and is probably old, the literary expressions used in it need not be strictly interpreted in the light of the common imagery found elsewhere in the OT. Thus the vertical height of the cedar itself need not be stressed here. So an alternative interpretation which is quite natural is that the cedar is mentioned simply for its great size or length, and the fact that it is vertically high is not necessarily significant, as a cedar lying horizontally on the ground is just as much a cedar as one standing vertically. In Psalm 92:12, we read that the righteous shall flourish like the palm tree and ‘shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon’. Here the key idea is simply that of great size and strength, and height is not important.

At this point we should also note that some have suggested that the word ‘tail’ here could be interpreted as ‘trunk’ (see, for example, the footnote for this verse in the NIV19), so that Behemoth would thus be the elephant. But the most glaring objection to this idea is that we read later in verse 24 about Behemoth’s nose (and that it cannot be pierced)! The animal cannot have a trunk (described by ‘tail’) and also a distinct nose! Since the Lord is infallibly speaking in this passage, why would He not have used ‘nose’ in verse 17 if Behemoth is the elephant? Also, the word for ‘tail’ here (zânâB) occurs eight other times in the OT,20 and in each case the key idea is the base or end of something, or inferiority (which is also the natural way one uses the word figuratively in English). So it would be extremely unnatural in itself to interpret the word ‘tail’ as a ‘trunk’, whatever the context. The elephant’s tail proper is as inappropriate as the hippopotamus’s tail for the comparison with a cedar.

We saw above that there is absolutely no etymological or philological justification for the sense ‘harden’ or ‘stiffen’, while something like the sense of ‘hang’ might be possible, and the LXX also suggests the sense of ‘erects’. So it seems that the only reasonable way that one could compare the tail of an animal to a cedar as a distinctive feature of the animal is either for its height (assuming it is lifted up) or simply for its great length or size. The key point is that some significant comparison is made with the cedar (whatever the precise meaning of the verb may be) in order to highlight a distinctive feature of Behemoth.

The elephant’s and hippopotamus’s tails are thus completely inappropriate for such a comparison. But in contrast, the idea of a dinosaur with a very large tail is quite appropriate. In particular, specimens of sauropods have been found which have very large tails worthy of comparison with the cedar tree.

The whole passage

Finally, we will very briefly examine the suitability of the proposed animals in the light of the whole passage.

The elephant is outstanding for its trunk, its great size (especially its feet), its enormous appetite and its ears. None of these unique features are mentioned in our passage, but they ought to have been, if Behemoth was the elephant. Also, the elephant retreats to the depths of the forest during the hot part of the day.21 This does not seem to fit with Job 40:21, which suggests that Behemoth spends his time in marshy areas.

The hippopotamus is noted for its weight, its large and strong mouth, with its deadly tusks, its thick skin, its pink sweat and its ability to walk on the bed of a river for long periods. It spends most of the day in the water, as its skin dries out very quickly in the sun.22 Again, none of these unique features are mentioned in our passage! Similarly, the hippopotamus stays in the deeper water, and this does not seem to fit with Job 40:22, where we are told that Behemoth stays under the trees on the bank.

The main features of the dinosaurs are unknown, apart from the size of their bones, which indicates that some of them were much larger than any known land animal alive today. Consequently, because of our ignorance here, there is nothing in the passage to eliminate this possibility!

It is not surprising that before fossils of large extinct animals were found in great numbers, older conservative commentators only tried to identify Behemoth with some of the largest known living animals (even though none of these animals are suitable). The possibility of very large extinct animals did not really occur to them!

Conclusion

The whole passage in Job 40 concerning Behemoth certainly suggests a large animal, and no known living animal fits the passage adequately (for various reasons, including the detailed habitat presented).

The most natural interpretation of the key clause Job 40:17a is that the tail of Behemoth is compared to a cedar for its great size, and there is nothing in the context which contradicts this possibility, even though the exact sense of the verb is extremely difficult to determine.

Consequently, the most reasonable interpretation (which also takes the whole passage into account) is that Behemoth was a large animal, now extinct, which had a large tail. Thus some type of extinct dinosaur should still be considered a perfectly reasonable possibility according to our present state of knowledge.

Why 7,000 Languages?

By David J. Stewart
http://www.jesus-is-savior.com/Evolution%2...0_languages.htm

If, as evolutionists claim, all of mankind evolved from the SAME primitive life-source, then how did we end up with 7,000 different languages? Did one gorilla get angry at another gorilla and decide to start a new language? I'm intrigued to know.

The Bible teaches that God created all the different languages at Babel... "Go to, let us go down, and there confound their language, that they may not understand one another's speech ... Therefore is the name of it called Babel; because the LORD did there confound the language of all the earth: and from thence did the LORD scatter them abroad upon the face of all the earth" (Genesis 11:7,9). It is far more reasonable to accept the Biblical claim that God created all of mankind's different languages; than it is to believe that some space-dust from a massive chaotic explosion somehow became life, and then took on intelligence, and then from the same evolutionary process ended up with 7,000 different languages. That makes no sense at all.

There are no "primitive" languages. All languages have a system of sounds, words, and sentences that can adequately communicate the content of culture. This is evidence of a divine Creator. The languages of the so-called "primitive" peoples are often very complex in their grammatical structures. If mankind had advanced through an evolutionary process, then there should still be developing languages today; but in fact, one languages disappears every 2-weeks...

QUOTE

Researchers say a language disappears every two weeks

LOS ANGELES TIMES
By Thomas H. Maugh II | September 19, 2007 in print edition A-18
http://articles.latimes.com/2007/sep/19/sc.../sci-language19

One of the world's 7,000 distinct languages disappears every 14 days, an extinction rate exceeding that of birds, mammals or plants, researchers said Tuesday.
At least 20% of the world's languages are in imminent danger of becoming extinct as their last speakers die off, compared with about 18% of mammals, 8% of plants and 5% of birds.

The extinction of a language translates into a loss of knowledge, said K. David Harrison, associate director of the Living Tongues Institute for Endangered Languages and a linguist at Swarthmore College.

"When we lose a language, we lose centuries of thinking about time, seasons, sea creatures, reindeer, edible flowers, mathematics, landscapes, myths, music, the unknown and the everyday," he said.

Half of the world's languages have disappeared in the last 500 years, and half of the remainder are likely to vanish during this century, Harrison said.

Many of the languages are not easily translated into English. In the endangered south Siberian language Todzhu, for example, the word “chary” means “2-year-old male castrated reindeer that can be used for riding.”

Harrison and Living Tongues Director Gregory D.S. Anderson have identified five language “hot spots” where the extinction rate is particularly high, they said at a news conference sponsored by the National Geographic Society, which supports their research.

One such area encompasses Oklahoma, Texas and New Mexico, where 40 languages spoken by Native Americans are at risk. Only five elderly members of the Yuchi tribe, for example, are fluent in the Yuchi language, which may be unrelated to any other language in the world.

The top hot spot is northern Australia, where 153 languages spoken by Aborigines are at risk. There are currently only three known speakers of Magati Ke in the Northern Territory and three Yawuru speakers. The team found one elderly speaker of Amurdag – which had previously been declared extinct – and he could barely recall the language spoken by his father.

Other hot spots include central South America, parts of the Pacific Northwest and eastern Siberia. All the areas are similar in that they were colonized with indigenous languages giving way to a colonial language either voluntarily or through coercion. A map of the hot spots is at www.languagehotspots.org.

The Native American languages in Oklahoma are giving way to English, Anderson said. That process has already taken place on the East Coast, which was colonized earlier. Virtually all indigenous languages have disappeared there.

Researchers from the Living Tongues Institute are visiting these locales and using digital audio and video equipment to record the last speakers of the most endangered tongues. “In many cases, these are the first and only digital recordings of the languages,” Anderson said.

In as few as seven to 10 days, they can record enough information to prevent the complete loss of a language, he said.

The fact that mankind's languages are vanishing from civilization at any alarming rate is proof that evolution is a lie. If evolution were true, then the process by which mankind has obtained 7,000 languages would be continuing today. Has the evolutionary process ceased? According to the Bible it never happened in the first place. One would have to be a fool to follow the nonsense of evolution. Hey, if the Big Bang Theory is true, then why was there only one? Why not two or three big bangs, or a thousand? It's amazing to me how people continually place God and the Bible on trial; yet unquestioningly accept the illogical theories of evolution. This just shows their wicked heart of unbelief in the Word of God.

- For the unsaved out there, do not be fooled for one second. EVILution is straight from the pits of hell, Satan and his minions hate you with a passion, simply because you remind him of God Almighty - afterall, you were created in God's image (Genesis 1:27) - and boy how he HATES that.

The living God being the God of Abraham, Jacob & Isaac (Acts 3:13). Jesus is God the Father, God the Son & God the Holy Spirit. Of course there is more than evidence for a global flood (link below). The Word of God does not lie, only man does so and your soul's enemy #1, Lucifer / Satan.

John {10:7} Then said Jesus unto them again, Verily, verily, I say unto you, I am the door of the sheep. {10:8} All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers: but the sheep did not hear them. {10:9} I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture. {10:10} The thief cometh not, but for to steal, and to kill, and to destroy: I am come that they might have life, and that they might have [it] more abundantly. {10:11} I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep.

Get in the ark, the last judgment is fast approaching. Don't be like the scoffers and mockers always learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth (read 2 Timothy 3:1-7). It's all a matter if you're saved or not.

Almost a Thousand Major Scientists Dissent from Darwin!

By Dr. Don Boys Sunday, May 2, 2010
http://canadafreepress.com/index.php/article/22722

A major storm of protest against the myth of evolution has been building for many years, as proved by almost a thousand major scientists, all with doctorates who have signed on to the following statement as of 2010: “We are skeptical of claims for the ability of random mutation and natural selection to account for the complexity of life. Careful examination of the evidence for Darwinian theory should be encouraged.”

Those scientists threw down the gauntlet to evolutionists by publishing a two-page ad in a national magazine with the heading, “A Scientific Dissent From Darwinism.” Fevered, fanatical, and foolish evolutionists will charge that those dissenting scientists were backwoods yokels (maybe even a few snake handlers and flat earthers mixed in) dug up by pushy creationists to promote their cause. Not so, I have gone over the list and if certification and accreditation are so important, impressive, and indispensable, then those people will give evolutionists a perpetual heartburn. Major scientists around the world agree with them and many of them have not yet signed on to the dissent although they have gone on record that mutations and natural selection did not produce evolution. Other major scientists critical of evolution have died in the last 25 years.

I wrote in my Evolution: Fact, Fraud, or Faith? that “a mutation is an unexpected and random change in a cell, produced by the penetration of the cell by radiation, mutagenic chemical or other disorganizing agent. Mutations produce change, but not improvements. Evolutionists believe that most mutations are harmful while others believe they are all harmful or neutral.” Evolutionists must claim that some mutations are helpful because basically, all evolution rests upon that premise.

Pierre Grasse was known as the greatest scientist in France, and he disputed the value of mutations when he wrote, “...No matter how numerous they may be, mutations do not produce any kind of evolution.” Grasse went on to say that it “is not true” that bacteria are evolving quickly because of numerous mutations. He reminds all that “To vary and to evolve are two different things; this can never be sufficiently emphasized.” Devious, deceptive, and dishonest evolutionists now claim that change is evolution, but that is so silly it is embarrassing. Everyone admits to change, but the change is never from a simple to a more complex creature. Never.

Grasse was supported earlier by Professor N. H. Nilsson of Lund University who said, “There is no single instance where it can be maintained that any of the mutants studied has a higher vitality than the mother species.” Nilsson added, “It is therefore, absolutely impossible to build a current evolution on mutations or on recombinations.”

Michael Pitman, (died 2000) former chemistry professor at Cambridge, confessed, “Neither observation nor controlled experiment has shown natural selection manipulating mutations so as to produce a new gene, hormone, enzyme system or organ.”

Not only are mutations always harmful, but they produce changes in present characters, never producing new characters. Mutations are the catalyst for defects, deformity, disease, and death; yet evolutionists scream that they are the explanation for all the varieties we see in the animal and plant kingdoms. They teach that the many changes in combination with the pressure of the environment over billions of years have produced the differences between one-cell amoeba and complicated humans; however, mutations never create; they corrupt. Thus, the results of all mutations: disorder, defects, disease, deformity, and death.

The mutation theory is without any scientific foundation

The mutation theory is without any scientific foundation. In fact, Ernst Mayr, a famous evolutionist, believed mutations were the answer as to how evolution allegedly took place, but his own experiments with fruit flies proved the opposite! Mayr tried to increase and decrease the number of bristles on fruit flies that normally have 36, but he discovered that the flies died if they had more than 56 and fewer than 25. Repeated experiments of 30 generations proved the fact of limitations, and when the fruit flies were left alone, they were back to 36 bristles in five years! Of course, change takes place, but it is always limited change and never any improvement.

No fruit fly, peppered moth or any other creature has formed a new creature through mutations and natural selection, and more and more top scientists are supporting that position. The co-holder of the 1945 Nobel Prize for developing penicillin, Sir Ernest Chain, called natural selection and chance mutations a “hypothesis based on no evidence and irreconcilable with the facts.” And the murmur continues. The 1971 winner of the Nobel Prize in science, Dr. Dennis Gabor (died 1979) said: “I just cannot believe that everything developed by random mutations…”

We creationists will continue to remind evolutionists that their lie about “change” has been exposed. Richard Dawkins wrote of evolution, “No reputable scientist” refuses to accept evolution. A similar statement has been declared by many silly, shallow scientists and the gullible continue to believe it. However, a lie is a lie if everyone (including “experts’) believe it. The above quotes from world-famous scientists prove Dawkins is a Dummy.

Moreover, as I scanned the list of dissenting scientists I was impressed with so many of various fields, all from prestigious universities who were willing to “put their names on the line” for all to see. Those courageous scientists were experts in medicine, biology, geology, anthropology, zoology, physics, genetics, etc. holding doctoral degrees from Rutgers, MIT, Baylor, Oxford, Dartmouth, Tulane, Columbia, Cornell, Princeton, Purdue, Indiana, Yale, Duke, Stanford, Cambridge, Temple, Berkeley, and many others. Even a few Christian universities such as Liberty, Cedarville, Asbury, Wheaton, etc., are represented.

I am waiting for Dawkins, Hitchens, Harris, Dennett, and Company to admit their lies in the advancement of atheism as they have declared that “evolution is a fact not disputed by any qualified scientists.” Obviously the atheists are wrong and have proved themselves to be fools, frauds, or fanatics. Maybe all evolutionists are in a special classification—Homo Ignoramus!

"There Was No Big Bang!" Say Several Leading Cosmologists (A Galaxy Classic)

http://www.dailygalaxy.com/my_weblog/2010/...xy-classic.html

"What banged?" Sean Carroll, CalTech -Moore Center for Theoretical Cosmology & Physics

Several of the worlds leading astrophysicists believe there was no Big Bang that brought the universe and time into existence. Before the Big Bang, the standard theory assumes, there was no space, just nothing. Einstein merged the universe into a single entity: not space, not time, but spacetime.

Proponents of branes propose that we are trapped in a thin membrane of space-time embedded in a much larger cosmos from which neither light nor energy -except gravity- can escape or enter and that that "dark matter" is just the rest of the universe that we can't see because light can't escape from or enter into our membrane from the great bulk of the universe. And our membrane may be only one of many, all of which may warp, connect, and collide with one another in as many as 10 dimensions -a new frontier physicists call the "brane world." Stephen Hawking, among others, envisions brane worlds perculating up out of the void, giving rise to whole new universes.

One of the most important space probes of the century is the Wilkinson Microwave Anisotropy Probe (WMAP) launched in 2001 to measure the temperature differences in the Cosmic Microwave Background (CMB) radiatiion -the 14-billion year old Big Bang's remnant radiant heat . The anisotropies then in turn are used to measure the universe's geometry, content, and evolution; and, perhaps most importantly, to test the Big Bang model, and the cosmic inflation theory. WMAP data seem to support a universe that is dominated by dark energy in the form of a cosmological constant.

Perhaps not surprisingly, there is no supportative data to date for Big Bang theory, although the results aren't sensitive enough to rule out the pervasive Big Bang/inflation model.

The influence of gravitaional waves on polarization is different from that of overall energy distribution, so it should be possible to tell from polarization in the WMAP scans whether the variation is coming from contrasting energy density (heat) or gravitational waves that a Big Bang should have produced.

The world's leading astrophysicists are confidemt that with a sensitive enough probe such as that by the new Planck telescope with its more detailed CMB plots, that they can reduce the level of uncertainty low enough so that they can say definitively whether the gravitational waves that should have been created by the Big Bang as present.

If this next generation Planck Telescope shows that there is no onvious distortions caused by gravity waves, it will rule out the Big Bang plus inflation theory -an add-on theory that explains the phenomenal sudden expansion of space from a tiny point. In it's place will be new models that support what many leading cosmologists see as our universe to be proved to be one of just many in an eternal cycle of birth and rebirth.

Models of the universe that involve a bouncing brane or a Big Crunch rather than a start from scratch Big Bang predict much smaller gravity waves being produced than would come from a Big Bang. If the universe actually went through cycles of expansion and contraction, it is possible that the uneven distributions in the early post-Big Bang universe that resulted in the formation of galaxies were leftovers from the universe before.

Only gravity can't exist soley in a specific brane, but wanders where it will, leaking off our brane into what physicists call "the bulk" -- the rest of space-time. Brane theory offer an fascinating and plausable explanation for why gravity is such a weakling: Maybe it's not any weaker than the other forces, but just concentrated somewhere else in the bulk, or on another brane, providing the key to understanding the dark matter that makes up 90 % of our universe.

If our brane is but a small slice of a much larger cosmos, however, the "dark matter" might be nothing but ordinary matter trapped on another brane. Dark matter is no longer some mysterious unknown, but the force at the heart of the brane-brane interaction. With the brane model the universe goes through an eternal cosmic cycle over a vast timescale of attraction, bounce with a spread out bang, springing apart, and expansion until attraction (gravity) takes over again.Such a shadow world, Hawking speculated, might contain "shadow human beings wondering about the mass that seems to be missing from their world."

Are branes the key to understanding the origin of our universe? "Who knows?" says Sean Carroll. "they will have taught us a useful lesson that we should have known all along, which is that we don't have a clue to what's going on."

Alan Guth of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, creator of the currently accepted model of the Big Bang, said recently "he felt a little like Rip Van Winkle -- picking up his head from a long sleep only to notice that the landscape of physics he thought he knew had suddenly, drastically, changed."

Casey Kazan.

Today in Africa, in the People's Republic of the Congo, there lies a vast, hot and humid area covered with thick forests and dotted with streams and swamps. Of these swamps, there exists one that is undisputedly the largest in the entire world . . . the Likouala Swamp. Approximately 55,000 square miles, larger than the entire state of Florida, the government has officially declared it 80% unexplored. To the scientific community, this area is as foreign as an entirely new planet.

Early Years

Reports of dinosaur-like creatures in Central Africa go back for more than 200 years, according to William "Bill" Gibbons. In 1776, French missionaries passing through the forests reported finding huge footprints in the ground. The clawed prints were three feet in circumference and were spaced about seven feet apart. This would have made the animal as big as an elephant, but it was common knowledge to the locals that the tracks were not from an elephant, since elephants do not posses claws. One of the priests, amazingly, even gave claim to have seen several specimens chewing on vegetation while wading in the rivers. Regardless, it was certain that these were an entirely new group of animals. At that time, however, they were neither "dinosaurs" nor "prehistoric," the words waiting to be invented nearly one hundred years later.

In 1913, a German explorer reported stories of, what the natives called, "Mokele-mbembe," which he had heard while in the Congo. Hearing the reports, a few scientists noticed that the descriptions of the creatures made them sound much like sauropod dinosaurs. Sauropods were the giants of the dinosaurs world, averaging about 70 feet (21 meters) long and standing 12-15 feet (3.7 to 4.8 m) tall at the hips.

In 1932, a British scientist, exploring near the Likouala region where the creatures are said to live, came across some abnormally huge footprints. Later, when he went down one of the rivers in a canoe, he heard strange sounds, but did not see anything.

Coincidentally, that same year the world famous zoologist and biologist, Ivan T. Sanderson, along with animal-trader Gerald Russel, were paddling up the Mainyu River in the heart of western Africa when, according to Sanderson's report:

"The most terrifying sound I have ever heard, which sounded like an on-coming earthquake or an exploding, nearby robot, suddenly greeted us from a large underwater cave."

While the water of the river was boiling and foaming directly in front of their canoe, a darkish, shining lizard-like head suddenly rose from the dark water. They described the head as nearly the size of the head of a fully grown hippo, which sat on a thick, swan-like neck. The enormous neck was turned towards the two men, and for just a few seconds, although it seemed like an eternity, the monster simply stared at Sanderson and Russel. Mr. Sanderson summed up his thoughts with these emphatic words:

"I don't know what we saw, but the animal, the monster, burned itself into my retinas. It looked like something that ought to have been dead millions of years ago. As a scientist, I should have been happy, of course, but this encounter was so frightening, so nasty that I never want to see it again."

A Brief Analysis

NAME:

Mokele-mbembe is Lingala, and can mean a variety of things. The word is commonly defined as "One that stops the flow of rivers," but can also mean "one who eats the tops of palm trees," "monstrous animal," or even "half-God, half-beast." Mokele-mbembe is also used as a generic term to refer to other animals like Emela-ntouka, Mbielu-mbielu-mbielu, and Nguma-monene.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION:

Mokele-mbembe has been described as an animal with a long neck, a long tail, and rounded shape tracks with three claws. The closest known animal that has these characteristics is a sauropod dinosaur.

HABITAT:

Mokele-mbembe lives in the pools and swamps adjacent to the rivers of the Likouala swamp region of The People's Republic of Congo on the continent of Africa. It is said to use the lakes as a crossing path to go from one river to another.

SIZE:

The body size of each specimen is said to be somewhere between the size of a hippopotamus and an elephant. Its length is reportedly between 16 to 32 feet (5 to 10 meters). The length of the neck, according to various descriptions, is between 5 to 10 feet (1.6 to 3.3 meters). The length of the tail is somewhere between 5 to 10 feet as well, varying slightly.

APPENDAGES:

Interestingly, there have been a few reports of a frill on the back of the head. The frill is said to be like the comb found on a male chicken (cock). There have also been reports of a small horn on its head.

COLOR:

The color of the skin is predominately reddish-brown with a color range from gray to brown. There are no reports of hair on the animal. If there were, it would obviously contradict the reptilian dinosaur theory.

TRACKS:

Tracks possess a significantly rounded shape between 1 to 3 feet (30 to 90 centimeters) in diameter with three claws. The distance between tracks is about 7 to 8 feet (2.1 to 2.4 meters).

SOUND:

The predominant belief is that Mokele-mbembe does not create any sounds, though there have been some conflicting reports. This is probably due to the fact that Mokele-mbembe is used generically for other animals and the sound is being confused with Emela-ntouka, a creature which makes a sound like a snort, howl, roar, rumble, or growl.

FOOD:

The pygmies, natives of the Likouala Swamp region, report that the essential diet of Mokele-Mbembe consists primarily of the Malombo plant. Since it only eats plants, it is classified as an herbivore. The Malombo plant actually describes two plants: Landolphia mannii and Landolphia owariensis.

BEHAVIOR:

Mokele-Mbembe lives underwater most of the time except when it eats or travels to other parts of the swamp. It has as been reported that it does not like hippopotamuses and will kill them on sight, though it does not eat them. According to the pygmies, Hippopotamuses cannot be found where Mokele-Mbembe lives.

Expeditions

Expeditions primarily began in the 1880s, shortly after the region was taken over by Belgium. For many years, therefore, it was called the Belgium Congo. Beginning from 1909, here is a brief list of over a dozen of them.

AMERICAN EXPEDITION 1909

Naturalist Carl Hagenbeck recounted in his autobiography how two separate individuals - a German named Hans Schomburgh and an English hunter - told him about a "huge monster, half elephant, half dragon," which lived in the Congo swamps. Later, another naturalist, Joseph Menges, related to Hagenbeck that "some kind of dinosaur, seemingly akin to the brontosaurs," inhabited the swamps. Hagenbeck soon sent an expedition to the Congo to search for the monster, but the effort was quickly aborted due to disease and hostile natives.

GERMAN EXPEDITION 1913

In 1913, Capt. Freiherr von Stein zu Lausnitz was sent by the German government to explore the Cameroon. Von Stein wrote of a unique animal called, in the local tongue, Mokele-mbembe, said to inhabit the areas near the Ubangi, Sangha, and Ikelemba Rivers. Von Stein described the creature thus:

"The animal is said to be of a brownish-gray color with a smooth skin, its size approximately that of an elephant; at least that of a hippopotamus. It is said to have a long and very flexible neck and only one tooth, but a very long one; some say it is a horn. A few spoke about a long muscular tail like that of an alligator. It is said to climb the shore even at daytime in search of food; its diet is said to be entirely vegetable. At the Ssombo River I was shown a path said to have been made by this animal in order to get at its food. The path was fresh and there were plants of the described type [a liana] nearby"

AMERICAN EXPEDITION 1920

A 32-men-strong expedition was sent out from the Smithsonian Institution in Washington D.C. After six days, African guides found large, unexplained tracks along the bank of a river and later the team heard mysterious "roars, which had no resemblance with any known animal," coming from an unexplored swamp. However, the Smithsonian's hunt for Moklele-Mbembe was to end in tragedy. During a train-ride through a flooded area where an entire tribe was said to have seen the dinosaur, the locomotive suddenly derailed and turned over. Four team members were crushed to death under the cars and another half dozen seriously injured.

AMERICAN EXPEDITION 1932

In 1932, American cryptozoologist Ivan Sanderson was traveling in Africa and came across large hippo-like tracks in a region with no hippos. He was told by the natives that they were made by a creature named the "mgbulu-eM'bembe." Later, Sanderson saw something in the water that seemed too large to be a hippo, but it disappeared before he could investigate further.

AMERICAN EXPEDITION 1972

In 1960, herpetologist James H. Powell, Jr. took interest in the African dragons and organized an expedition to the Congo in 1972. Powell's expedition, unfortunately, was fraught with problems (the United States and the Congo had poor relations at the time). Many months of hardships such as snake-bites, near-drownings and tropical diseases only led to more witness testimonies about Mokele-Membe and another lizard-like creature which locally was called "n'yamala."

AMERICAN EXPEDITION 1976

In 1976, James Powell decided to go to Gabon instead, inspired by a book called "Trader Horn." (In 1927, the book, a memoir of the author's time in Gabon, specifically along the Ogooue River, was written by Englishman Alfred Aloysius Smith. He recorded hearing of a creature called the "jago-nini" and identified it with the "amali," a creature whose tracks he had seen). He was quick to realize they were probably identical to the Mokele-mbembe. Furthermore, Powell heard local legends of the n'yamala, and locals identified pictures of a sauropod dinosaur as bearing the most resemblance to the animal.

GERMAN EXPEDITION 1980

An expedition mounted by engineer Herman Regusters and his wife Kia managed to make its way to Lake Tele, where they heard the growls and roars of an unknown creature. They also claimed to have photographed Mokele-Mbembe in the lake, as well as watching it walk on land through the brush. According to Regusters, the creature they saw was 30-35 feet long.

AMERICAN EXPEDITION 1980

Powell launched another expedition in 1980, but this time cryptozoologist Roy P. Mackal came along. Powell and Mackal found that a large number of reports came from the banks of the Likouala-aux-herbes River near Lake Tele. They said that most witnesses maintained that the animal was between 15-30 feet long (a long neck accounted for much of the length). The creature was also said to be a rust color, and that some had been seen to possess a frill or crest.

AMERICAN EXPEDITION 1981

Yet another expedition was organized in 1981 - this time composed of Mackal, J. Richard Greenwell, M. Justin Wilkinson, and Congolese zoologist Marcellin Agnagna. The expedition encountered what they believed was a Congo "dinosaur" along the Likouala River, when they heard a large animal leaping into the water near Epena. They also discovered a path of broken branches supposedly made by the animal, as well as a number of footprints.

AFRICAN EXPEDITION 1983

In April, 1983, a Congolese expedition led by Marcellin Agnagna, a zoologist from the Brazzaville Zoo, arrived to Lake Tele. Agnagna claimed to have seen the beast some 275 meters out in the lake. The animal held its thin, reddish head - which had crocodile-looking, oval eyes and a thin nose - on a height of 90 cm and looked from side to side, almost as if it was watching him. According to Agnagna, the animal was a reptile, though not a crocodile, nor a python or a freshwater turtle.

BRITISH EXPEDITION 1985-86

Englishman William J. Gibbons (presently living in Canada) talked to several eye-witnesses who gave him valuable information about the Mokele-Mbembe. He is currently convinced that the dinosaur exists, but at the time was unable to prove it. However, upon his return to the UK he brought with him the remains of a monkey which he could not identify. This was later classified as a new sub-species of crestless mangabey monkey (cerocebus galeritus). Fish and insect specimens also found in the Congos remain unclassified to date.

JAPANESE EXPEDITION 1987

A piece of blurry video footage filmed by a Japanese film crew supposedly showing the creature in Lake Tele remains disputable evidence of the animal's existence. The film is indistinct and grainy, possibly just showing two men in a boat with one of them standing upright in the front of the vessel, as is common in Africa. This has been interpreted as a head and neck, but this interpretation of the videotape is purely speculative at best.

BRITISH EXPEDITION 1990

Author and explorer Redmond O'Hanlon returned from his failed expedition convinced that witnesses must have mistaken wild elephants, crossing rivers with their trunk in the air, for a prehistoric Mokele-Mbembe.

BRITISH EXPEDITION 1992

William Gibbons tried again six years later, this time together with American explorer Rory Nugent. Together they searched almost two thirds of the unexplored Bai River while also examining two small lakes North West of Lake Tele. These are Lake Fouloukuo and Lake Tibeke, which are surprisingly absent from most maps. Both are said to be haunts of Mokele-Mbembe. Rory Nugent also took two interesting photographs of something most unusual in Lake Tele. One may actually show the head of a Mokele Mbembe.

Conclusion

What are we to conclude about the Mokele-mbembe . . . in essence, what would be the correct, most unbiased position to take? To give such a conclusion, we believe, requires the admittance of all facts.

#1. There lies an area larger than the state of Florida in the People's Republic of Congo. This area has been officially declared by government officials as 80% unexplored.

#2. Natives of the area, namely the Pygmies, speak of a strange animal roughly the size of an elephant, possessing a long, thin neck, which they call "Mokele-mbembe."

#3. Expeditions to the area have proven unsuccessful. Though claims have been made of the animal being seen and heard, clear, unmistakable photographs or video footage have not yet been attained.

#4. Unusual footprints have been found, notably by Dr. Roy Mackal. The footprints are large and wide, clearly bearing claws at the tips of each toe. These footprints do not belong to any known species.

These four facts in and of themselves deserve careful consideration. We simply know too little of the area. "The Dark Continent" still remains just that, and time is our only proponent in man's search for a living dinosaur. Until then, we can only wonder what animals have yet to be discovered in this vast and mysterious world of ours.

Title: Im starting to go to church each sunday

14april2000 - June 19, 2011 12:20 AM (GMT)

Hello there

Im starting to go to church each sunday.

This sunday it will be the 6 time since i started.

I was also to bible studie weedsday evening.

It will give me stability in my life.

servant of truth - June 19, 2011 01:21 AM (GMT)

you dont go to heaven by going to church

Jesus never told anyone to 'go to church' most 'churches' lead people to hell, fellowship with other believers is good but you generally wont find them mostly in 'churches.

please take the time to listen to this man

http://www.youtube.com/user/finalcall07

He is most certainly a true christian, and has many very good videos on what it truly means to be a believer AND follower of Jesus

In saying that dont worship and follow men, but listen to the ones who know Jesus, and then seek to hear from Jesus yourself. Dont rely on some 'pastor' who will deceive you

And when he had called the people unto him with his disciples also, he said unto them,

Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.

14april2000 - June 19, 2011 01:55 AM (GMT)

Thanks for the info, and the youtube channel.

But believe me, they are indeed true christians with a doubt.

Always Now - June 19, 2011 10:01 AM (GMT)

I know you don't have to Church to be saved as the "Church" is not a building but the followers of Christ. Having said that my wife i attend church on most Sundays even though we know its not the true sabbath day.
We go just to worship, sing songs of praise and to mix with other other Christians who are really nice people, not for salvation as that is already a gift from our faith.

I just made sure the Church we went to did not the run the "Alpha course" which has taken many Churches of most denominations the world over.

finalcall07 is a blatant deceiver. I'm not even going to post a particular video of people exposing him, for there are so many out there already.

http://www.youtube.com/results?search_quer...se+teacher&aq=f

Discernment please.

"please take the time to listen to this man"

You should have said "please take the time to read the Bible". The Bible is the authority, not man. Specially "finalcall07".

"You don't need the Bible" - finalcall07

"The Bible is dead" - finalcall07

"The Bible is the word of man" - finalcall07

I have family members who say that the bible is corrupted by men, and yet they call themselves christians, and live religious. Ive told them that you can count on the KJV as being just as perfect as it can be. That men were burnt at the stake to bring us this great book. I get nowhere, they would rather believe this lie of satan. God has preserved His word, and we can count on it. These people are plain unbelievers.

trk - June 19, 2011 11:30 PM (GMT)

To get into heaven, believe in Jesus, Jesus is Almighty God and is the Messiah. Jesus died upon the cross for all of our sins, and Jesus rose from the dead. To get into heaven, believe in Jesus for His gift of entrance to heaven, and it is that easy. John 3:16.

Message me if you need help with anything.

servant of truth - June 20, 2011 04:47 AM (GMT)

I wonder how the early Christians survived without the bible??? JESUS IS THE WORD OF GOD PEOPLE your trusting in a book for salvation for goodness sake, the bible can lead you to Jesus but that's all it can do.

I dont believe there is any perfect translation Troy space proved this to EJP in relation to proving king James was a wicked man along with many of his translators/ advisers. In saying that I like the KJV the best but its not the so called 'perfect word of god' and what did EJP do? call him a Jesuit coadjutor may god help people like you kalongi to stop leading people to Hell. with doctrines like once saved always saved and saved by grace alone which are doctrines of the devil.

No trk its easy to get to hell not heaven

Luke 13:24
Strive to enter in at the strait gate: for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able.

Exact words from "finalcall07", your mentor. Can you be more deceived. You're already parroting what he says.

Anyways, where do you take the idea that Jesus is the word of God ? From the Bible ? The one you claim you don't believe in ?!

If you don't have a "perfect word of God", how do you know you are saved ? Because you're trusting Jesus ? Because you're reading a fallible book ?!

Please get your thinking in order.

Salvation is easy indeed, you want to know how easy it is ? Read John 3:16, John 3:36, John 6:47.

For the OSAS to be a doctrine of the devil, you'd have to actually PROVE from the BIBLE (which you do NOT believe it is the infallible, inspired, inherent word of the true & living God) to be true. Quite a paradox - and please don't tell me to watch a video where "finalcall07" shows OSAS is not Biblical lol.

I'd like to know how do you even know you are saved and going to heaven or that Jesus is the "word of God" if there is not a perfect word of God. Sick logic.

Matthew {4:4} But he answered and said, It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

1 Thessalonians {2:13} For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received [it] not [as] the word of men, but as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh also in you that believe.

Last time I set foot in a church was 2004. Get this--the pastor more or less said that he knew the truth about Christmas, but didn't want to preach it lest he lose people. Yet we heard him declare one Sunday that he'd "cry aloud and spare not."

Not to mention that he referred to Bush as a man of God and got mad at me when I flat-out told him that Bush is evil. You have to watch out (here in America) for pastors that think that GOP stands for God's Own Party.

Wolveshater - June 20, 2011 12:56 PM (GMT)

Obviously April has eyes wide open, and she can discern mind control from individual thought and freedom of conscience, my evidence, she reads this blog and understands the world is being run into the ground by Babylonian Vatican. I therefore seriously doubt some person, preacher, minister, pastor, what have you, is going to pull one over on our dear friend and fellow truth seeking associate, April, no, she's to bright to get snookered. The church group experience may be good for her in the long run, and any wolves hiding under the cloak of a lamb amongst that group beware ! She shall sniff them out ! She has the intellectual capacity, obviously, to read the Bible, use a concordance, and learn REAL English comprehension, and make her church for Christ in that huge heart beating in her chest his home, winning her way to his Kingdom. See ya there April. And lest ye forget girl, the wolf is always near, so be wary. ;)

golden_oil - June 20, 2011 05:05 PM (GMT)

Church-going is not the criteria for salvation although April's priority should be to seek the help of a godly pastor to obtain baptism according to Acts 2:38. Then the gift of the Holy Spirit shall be given as the scripture says,. Then understanding through the Holy Spirit will be given to interpret the Word of God. Also read John 14:15-18 and the entire Sermon on the Mount, Matthew chapters 5 to 7. Simple obedience and faith in our Lord is the key. To follow and fulfill Romans 8 in our life is another priority which is far easier to do once one has been baptised.

Hi Golden Oil, i don't think the passage in acts 2 .8 means you have to be physically baptised with water to be saved.

"Nowhere in the Bible does it state that we are justified by grace and baptism or faith and baptism or faith and anything else. On the contrary, baptism is excluded from the gospel message. Paul said that he came to preach the gospel, not to baptize: "I am thankful that I did not baptize any of you except Crispus and Gaius, so no one can say that you were baptized into my name. (Yes, I also baptized the household of Stephanas; beyond that, I don't remember if I baptized anyone else.) For Christ did not send me to baptize, but to preach the gospel"

"Acts 2:38 so closely ties repentance and baptism because it is contextually covenant language and covenant concept. It is not stating that you must be baptized in order to be saved. It is saying that baptism is the complete and total covenantal identification with Christ in His death, burial, and resurrection. It is not the covenant representation (baptism) of what Christ did that saves us, but the reality of His sacrifice which we receive by faith (Rom. 5:1; Gal. 3:8). That is why we can see a group of people in Acts 10:44-48 who are saved before they are baptized" thats right, and beware of anyone who says the bible cant be trusted as God's word. People need to go back and look at that great man Wycliffe and his lallard preachers, the great prayer of Tyndale ('Lord open the king of Englands eyes.' before being burnt, and How the KJV was translated. ANd how that infiltrating jesuits on the team of translaters were soundly converted to CHrist. Find that in Chick publications 'The Attack' or sabotage. The bible was given and preserved by the providence of God. People, the King James Bible is NOT a version it God's divinely inspired word. This book has been miraculously placed in the hands of the people, just as Tyndale's Holy Spirit filled heart earnestly desired, and is as perfect as it can be. I dont care what Troy space or any other mixed up person said.

kalongi has the best link in terms of how to get into heaven, and I suggest you read it. Salvation is not by works, not by or with water baptism. Only by believing in Jesus alone to save you, believing in Jesus as God and as the Messiah, believing that Jesus died upon the cross for all of our sins, and then Jesus rose from the dead. Believe in Jesus for His gift of eternity in heaven, and you are saved and going to heaven! That easy!

I might also add that you don't need to go to an actual church building. The early Christians had house churches.

Do not fall for the lie that Christians have to tithe. It was the Israelites that had to tithe, and it was not money--but agriculture, and this went to the Levites, who didn't have their own land.

Churches that want tithes--I think they want/need the money to pay for the mortgage, utilities, and upkeep of the church building. As my husband points out, tithes are a way of making sure there's an income for that kind of thing.

With house churches, people can meet at someone's house, maybe bring food for a potluck supper afterwards...have dinner and fellowship. Sure, we Christians should assemble every so often, but it doesn't have to be once a week, and it doesn't have to be in a church building.

1. I dont have a problem with the bible it contains Gods word(s) and words of men who knew god so i've got no problem there. I am glad for it. I can quote it without having to believe its the word of god and will continue to do so.

2. Did anyone see the video craig posted on the KJV and how its writing was authorized for political reasons? because the other ones weren't to his liking.
so I dont believe its as accurate as the original transcripts, but its a overalls great translation.

kalongi you parrot the same things as mainstream churchs so I will 'parrot' something I believe to be true?

you ask: I'd like to know how do you even know you are saved and going to heaven or that Jesus is the "word of God" if there is not a perfect word of God. Sick logic.

You can feel it in your heart the peace of God, outwardly you Do his commandments live a righteous/sinless life, that's how you know your saved

1 Corinthians 15:34
Awake to righteousness, and sin not; for some have not the knowledge of God: I speak this to your shame.

in other words the word of God is inside you not sitting on your bookshelf

I was in the 'KJV is the word of god' camp and didn't like what finalcall said at first but I realized he was right so i changed, praise God.

I will ask again people how did the early Christians survive from the rising of Christ all the way to 1776 when the quote 'word of god' was published by men??

answer: they had the spirit of God leading them for generations upon generations

John 16:13
Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will shew you things to come.

Romans 8:14
For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.

Be careful if you go to "church". The only reason i go to "churches" is to tell to others to repent, and to denounce their doctrines and leaders. We, us christians must congregate, but i recommend that you do it in your home and brother's houses. In non part of the "New Testament" is writen that the christian's congregations was subordinated to a Goberning Body. Remember, the head of the congregation is Christ, not a group of mens. If you go to church, be aware of don't obey the rule stablished by the Council of Nicea.

(Postdata: i am preparing my inform regarding the false and satanic doctrines of the "Jehovah's Witnesses" Organization. I apologize to had defended that organization in the past. I tell you, i will convert in the 2nd worst nightmare of that Corporation.)

What native language do you speak? The KJV has been translated in over 100 different languages. Just get the translated version for your language I suggest.

My sister-in-law gave me a 400th anniversary edition of the King James. This is where the s's oftentimes look like f's. But I can still read it!

1I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and will watch to see what he will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reproved.

2And the LORD answered me, and said, Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it.

3For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry.

4Behold, his soul which is lifted up is not upright in him: but the just shall live by his faith.

5Yea also, because he transgresseth by wine, he is a proud man, neither keepeth at home, who enlargeth his desire as hell, and is as death, and cannot be satisfied, but gathereth unto him all nations, and heapeth unto him all people:

6Shall not all these take up a parable against him, and a taunting proverb against him, and say, Woe to him that increaseth that which is not his! how long? and to him that ladeth himself with thick clay!

7Shall they not rise up suddenly that shall bite thee, and awake that shall vex thee, and thou shalt be for booties unto them?

8Because thou hast spoiled many nations, all the remnant of the people shall spoil thee; because of men's blood, and for the violence of the land, of the city, and of all that dwell therein.

The people will revolt.

View Full Version: Are Catholics Christians?

Title: Are Catholics Christians?

Wolveshater - May 28, 2011 03:25 AM (GMT)

Are Catholics Christians?
http://www.bereanbeacon.org/ACC.pdf

By Richard Bennett

The Catholic Church presupposes itself to be Christian. Nothing could be further from the truth; yet, the Catholic Church has been ardently promoting that image, particularly since the close of Vatican Council II in 1965. A primary, non-negotiable goal of Vatican Council II was to lay the groundwork and to establish the rules and parameters for a multifaceted, ecumenical outreach. Evangelical Christians, now called “separated brethren,” rather than “heretics,”1 are the primary target of Catholic ecumenism. The goal is to draw them into the Roman Catholic fold.2 Thus, in the 1994 Catechism of the Catholic Church, the word “Christian” occurs more than 100 times in these official teachings. Buzzwords such as “dialogue,” “ecumenism,” and “social justice” are being used under the guise of promoting Christianity to advance the Roman Catholic agenda.

Assurances to Evangelicals Negated
Evangelicals are assured that Catholics who believe in the incarnation, death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus Christ are true Christians, even though they misunderstand some of the “technicalities” regarding salvation. Such reasoning is negated by the fact that Catholicism differs from biblical faith—not only on minor details, but more importantly on what is essential to salvation. The most dangerous aspect of Catholic Church doctrine is that it appears to be based on the great, indispensable truths of God’s revelation.3 In reality, however, the blatant fact is that Catholic doctrine denies essential, biblical doctrines by what it affixes to biblical truths. For example, while Catholic doctrine holds that in the Godhead there are three distinct Persons worthy of the same worship, it adds divine adoration for Mary by addressing her in prayer as “the All Holy One.” The exact words of the official statement are, “By asking Mary to pray for us, we acknowledge ourselves to be poor sinners and we address ourselves to the 'Mother of Mercy,' the All Holy One."4 Another example is the fact that the Catholic Church demands that the worship, which is due to the true God, is to be given also to their Communion element. Thus, she officially declares,

1 The anathemas or curses against Evangelicals as heretics still remain in Roman Catholic law for the Council of Trent (1545 – 1563) has never been revoked. Since the demise of the Holy Roman Empire, the Papacy has had no military and civil power by which to enforce these anathemas as it did during the 600 plus years of the Inquisition. Thus the Papacy has turned to ecumenism, "dialogue" and promoting "social justice" as current methods for drawing Evangelical Christians.

2 Vatican Council II Documents, "Reflections and Suggestions Concerning Ecumenical Dialogue," Vol. I, Sect. II
This crucial Vatican document states, "…ecumenical dialogue is not limited to an academic or purely conceptual level, but striving for a more complete communion between the Christian communities…it serves to transform modes of thought and behavior and the daily life of those communities. In this way, it aims at preparing the way for their unity of faith in the bosom of a Church one and visible: thus 'little by little', as the obstacles to perfect ecclesial communion are overcome, all Christians will be gathered, in a common celebration of the Eucharist, into that unity of the one and only Church which Christ bestowed on his Church from the beginning. This unity, we believe, dwells in the Catholic Church as something she can never lose…"
3 For example she holds to the existence of a self-existent and eternal God, the Creator of the universe, of man, and of all things. She teaches the biblical doctrine of the Trinity. She teaches Adam's sin resulting in the shared guilt and consequences of his sin. She accepts the doctrine of man's redemption by Jesus Christ, teaching that He became incarnate and endured the death of the cross; that He arose from the dead, ascended to heaven, and will return again.

4 Catechism of the Catholic Church, Liguori Publications, 1994 Paragraph 2677 Hereafter referred to as Catechism.

5 Vatican Council II Documents, "Eucharisticum Mysterium," Vol. I, Para 3 (Emphasis not in original.)
6 Ephesians 2:8, 9
7 Catechism Paragraph 1129
8 John 10:35
9 John 17:17
10 Proverbs 30:6
11 II Timothy 3:16-17
12 Mark 7:13

"There should be no doubt in anyone's mind 'that all the faithful ought to show to this most holy sacrament the worship which is due to the true God, as has always been the custom of the Catholic Church. Nor is it to be adored any the less because it was instituted by Christ to be eaten.'"5

These two official teachings of the Church of Rome show that the divine worship due to God alone is being given to Mary and to the communion element.

The essential doctrine of man's redemption by Jesus Christ is totally different in Papal Rome from what it is in the Bible. The Scripture declares that sinners dead in trespasses and sins are "by grace" "saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: It is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any man should boast."6 This Scripture shows that God directly saves sinners by His grace alone through faith alone. However, the Catholic Church introduces the necessity of her sacraments and consequently states, "The Church affirms that for believers the sacraments of the New Covenant are necessary for salvation. 'Sacramental grace' is the grace of the Holy Spirit, given by Christ and proper to each sacrament."7

The sacraments that are declared to be indispensable negate the biblical doctrine of man's redemption. With these explicit examples of the Catholic Church's negation of essential biblical truths, the Papacy's official doctrine and teaching on all the major topics of biblical truth needs to be carefully examined.

The Basis of Truth

The first topic to address is, "What is the basis of truth?" In other words, what is the norm by which we can know truth? The absolute standard set by the Lord Jesus Christ is the fact that "the scripture cannot be broken."8 The Lord also declared the truth of God's Word by saying, "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth."9 From this statement we understand that God's Word not only contains the truth, but rather, it is truth itself. The Holy Scripture is the source of the believer's standard of truth. Since Scripture alone is inspired, it alone is the ultimate authority, and it alone is the final judge of all human tradition and reasoning. Accordingly, the commandment of the Lord states, "Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar."10 Thus, in His written Word, the absolute authority of the Lord God is totally sufficient for all the believer's needs, as outlined by the Apostle Paul when he wrote, "All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."11 The Lord rebuked the Pharisees because they placed their human tradition on the same level as the written Word of God. Thus, the Pharisees corrupted the people's understanding by confusing them in regards to God's Word as the very basis of truth. Jesus declared to them, "[You are] making the word of God of none effect through your tradition, which ye have delivered."

18 Catechism Paragraph 891
In spite of this clear standard of truth, the Catholic Church declares her own standard of truth. She begins her reasoning with the following words,

“Sacred Tradition and Sacred Scripture, then, are bound closely together and communicate one with the other” “And [Holy] Tradition transmits in its entirety the Word of God, which has been entrusted to the apostles by Christ the Lord and the Holy Spirit.”13
The fact is that no “tradition” transmits in its entirety the Word of God. This task is solely that of the Holy Spirit. First, in an exclusive sense, the Scriptures are the composition of the Holy Spirit; as stated by the Apostle Peter, “holy men of God spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost.”14 The Holy Spirit is fully fitted for this work because He is “the Spirit of truth.”15 He has perfect knowledge of the truth because He is God, one with the Father and the Son. The Holy Spirit reveals the truth of the written Word to believers. For this reason the Lord Christ Jesus said, “He shall take of mine, and shall shew it unto you.”16 Thus, the Holy Spirit perfectly transmits the Word of God in its proper fullness.

Having equated her “Sacred Tradition” with Sacred Scripture, and stating that her tradition transmits the Word of God in its entirety, the Catholic Church reaches its conclusion with the following words,

“As a result the [Catholic] Church, to whom the transmission and interpretation of Revelation is entrusted, ‘does not derive her certainty about all revealed truths from the holy Scriptures alone. Both Scripture and Tradition must be accepted and honored with equal sentiments of devotion and reverence.”17

This statement is a formal denial of the sufficiency of Scripture and a repudiation of its unique authority. For a church, claiming to be Christian, to affirm her equal love for tradition as she does Scripture is to make Scripture of no unique value. It is like a husband who declares that he loves his wife and at the same time states that he also loves equally the woman across the street. Such love would be adulterous; so also are Papal Rome’s “equal sentiments of devotion and reverence.” Such a declaration is tantamount to a rejection of Scripture and unfaithfulness to the God of Scripture.

Catholicism, however, does have a standard for truth that is taken to be absolute. It is not the unqualified authority of God in His written Word; rather, it is the authority of a man, the Pope of Rome. For Catholics, the ultimate authority lies in the decisions and decrees of the reigning Pope. This is seen in their official teaching which states,

“The Supreme Pontiff, in virtue of his office, possesses infallible teaching authority when, as supreme pastor and teacher of all the faithful...he proclaims with a definitive act that a doctrine of faith or morals is to be held as such.”18

Thus, in practice, the Catholic Church's basis for doctrine is her Pope and what he states to be truth. In other words, this is claimed truth by decree. How ludicrous the claim is when we realize that some popes were declared to be heretics and thus condemned by Church councils.19

19 For example Pope Honorious was condemned as a heretic by the Sixth Ecumenical Council (680-681 A.D.). He was also condemned as a heretic by Pope Leo II, as well as by every other pope until the eleventh century. It was not until 1870 at Vatican Council I that the Catholic Church for the first time declared that the Pope is infallible.

Salvation by Grace Alone Denied by Catholic Sacramental System
That salvation is by grace alone must be clearly understood. Unredeemed sinners, of whom all are "dead in trespasses and sins,"20 can only be saved by grace alone, through faith alone, because salvation is "the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast."21 It is God who graciously saves by His unmerited free gift. In total contrast to this, salvation in the Catholic Church is said to come about by "grace" that is merely a "help" with the intention that people will respond. Thus, the Catholic Church officially states, "Grace is the help God gives us to respond to our vocation of becoming his adopted sons. It introduces us into the intimacy of the Trinitarian life."22 In this view, human beings are presumed to be good enough to respond to the help that God gives to them. According to the Catholic Church, grace is not a manifestation of God's sovereign action in salvation but merely a "help" given to humans that they may respond, should they decide to believe. The Catholic teaching contradicts the very concept of grace. As the Scripture states, "and if by grace, then is it [salvation] no more of works: otherwise grace is no more grace."23 God's sovereign action is what is at stake and not uncertain, human response.
The Catholic concept of "grace" denies God's sovereign grace. Therefore, the Papacy needed to construct a mechanism by which Catholics can profess that they have received grace. The primary tools of their invention are called the sacraments. Accordingly, the Catholic Church states,

"The Church affirms that for believers the sacraments of the New Covenant are necessary for salvation. 'Sacramental grace' is the grace of the Holy Spirit, given by Christ and proper to each sacrament."24

This teaching is appalling. In the Bible, salvation is given to an individual by the absolute power of God's grace alone – because in God alone is the power to deliver a man spiritually “dead in trespasses and sins” to being spiritually alive in Christ. However, the Catholic Church adamantly disagrees with the Bible on this primary issue, for it officially claims “man has only been wounded by sin.”25 Thus, her Catechism describes God’s grace as a “help” accessible through her sacraments. These sacraments are in turn totally under the control of the Catholic priesthood.

We absolutely praise the Lord God that from Scripture we know His grace is totally His free gift, “wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved.”26 In salvation, we are accepted not in any institution, or by partaking of any sacrament, but in the Person of the Lord Jesus Christ alone.

19 For example Pope Honorious was condemned as a heretic by the Sixth Ecumenical Council (680-681 A.D.). He was also condemned as a heretic by Pope Leo II, as well as by every other pope until the eleventh century. For centuries, the horrendous tortures of the Papacy’s Inquisition were used throughout Europe and Britain to wipe out all believers whose faith was in Christ alone. By the end of the eighteenth century, the Papacy no longer had the military and civil power to enforce her sinister doctrine. But by the mid-twentieth century, the Papacy’s new tools had been formed against those whose faith is in Christ alone: Ecumenism, dialogue and “social justice” were formally unveiled at Vatican Council II. The method has changed; but goal has not.

Papal Substitute for Christ Alone as Object of Faith
The object of faith is clearly seen in Scripture as the person of Christ Jesus Himself. Consequently, it is stated, “Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house."27 This faith is God-given faith, as declared by the Apostle Peter, "Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ."28 This God-given faith comes by hearing the Word of God as is stated, "So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."29 The topic of faith is so clear in Scripture that one would doubt that it could be twisted by any church. The Catholic Church, nonetheless, completely changes the concept of faith. Regarding faith, she focuses attention on herself as "the Church," as the one that first believes. Thus she teaches, "It is the Church that believes first, and so bears, nourishes and sustains my faith."30 Then she has the audacity to declare that faith comes through the Church because the Church is our Mother. As a result she officially teaches, "Salvation comes from God alone; but because we receive the life of faith through the Church, she is our mother…"31 In the Catholic Church the result is that a person believes in Mother Church and not on the Lord Jesus Christ. Her official words stating this are the following,

"'Believing' is an ecclesial act. The Church's faith precedes, engenders, supports and nourishes our faith. The Church is the mother of all believers. 'No one can have God as Father who does not have the Church as Mother.'"32

Therefore, the position for Catholics is that they are compelled to submit to holy Mother Church and accept what she teaches. The Catholic Church basically attempts to replace Jesus Christ as the object of saving faith with a substitute: faith in Mother Church. What this change does is to enslave an individual to the Roman Catholic Church rather than to make him free in Jesus Christ. To maintain the Catholic Church as the object of faith, the Papacy curses all who believe on Christ by faith alone. Their official words are, "If anyone says that by the sacraments of the New Law grace is not conferred ex opere operato [from the work worked], but that faith alone in the divine promise is sufficient to obtain grace, let him be anathema [cursed]."33

Christ's Sufficient Finished Sacrifice

The unique oneness of Christ's sacrifice is the fact that it was one offering—once made. The concept "once" is deemed so important that it is asserted seven times by the Holy Spirit in the New Testament. The perfection of Christ's sacrifice is contrasted with the repeated daily sacrifices of the Old Testament. The truth of the excellence of Christ's sacrifice is highlighted by the word "once." For example, the Apostle Paul teaches, "for in that he died, he died unto sin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God."34 The Apostle Peter likewise declares, "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God."35 The same truth is taught five times in the book of Hebrews with the conclusion, "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."36 The majestic truth is found in the Lord's declaration from the cross, "It is finished."37

In total contrast, the Catholic Church declares that Christ's sacrifice, which was offered on the cross, is contained and offered in her Mass. Her official words are the following, "In this divine sacrifice which is celebrated in the Mass, the same Christ who offered himself once in a bloody manner on the altar of the cross is contained and is offered in an unbloody manner."38 Quite unbelievably she states an even worse conclusion. She declares that the sacrifice of Christ is also a sacrifice of the Church offering herself with Him. The official words are, "The Church, which is the Body of Christ, participates in the offering of her Head. With him, she herself is offered whole and entire."39 It is utterly blasphemous for a church to teach its members to offer themselves with Christ's sacrifice. The doctrine of participating in Christ's sacrifice is entirely perverse and immoral. This proposition is an utter lie as it denies the repeated statements of God's truth in Scripture. The work of redemption is "by Himself,"40 "without the deeds of the law,"41 "not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to His mercy

He saved us."42 To teach people such a proposition is a dreadful abomination before the Lord God!

The Nature of God as the Only All Holy One
The Bible clearly teaches that God alone is infinite, eternal, and unchangeable in His Being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness, and truth. Most important is the fact that He is the All Holy One. His holiness is the divine attribute that covers all attributes so that His righteousness is holy, His truth is holy, and His justice is holy. He is each of His attributes, and the overall attribute of holiness is that which separates Him from all beings. His holiness is distinctive and matchless. This is the reason why we need to be saved by Him, the All Holy God. Thus, we read in Scripture, "there is none holy as the Lord."43 Again, the Word of the Lord proclaims, "who shall not fear thee O Lord and glorify Thy name for thou only art holy and all nations shall come and worship before thee."44 The Lord God is utterly holy in the words of Scripture, "Holy, Holy, Holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory."45 In addition to declaring the holiness of God, the official teaching of the Catholic Church declares Mary to be "the All Holy One." The capital letters are there in print, and there is no disclaimer or footnote to explain differently what is said. The following is stated, "By asking Mary to pray for us, we acknowledge ourselves to be poor sinners and we address ourselves to the 'Mother of 46 Catechism Paragraph 2677 Mercy,' the All Holy One."46 Furthermore, Catholic teaching also officially states, "From the Church he [the Catholic] learns the example of holiness and recognizes its model and source in the all-holy Virgin Mary…"47 This blasphemous teaching is an attempted theft of the very essence of the divine glory reserved unto God alone. It comes as a shock to see that in this doctrine alone the Papacy has shown its total disregard for the Godhead. We know that Lord God alone is the All Holy One and that He is protective of His glory, opposing all that are hostile to it, "I am the Lord: that is my name: and my glory will I not give to another."48

Idolatry
The Scriptures are absolutely clear in declaring that we are neither to make a graven image nor show any veneration to such images, "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything...Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them."49 Then Scripture explains how this is to be understood, "and he [God] declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even Ten Commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone. Take ye therefore good heed unto yourselves; for ye saw no manner of similitude on the day that the LORD spake...Lest ye corrupt yourselves, and make you a graven image, the similitude of any figure....”50 Hence, there is to be no similitude (or likeness) of God made by mankind. That which is forbidden in Scripture is the making of any likeness of Father, Son, or Holy Spirit. The Catholic Church, however, rationalizes that one can indeed practice idolatry. Paragraph 2132 of the 1994 Catechism states, “The Christian veneration of images is not contrary to the first commandment which proscribes idols. Indeed, the honor rendered to an image passes to its prototype, and whoever venerates an image venerates the person portrayed in it.” The reason given is that one venerates the person portrayed by the image and not the image itself. Yet, this is exactly what the Bible forbids and why God’s second commandment had forbidden Aaron from making the golden calf.51 Nor is the second reason given by Papal Rome for justifying the practice of idolatry any more biblical. Rather, they cite an 8th century council, “Basing itself on the mystery of the incarnate Word, the seventh ecumenical council at Nicaea (787) justified…the veneration of icons—of Christ, but also of the Mother of God, the angels, and all the saints. By becoming incarnate, the Son of God introduced a new ‘economy’ of images.”52

When the seventh ecumenical council at Nicaea decided that the incarnation of Jesus Christ introduced a new “economy” of images, the unstated logic of their decision required them to maintain that God changed His mind regarding the Second Commandment. This reasoning is blasphemous. God does not change His mind. Jesus Christ and the Apostles were equally forceful in condemning idolatry, as were the commandments in the Old Testament. Nevertheless, the Catholic Church claims that a “tradition comes from the Holy Spirit” which justifies the making of graven images and these are to be publicly displayed. In its Catechism, Paragraph 1161 states,

“Following the divinely inspired teaching of our holy Fathers and the tradition of the Catholic Church (for we know that this tradition comes from the Holy Spirit who dwells in 53 Hebrews 1:3
54 Colossians 2:9

55 Exodus 20:4-6, Deuteronomy 4:13, 15-16, Habakkuk. 2:18-20, Acts 17:29-30. Thus the Holy Spirit commands in both Old and New Testaments, “little children, keep yourselves from idols” I John 5:21
56 Ephesians 2:1

her) we rightly define with full certainty and correctness that, like the figure of the precious and life-giving cross, venerable and holy images of our Lord and God and Savior, Jesus Christ, our inviolate Lady, the holy Mother of God, and the venerated angels, all the saints and the just, whether painted or made of mosaic or another suitable material, are to be exhibited in the holy churches of God, on sacred vessels and vestments, walls and panels, in houses and on streets.”
This is idolatry•plain, simple, and condemned by the Lord God.

The Holy Spirit is forthrightly blasphemed in their claim that He established tradition to justify the use of images. Rather, the Bible makes abundantly clear that God hates idolatry and forbids a representation in art of what is divine (Exodus. 20:4-6). Making images to represent God corrupts those who use them (Deuteronomy 4:13, 15-16). Images teach lies about God (Habakkuk. 2:18-20). God cannot be represented in art and all who practice idolatry are commanded to repent (Acts 17:29-30). The Holy Spirit orders in the New Testament as He did the Old, “Little children, keep yourselves from idols. Amen” (I John. 5:21). Some of the evil fruits of bringing into the worship of Holy God the idolatry that He hates are the many pagan superstitions and traditions of Roman Catholicism. But the worst fruit of the idolatry that Roman Catholicism offers under the guise of being Christian is its false gospel.

The topic of idolatry is of utmost importance as many Bible-believing churches in the present day attempt to justify pictures and videos of Christ. They argue that both we, and those who cannot read, can come to a fuller understanding of the person of Christ from these images. Yet, the Bible clearly states that such images lie. Jesus Christ is the only one with two distinct natures – both divine and human – in one body. Therefore, to attempt to make any kind of an image of Jesus Christ, graven or two dimensional or moving, still falls under the Second Commandment. No image can portray Christ’s divinity, for He “is the brightness of his [God’s] glory and the express image of his person,”53 “in whom dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily.”54

If we are to be biblical, we do not have any pictorial representation or video showing the persons of Father, Son, or Holy Spirit. The punishment for idolatry is severe, as both the Old Testament and New Testament make clear.55 The temptation to visualize Christ, the Father, or the Holy Spirit must be repented of, for God is Holy and the truth of Bible is sufficient for all our knowledge of things divine.

Conclusion

As has been shown above, the Roman Catholic Church most certainly is not Christian. Rather, it is an apostate church. The Bible is the great battering ram against the apostasy of the Catholic Church and against her false gospel. The Bible states that by nature, we are all born “dead in trespasses and sins,”56 and in practice, we rebel against the All Holy God. Therefore, we justly fall under the curse of the Law. Yet, the love of the heavenly Father, through the Gospel of grace, rescues His own from His fiery wrath. By means of the conviction of sin, placed on the human heart by the Holy Spirit, He by His grace alone turns us to Himself in faith alone for the salvation that He alone gives. This salvation is based on Christ’s death and resurrection for His own. As a result we believe on Jesus Christ the Lord alone, “for by grace are you saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: not of works, lest any man should boast.”57 Such grace and love engages our hearts in an ever deepening gratitude so that we proclaim with our whole heart, “For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things: to whom be glory for ever. Amen.”58♦

I don't know if any of you remember this film series from 1977, it realy moved at the time though i fell away later. Its reckoned to be best and most accurate and moving film about Jesus ever made.
You may find some small innacuracies but the words of Jesus shine through actor Robert Powell.
Its over 6 hours long and broken into 4 films. Very cheap to buy now.
Makes a change from satanic movies to give to friends/family though of course does not replace the Bible.

Preaching the Gospel in today's society

by Russell Grigg, M.Sc. (Hons)
http://creation.com/preaching-the-gospel-in-todays-society

Today's society seems to be becoming more and more impervious to the Gospel. So how can we present the Gospel to maximum effect? The book of Acts provides an answer.

It is reasonable for us to consider the book of Acts as having two main purposes that benefit us today. These are:

1. For our edification as Christians, as we are given an account of the formation of the early Church and related events.

2. For our example as preachers, Christian workers, and missionaries, as we are shown the way in which the Apostles went about the task of obeying the Great Commission.

If we examine Acts in this light—as our example of how we should go about preaching the Gospel in a cross-cultural situation or in our own culture (which is becoming more and more multi-cultural) —we see some surprising things.

The love of God

First, the love of God is not mentioned by any preacher in Acts in any sermon. In fact, as a concordance will show, the word 'love' does not occur even once in the book of Acts in any context. Instead, Paul and the other preachers reiterate the themes of the death and resurrection of Jesus, God's judgment, and the need for personal repentance and belief in Christ. Paul's expositions on the love of God, including the great theme in Romans 5:8 that God loved us while we were still sinners, were all written to Christians, and were not, it seems, preached to non-Christians.

This does not mean, however, that God's love cannot be seen in action in Acts.1 Saul's (Paul's) conversion, recounted three times for us in Acts (Acts 9:1–20, 22:1–16, 26:9–18), is attributed by Paul in his letter to Timothy as being due to the grace, love, mercy, and longsuffering of God, and Paul says that his conversion was 'a pattern to them which should hereafter believe on Him'(I Timothy 1:12–16). In Romans 2:4, Paul says that it is the goodness of God that leads to repentance, and the term 'goodness' here encompasses not only God's holiness, righteousness and truth, but also His love, benevolence, mercy and grace.2

Two starting points

The second surprising thing about the way Paul preached the Gospel, as recorded in Acts, is that he had two entirely different starting points, depending on his audience.

1. When Paul preached to the Jews, he 'reasoned with them from the Scriptures, explaining and proving that it was necessary for the Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead'. The focal point of his message was 'this Jesus whom I preach unto you is Christ' [i.e. the Messiah] (Acts 17:2–3).

2. When Paul preached to the Gentiles, for example the Lycaonians (Acts 14:6, l5) and the Greeks (Acts 17:22–31), he began with Creation and God's role as Creator, and he appealed to what can be seen in nature as the evidence for this.

Why the difference between Paul's approach to the Jews and his approach to the non-Jews? The reason is the key to our understanding of why preaching about the lost state of man, or even about the cross, often has little impact in society today, whether in the West or in missionary situations.

Judaism had a creation basis—Genesis. From the Old Testament Scriptures the Jews believed in the one true God and knew Him as Creator, Lawgiver, and Judge. The Jews already knew and believed the scriptural record of Creation and the Fall: they knew about sin and that the penalty for sin is death. They needed only to be shown from the Scriptures and from the Resurrection that Jesus was the promised Messiah.

Greeks … Evolutionists

On the other hand, the Gentiles, and the Greeks in particular, were evolutionary in their thinking. Professor Fairfield Osborn, of Columbia University and the American Museum of Natural History, has said that Empedocles, who lived in the fifth Century BC, 'may justly be called the father of the evolution idea'.3 Aristotle, 384–322 BC, in his Physics, 'refers to Empedocles as having first shown the possibility of the origin of the fittest forms of life through chance rather than through Design'.4 And Aristotle himself 'taught that there was a continuous gradation of living forms from the lowest to the highest, culminating in man, and that this evolutionary sequence came about through an internal perfecting tendency.'5

When Paul was on Mars Hill, he was dealing with 'certain philosophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoics' (Acts 17:18). The Epicureans followed Epicurus (342–270 BC), who denied that there was any purposive form in nature and taught that everything on the earth had evolved directly from the earth material itself. It is not surprising then that the Epicureans believed that pleasure, and particularly sensuous pleasure, was the chief good of existence. The Stoics, on the other hand, stressed a simple life-style, but were completely pantheistic. Thus Greek society was both evolutionary in its thinking and idolatrous in its practice.

These Gentiles did not have the Jewish Scriptures. Paul therefore had to reach them in terms of something they did have—the foundational knowledge of God as Creator, almost obliterated by their philosophies and idolatries, but still there and witnessed to by nature and their consciences (Romans 1:20, 2:15). And so, in his address to the men on Mars Hill (Acts 17:22–31), Paul began with the power of God in creation, and moved onto the goodness of God in His providence. He then spoke against their idols, and he urged them to repent in view of the fact that God was ruler and judge and there was a coming day of judgment. It was only after this that he mentioned the Resurrection. Presumably, if he had not been interrupted, he would have gone on to say that this Resurrection occurred after Christ's death on the cross, and he would have expounded God's grace in the provision of a risen Saviour. But note the order in which Paul developed his argument.

Did Paul fail?

Some expositors say that Paul failed in his approach at Athens, because he did not found a church there. But there were at least six converts from his sermon on Mars Hill and maybe several more, as we read, 'Howbeit certain men clave unto him, and believed: among the which was Dionysius the Areopagite, and a woman named Damaris, and others with them' (Acts 17:34). In due course a church was begun at Athens, and the conversion of Dionysius, who was a member of the Areopagus or Supreme Court, was so genuine that he became the leader of it. Eusebius, Bishop of Caesarea, refers to Dionysius as 'the first Bishop of the Church of Athens'.6 Hardly a failure on Paul's part, or, for that matter, on the part of the Holy Spirit!

The world today

Today the world is very much like that of the Greeks of Paul's day. In the West, evolution is the predominant belief system and, as a result of this denial of the one true God and rejection of His rules for holy living, the epicurean ideal of hedonism (pleasure seeking) has become the predominant lifestyle. At the same time many people are turning to the Hindu philosophies of the New Age movement or to the occult to fill the spiritual vacuum in their lives caused by their own atheism.

Similarly, most of the countries in which missionary societies work have religions which deny the existence of one holy transcendent Creator and are evolutionary in their beliefs about origins; for example they begin with a belief in pre-existing matter or creatures of some kind. These religions usually involve the placating of evil spirits, or the earning of merit by worship, as in Buddhism, Shintoism, Hinduism, animism, etc., as the Greeks did.

The lesson for preachers and Christian missionaries is clear. God has given us in the book of Acts a pattern of a way to effectively reach people today, which we can follow in our own preaching. Demonstrated to us is the way in which the Apostle Paul adapted his approach and adjusted his method of preaching to best suit the culture of his hearers, both Jews and Gentiles—to begin where they were at. We also see the way in which he used creation evangelism to best penetrate the thinking of the Greeks. Creation evangelism is a tool which works. Our society today, in its evolutionary thinking, ignorance of the one true living God, and preoccupation with sex, is much more like that of the Greeks than that of the Jews. Preachers today can therefore follow this pattern to their own advantage and the advantage of their hearers.

What If There Is No God?

http://www.toughquestionsanswered.org/2008...here-is-no-god/

I think many people toy with some form of atheism at some point in their lives. They wonder if all they were taught growing up is really true. They don't see God, they don't hear from him, and they don't touch him or smell him, so maybe he doesn't really exist.

Wondering whether God exists, it seems to me, is perfectly rational and reasonable. Most of us struggle with doubts, but we learn how to deal with those doubts, maybe by finding good answers to our questions, or even having an experience with God that reassures us.

Some of us, though, willingly turn those doubts into a strong and hardened form of atheism. Granted, hardened atheists are a tiny percentage of the population (most surveys I've seen say it's less than 5%), but there is still a larger percentage who are toying with the idea of no God. It is to those people who are toying with atheism that I would like to speak.

What if there really is no God? What does that really mean? I'm betting that many of us haven't thought this through. If there is no God, then there are real consequences for that viewpoint, and many hardened atheists who have rigorously examined their convictions would agree with me. Here goes.

First, free will does not exist. You are the consequence of random, natural processes, and therefore everything you say and do is determined at the atomic level. You are not free to do anything. Once science gets there, we will be able to predict everything you will say and do just by understanding the chemicals that make up your body and the surrounding environment.

Second, there is no absolute right and wrong. Morality is a human invention which changes with time, place, and people. What's wrong today may be right tomorrow. Transcendent moral laws are illusory because right and wrong are constantly changing. We, as individuals, and as groups of individuals, decide what we call right and wrong. When we die, our children will decide, and so on. Slavery used to be right, but now it's wrong. Who knows, maybe it'll go back to being right again some day, if there is no God.

Third, there is no ultimate justice. Those who commit heinous crimes in this life are never punished for those crimes in the next life, because there is no next life! This is it. Not to mention the fact that without a foundation for moral law, as seen above, how can anything be declared unjust? You have to know what is just before you can know what is unjust, but what is just is constantly changing. If there is no God, then there is no ultimate justice for Hitler, Stalin, or Mao. Maybe they were just doing the best they could given the time and place they lived. Who is to say?

Fourth, as already mentioned, there is no life after death. You will never see your deceased loved ones again. Once you die, you will decompose into a pile of inanimate chemicals and never be conscious again. As they say in the world of sports, it's one and done.

Fifth, there is no ultimate meaning to life. Your life has no cosmic purpose. You aren't here to fulfill any kind of mission. The only meaning you can have in your life is the meaning you subjectively give yourself. That meaning, however, is just a psychological comfort, a pleasant illusion to keep you going. It really doesn't matter if you live or die. Everything you accomplish in this life will eventually be destroyed and forgotten.

Sixth, there is no purpose to human history. All of the things that we as humans have achieved will eventually be lost when our species dies out. History is not headed in any particular direction. There is no plan for the human race. Eventually, we will wipe ourselves out or some comet will smash into the earth. Either way, human history is a dead end.

Still toying with atheism?

The Christians were mistaken about Jesus' resurrection

http://carm.org/apologetics/evidence-and-a...us-resurrection

Sometimes critics of Christianity say that Jesus' disciples were mistaken about His resurrection. They say that because no one can rise from the dead, then the disciples were wrong when they said that Jesus rose from the dead. First of all, they are assuming something that may not be true. After all, if there is a God, then why can't a resurrection happen? But, when I ask them to explain how it was possible to be mistaken about something like a person rising from the dead according to the gospel accounts, I don't get any answers except, "Well, they were wrong."

It is true that the disciples made mistakes. After all, they were only human. But, how could they be mistaken about something as serious and as monumental as Jesus rising from the dead? Is it likely that they simply goofed, that somehow after seeing Jesus die on the cross, and after fleeing and going into hiding, that the figure that appeared before them in the closed room that looked like Jesus and sounded like Jesus and had holes in His hands and feet really wasn't Jesus? Were the women who saw the empty tomb also mistaken when they looked into it and saw that the body wasn't there? Was the apostle John mistaken when he said that Jesus appeared before Thomas and said, "Reach here your finger, and see My hands; and reach here your hand, and put it into My side; and be not unbelieving, but believing," (John 20:27).Was it Jesus or not? If not, then who was it? Did the disciples make up the story? Did the apostle John lie when he wrote the account? If so, where are the records refuting this preposterous notion? There aren't any.

Is it possible that all the disciples were mistaken about the same thing at the same time especially when they were believing that Jesus had died and was still dead? What would cause them all to switch from believing that when you're dead you're dead to believing that Jesus died and rose from the dead? Was Paul the apostle also mistaken when he was riding along the road to Damascus and claims to have encountered Jesus? Remember, Paul was a persecutor the Christians. He had authority to arrest the Christians and imprison them. He was a devout Jew and quite powerful in the Jewish religious system. How is it that he changed his mind so drastically and claims to have seen the risen Jesus (1 Cor. 9:1)? Was he also simply mistaken? If so, how? What did he see on the road to Damascas that changed his life if not something incredible?

Is all of Christianity a big "oops"? Might we meet the disciples in the afterlife and have them say to us, "Uh, remember that resurrection thing about Jesus we wrote about? Well, we goofed. It really didn't happen. We mistook the empty tomb — never did find His body — the prophecies of the Old Testament about Him rising (Psalm 16:10), the prophecy of Jesus saying He'd rise (John 2:19-21), the accounts of the women saying that they had seen Him risen, the appearances of a man who looked like Jesus and who had holes in his hands and feet and appeared to us in closed rooms, the conversion of Paul — that was weird — oh, and all those miracles He did and those that we then did afterwards, too, well, that was all a big mistake. Also, it was a big mistake going around Israel and all of the Mediterranean proclaiming Jesus had risen from the dead while we suffered persecution and death…yeah, it was all a big mistake. Hope there are no hard feelings."

Is it rational to think that the disciples were simply mistaken about something as serious as stating that Jesus had risen from the dead? How do you mistake someone rising from the dead? What would have to happen for numerous people to change their minds about someone coming back to life? Or is it more rational to simply conclude that the disciples weren't mistaken and that Jesus actually did rise from the dead?

Evidence for the Resurrection of Christ in a Nutshell

by C Michael Patton | April 20th, 2011 | Comments 32 Comments
http://www.reclaimingthemind.org/blog/2011...-in-a-nutshell/

Just as we test the historicity of any event, not through emotional conviction, but with historical evidence, I would like to devote some time to laying out a brief historical case for the Resurrection of Christ, the central issue of the Christian faith. If Christ rose from the grave, it is all true and we just have to work out the details. If Christ did not raise from the grave, Christians are to be pitied (1 Cor. 15:13-19).

Here is what we need:

1. Internal Evidence: Evidence coming from within the primary witness documents.

In this case, the primary witness documents are the twenty-seven works that make up the corpus that Christianity has traditionally called the New Testament. These works stand or fall individually from an historical standpoint. Therefore, they provide twenty-seven sources of documentation, not one.

2. External Evidence: Collaborative evidence coming from outside the primary witness documents.

Some may include the non-Gospel works of the New Testament in this category. However, since most of the works suppose to come from eye-witnesses of the event in question, it is proper to keep them primary.

Internal Evidence:

* Honesty
* Irrelevant Details
* Harmony
* Public Extraordinary Claims
* Lack of Motivation for Fabrication

Honesty:

A hallmark of embellishments and fabrications is that they display people in a positive light, normally only bringing to light their successes and triumphs. True history, on the other hand, will contain accounts that might cause some embarrassment.

The entire Bible records both successes and failures of the heroes. I have always been impressed by this. It never paints the glorious picture that you would expect from legendary material, but shows them in all their worst moments. The Israelites whined, David murdered, Peter denied, the apostles abandoned Christ in fear, Moses became angry, Jacob deceived, Noah got drunk, Adam and Eve disobeyed, Paul persecuted, Solomon worshiped idols, Abraham was a bigamist, Lot committed incest, John the Baptist doubted, Abraham doubted, Sarah doubted, Nicodemus doubted, Thomas doubted, Jonah ran, Samson self-served, and John, at the very end of the story, when he should have had it all figured out, worshiped an angel (Rev 22:8). I love it!

And these are the Jews who wrote the Bible!

In addition, the most faithful are seen as suffering the most (Joseph, Job, and Lazarus), while the wicked are seen as prospering (the rich man). In the case of the Gospels, the disciples who recorded it claimed to have abandoned Christ and did not believe in His resurrection when told. Even after the resurrection, they still present themselves as completely ignorant of God's plan (Acts 1:6-7). Women are the first to witness the resurrection which has an element of self-incrimination since a woman's testimony was not worth anything in the first century. If someone were making this up, why include such an incriminating detail? (I am glad they did—what an Easter message this is for us today!)

(The primary departure from this, although in the OT, is 1 and 2 Chronicles which does hide some of King David's failures. But, even then, the accounts are not promising for Israel as a whole).

One last thing that I think belongs in this category: None of the Gospel writers give their names. In other words, the reason why we believe Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John (two disciples and two colleagues of the disciples) wrote the Gospels is due to early tradition. Even John simply refers to himself as "the one whom Jesus loved." Initial reaction is one of skepticism (even though the traditions are very early). Why didn't they include their names? However, from another historical perspective, this is a significant mark of genuineness. The MO of the day was to write pseudopigrapha. Pseudopigrapha are writings that seek to gain credibility by falsely attributing their work to another of more prominent stature. It would be like me writing a book and saying it was by Chuck Swindoll in order for it to sell more copies. Pseudopigrapha normally came late (hundreds of years) after the death of the supposed author. However, since the Gospel writers did not include their name, it demonstrates that they were not following this model of fabrication. This actually adds another mark of historical credibility. Why would they leave their names out if it was a fabrication? If these works were not really by them, they would have no hope of acceptance.

Irrelevant Details:

The Gospel writers (especially John) include many elements to their story that are really irrelevant to the big picture. Normally, when someone is making up a story, they include only the details that contribute to the fabrication. Irrelevant details are a mark of genuineness in all situations.

Notice this small segment of the Gospel of John 20:1-8 (adapted from Gregory Boyd):

"Early on the first day of the week (when? does it matter?), while it was still dark (who cares?), Mary Magdalene (an incriminating detail) went to the tomb and saw that the stone had been removed from the entrance. So she came running to Simon Peter and the other disciple, the one who Jesus loved (John's modest way of referring to himself—another mark of genuineness) and said, "They have taken the Lord out of the tomb and we don't know where they have taken him!" (note her self-incriminating lack of faith here). So Peter and the other disciple started for the tomb. They were running, but the other disciple out ran Peter and reached the tomb first (who cares who won the race? a completely irrelevant detail). He bent over (irrelevant, but the tomb entrance was low—a detail which is historically accurate of wealthy people of the time—the kind we know Jesus was buried in) and looked in at the strips of linen lying there but did not go in (why not? irrelevant detail). Then Simon Peter, who was behind him, arrived and went into the tomb (Peter's boldness stands out in all the Gospel accounts). He saw the strips of linen lying there, as well as the burial cloth that had been around Jesus' head (irrelevant and unexpected detail—what was Jesus wearing?). The cloth was folded up by itself, separate from the linen (somewhat irrelevant and unusual. Jesus folded one part of his wrapping before he left!). Finally the other disciple, who reached the tomb first, also went inside (who cares about what exact order they went in?)

The best example I can think of is the polar bear. What? Okay, only those of you who watched the television series Lost will get this. In the first season, there was a polar bear in the show. We all wondered why it was there on the island. How did it get there? What is the meaning of the polar bear? How is it going to fit into the big picture of the story? These are all legitimate questions that many of us sat on the edge of our seat for five seasons waiting to get the answers to. However, the polar bear (along with so many other incidentals) were never explained. There was a great outcry because there were so many questions left unanswered. So many irrelevant details that remained irrelevant. The reason why the outcry was legitimate was because in fictional (or fabricated) stories, details are never irrelevant. They are written into the script and have a purpose that supports the whole of the fictional story. However, if the show Lost were not fictional but historical, the irrelevant details would be expected. True history does not have to work itself out into a paradigm of the story arch. When irrelevant details are present, while not conclusive, it does speak to the historicity of the story.

Harmony:

The four Gospel writers claim to have witnessed the resurrected Christ. The same is the case for most of the other writers of the NT. The four Gospel writers all write of the same event from differing perspectives. Although they differ in details, they are completely harmonious to the main events surrounding the resurrection, and all claim that it is an historical event.

Many people are disturbed by the seeming disharmony among the Gospels since the Gospel writers do not include all the same details. However, this is actually a mark of historicity since if they all said exactly the same thing, it would be a sign that they made it up and collaborated together. However, the Gospel writers contain just enough disharmony to give it a mark of genuine historicity.

Public Extraordinary Claims:

The Bible records that the resurrection of Christ happened and gives the time, place, people involved, and it names many of the witnesses. In other words, the extraordinary claims were not done in secret as would be the case if it were fabricated. Look to all the ancient myths and you will see how obscure the mythology has to be in order to claim historicity. Why? Because if you give too many details of times, people, and places it can be easily disproven. If it was a fabrication, the author should have said only one person knew about it. He should have said it happened in a cave or a place no one has ever heard of. We have those type of stories that start religions.

I made this graphic last month that caused quite a bit of a stir. It is appropriate to post it here:

How Christianity Started
After a public ministry, Christ was killed publicly Christ rose from a public tomb publicly
Christ publicly showed himself to the public
The public told everyone what they saw www.credohouse.org

As Paul says to King Agrippa, "For the king knows about these matters [concerning the resurrection of Christ], and I speak to him also with confidence, since I am persuaded that none of these things escape his notice; for this has not been done in a corner. (Act 26:26)

Lack of Motive for Fabrication:

There is no reasonable explanation as to why the Apostles (or anyone for that matter) would have made up such a story. They had no popularity, power, or riches to gain from it if it was a lie. They were in constant persecution because of their confession, and finally, most met a terrible death, sealing their testimony in blood.

Beyond this, it was culturally unacceptable at all levels to have a crucified and resurrected Messiah. The Jews certainly were not expecting their Messiah to be crucified. The Greek world would have nothing but disdain for the idea of a bodily resurrection since, from their perspective, the material body was something from which we desire to escape. Therefore, for this idea to arise as a fabrication at this time in history would have been about the most counterproductive story anyone could have made up!

It could not have been an illusion, for illusions do not happen in mass over time. It could not have been a case of mistaken identity (i.e., they merely thought they saw Christ), since it is impossible to explain how this many witnesses could be mistaken about seeing someone dead and buried, and then seeing the same person alive three days later. It could not be that Christ did not really die, since the Romans were expert executioners, and many people helped in the burial process, wrapping Christ in burial cloths as was their custom. It is very unlikely that it could not have been made up since all the objectors (and there were plenty of them) had to do was to produce a body.

External Evidence

While the internal evidence looks to the evidence coming from within the primary witness documents, the external evidence seeks to find collaborative evidence coming from outside the primary witness documents.

For the resurrection of Christ, I submit this line of external evidence:

* Preservation of the Documents
* Archeology
* Extra-biblical Attestation
* Survival in a Hostile Environment

Preservation of the Documents:

This has to do with the manuscript evidence of the New Testament, the primary source documents concerning the resurrection. While we don't have any of the originals in our possession (nor should we expect to), the manuscript evidence for the New Testament is very strong. According to top text critic Daniel Wallace, "We have an embarrassment of riches." Not only do we have hundreds of manuscripts that date before the fifth century (some into the second and third), we also have many quotations from the early church fathers that alone could be used to reconstruct most of the New Testament. All of this tells us that the accounts that we read are essentially the same as the accounts that were originally given. While there are some differences among the manuscripts, even Bart Erhman, former Fundamentalist, text critic, and critic of Christianity, says that no major doctrine is effected by the differences and that most are very insignificant.

In addition, and very significantly, the manuscript evidence tells us that the Gospel accounts of the resurrection were all written within a generation of the events which they record, giving evidence for their claims of eye-witness testimony. Therefore, there is not enough time for legendary material to arise.

Archeology:

The witness of archeology has continually confirmed the scriptural data. When there has been doubt in the past about the Gospel accounts (e.g., date of the Gospel of John, etc.), later archaeological and historical finds seem to always confirm the Scriptures to be historically accurate.

Jewish Archaeologist Nelson Glueck says this about the Bible: "It may be stated categorically that no archaeological discovery has ever controverted a biblical reference. Scores of archaeological findings have been made which confirm in clear outline or in exact detail historical statements in the Bible. And, by the same token, proper evaluation of biblical descriptions has often led to amazing discoveries." (Nelson Glueck Rivers in the Desert; History of Negev [Philadelphia: Jewish Publications Society of America, 1969], 31).

Sir William Ramsay is regarded as one of the greatest archaeologists ever to have lived. As an atheist, he set out to dis-prove the historical accuracy of the Scriptures. However, after researching the writings of Luke (Luke-Acts), he changed his mind. He became a firm defender of Christianity and the historical accuracy of the Gospel accounts. About Luke he wrote: "Luke is a historian of the first rank; not merely are his statements of fact trustworthy… this author should be placed along with the very greatest historians."

As well, it cannot be overlooked that Christ's remains were never found. This is an issue of archeology. Combined with the understanding that Christianity arose very early under the claim of Christ's resurrection and that there were many detractors, the archaeological evidence of the historically empty tomb is important. Those who denied the resurrection in the first century could not produce a body (much less can those who deny it today). This is a necessary precondition to collaborate the evidence of such a belief.

Extra-Biblical Attestation:

Over 39 extra-biblical sources attest to more than 100 facts regarding the life and teachings of Jesus. Besides all of the early Apostolic Fathers (whose witness cannot be dismissed simply because they believed that Christ was the Messiah) are the Jewish and Roman historians.

There are numerous first and second-century extra-biblical writings that witness to the fact that Christians believed that Christ did extraordinary things, died on a cross, and rose from the grave: Josephus, Clement, Papias, Didache, Barnabas, Justin Martyr, Ignatius, Irenaeus, Hermas, Tatian, Theophilus, Athenagoras, Clement of Alexandria.

In reality though, "extra-biblical attestation" is not really the best word for this line of evidence. Really, it should be "collaborative attestation" since it is not attestation that is outside the Bible or even the New Testament that we are looking for, but collaborative evidence outside the respective document that is under historical investigation. Therefore, the New Testament itself provides more than enough collaborative support for the events of the resurrection since each of the twenty-seven documents must be seen as pieces of individual evidence that stand on their own. There is no reason, at this point, as I said at the beginning, to put them together in a single corpus called "The New Testament" and say that the corpus must find its own collaborative support. Mark supports Luke. John supports Matthew. Paul supports Acts. The point is that every New Testament book individually provides very strong collaborative evidence for the historicity of the resurrection.

As a side note, I am often humored by those who say that Christians must produce "secular" support for the resurrection, defining "secular" as those who are not believers. It is as if those who believed in the resurrection have less credit than those who did not believe in it. It would be like saying that in order for me to believe in the assassination of John F. Kennedy, I have to have evidence from those who do not believe that he was assassinated and that those who do not believe it are more credible than those who do. However, as in the case of the resurrection, if it truly happened, then we would expect the closest people to the evidence to believe it rather than not believe it. Therefore, to deem "secular" or "skeptical" support as necessary and more trustworthy evidences is a bias that is too bent to come to objective conclusions.

Survival in a Hostile Environment:

The very fact that Christianity could have survived with such public and extraordinary truth claims is offered as a line of external evidence. That Christianity had its hostile objectors is supported by all the evidence, internal and external. The objectors of Christianity had every opportunity to expose the fabrication of the resurrection if it were truly a fabrication. The fact that those who were hostile to Christianity did not put forth a substantial or unified case against it adds to its historicity.

According to Gregory Boyd,

"Christianity was born in a very hostile environment. There were contemporaries who would have refuted the Gospel portrait of Jesus—if they could have. The leaders of Judaism in the first century saw Christianity as a pernicious cult and would have loved to see it stamped out. And this would have been easy to do—if the 'cult' had been based on fabrications. Why, just bringing forth the body of the slain Jesus would have been sufficient to extinguish Christianity once and for all. In spite of this, however, Christianity exploded. . . . Even those who remained opposed to Christianity did not deny that Jesus did miracles, and did not deny that His tomb was empty." (Gregory Boyd, Letters from a Skeptic [Colorado Springs, CO: Cook Communication Ministries, 2003], 85-86).

Conclusion

Considering the internal and external arguments for the resurrection of Christ, I don't ask anyone to look to one of these lines of evidence alone, but to consider the cumulative case. It is very impressive. If the resurrection indeed occurred, it would be hard to expect more evidence. In fact, what we would expect is exactly what we have.

Of course, alternatives to each one of these could be and have been offered. Alternatives to many well established historical events have been offered as well, including the Holocaust, the landing on the moon, and the death of Elvis. However, in most cases the alternatives go against the obvious. In the end, all other alternatives for the resurrection, while possible, are completely improbable and take a greater leap of faith than believing that Christ rose from the grave. The simplest explanation is always the best. The simplest explanation to the data here is that Christ did rise from the grave. Those who deny the resurrection do so not on the basis of the evidence, but because they have other presuppositions that won't allow them to believe. The historical evidence is simply too strong.

I believe that any objective historian must look to the evidence for the resurrection of Christ and concluded that he is indeed risen.

http://www.toughquestionsanswered.org/2009...fiction-part-1/

In two previous posts, Darrell argued that the Greek New Testament (NT) that we have today is almost identical to the twenty-seven books that were originally written. These two posts can be found here and here. In this post and following posts, I want to establish an answer to the obvious next question. If the NT we have today is almost identical to the one originally written, that's nice, but how do we know that what was written originally wasn't a bunch of lies?

In other words, did the NT authors record fact or fiction? Were they trying to record real history or were they making up a story to convince people to follow them? Maybe what was written was so far removed from the real events that myth and legend overtook the truth. In order to get an answer to this question, we will use some of the same criteria that historians employ to determine whether a document is reliable – whether the authors can be trusted.

The first thing we want to know about a historical document is how close to the events it was written. The NT authors were primarily writing about the life and times of Jesus of Nazareth, who died around the year A.D. 33 (this fact is well-attested by ancient non-Christian historians). If we are to trust the accounts written about his life, then the closer the documents are to A.D. 33, the better we can trust them. So dating the original NT books is extremely important. Note that we are talking about dating the original writings, not the manuscript copies that exist today. Even though we don't have the originals, we can still use historical analysis to deduce roughly when they were written.

One additional reason that dating the books is important is due to the nature of legendary development. We're all probably familiar with the way legends or myths can develop about an event, given enough time. In fact, history is full of strange and outrageous stories of Jesus or the apostles doing bizarre things (e.g., Jesus marrying Mary Magdalene and having a child). The one thing these legends have in common is that they were created by people who lived many generations and often hundreds of years removed from the time Jesus and the apostles lived.

In fact, historians have shown that it takes a minimum of three generations for legend to substantially corrupt core historical facts about an event. Usually, more than 3 generations are required, but there are no examples of legend significantly crowding out truth in 1 or 2 generations. Why is this? As long as the eyewitnesses of an event are still alive, or their children, they will correct any legend or falsehood that taints the true story. When the eyewitnesses and their children start to die, there are fewer people left to correct falsehood, so legend can creep in. This fact about history will prove useful in assessing the NT.

Next post, we will continue looking at this important question.

http://www.toughquestionsanswered.org/2009...fiction-part-2/

Continuing from the previous post, let's examine the evidence for dating the books of the NT, especially the books of the NT which contain substantial historical facts about Jesus and his followers. First we should note that three leaders of the early church – Clement of Rome, Ignatius, and Polycarp – quoted passages from 25 of the 27 books of the NT right around A. D. 100. They could not have quoted from the books if they hadn't been written, so the latest the books of the NT could have been written is A.D. 100. But there's strong evidence that many of them were written much earlier.

Several well-attested historical events occurred between A.D. 60 and 70. First, the Jewish temple, the temple where Jesus and his disciples worshipped along with the rest of the Jewish people, was completely and utterly destroyed in A.D. 70 by the Roman army. The Romans were extinguishing a significant Jewish rebellion and when they finally entered Jerusalem, they left no stones standing from the temple because they wanted the gold used in the contruction of the temple.

Second, both the apostles Paul and Peter were executed in Rome by the emperor Nero between A.D. 66 and 68. Their deaths are recorded by church historians – Clement of Rome, in particular, who was alive when their executions occurred. Their tombs are major historical landmarks in Rome to this day. Third, James, the brother of Jesus, was executed in Jerusalem by the Sanhedrin (Jewish High Council) in A.D. 62. This event was first recorded by a Jewish historian named Flavius Josephus in the first century.

Why are these three events important? They help prove that the books of Acts, Luke, and Mark were written before A.D. 62. Follow the logic. Acts was written by the historian and medical doctor, Luke. Luke was a companion of Paul and recorded many of the events of Paul's life. One odd thing about Acts is that it ends abruptly with Paul imprisoned in Rome; Paul is still alive at the end of Acts. Luke also frequently mentions James, the brother of Jesus, and Peter, the apostle, in the book of Acts. At the end of Acts, Peter and James are also alive (there is no mention of their deaths).

Now, if I were writing a biography of an individual, it seems like one of the most important events that would take place in the biography would be the death of the person. It's especially important because it ends the biography! Luke mentions the martyrdom of Stephen, so he clearly has no trouble writing about the deaths of Christians, but we are left with the fact that Luke never records the deaths of three of the major characters in Acts.

There is only one good explanation for this fact: they were all alive when Acts was written. If they were all alive, then Acts must have been written before A.D. 62! That means Acts was written within 30 years of Jesus' death and not even a single generation had passed.

In the next post, we will continue to argue for an early dating of several NT books.

http://www.toughquestionsanswered.org/2009...fiction-part-3/

In the previous post, we started arguing for early dates for several NT books, but we didn't finish the discussion. So this post picks up where we left off!

It is generally agreed upon by scholars that the gospel of Luke was written before the book of Acts. Dr. Luke wrote both of them and most historians believe that Acts was the sequel to Luke's gospel (read the beginnings of Luke and Acts to see this). If this is true, then the gospel of Luke was written before A.D. 62, just as Acts was, but probably a couple years earlier.

Many scholars believe that the gospel of Mark was written before the gospel of Luke because Luke seems to use the gospel of Mark as a source. This fact would then place Mark even earlier, say, in the mid-50's. Keep in mind that both of these gospels record the miraculous life, and more importantly, the resurrection of Jesus. These events are recorded as facts.

There's more! Not a single book in the NT mentions the destruction of the temple in A.D. 70. If, indeed, many of the books of the NT were written after A.D. 70 (as some liberal scholars claim), that would mean that nobody thought the destruction of the temple was important! How could this be? The temple was the single most important place in all Judaism. When Jerusalem was sacked and the temple demolished, the Jews lost the geographical center of their religion. Tens of thousands of Jews died in the war. The books of the NT often refer to the temple and the on-going worship of God there (e.g., Heb. 5:1-3, Rev. 11:1-2), so it seems incredible that nobody would mention its demise, yet not one person does. Can you imagine someone writing about the people of New York City and never mentioning the airplanes crashing into the World Trade Center on September 11, 2001? Ridiculous, right? The best explanation for the events of A.D. 70 never being mentioned in the NT is that most, if not all, of the NT was written prior to A.D. 70.

We now have evidence arguing powerfully for early dates for Mark, Luke, and Acts (before A. D. 62) and early dates for most, if not all the NT (before A.D. 70). Remember the time it takes for legendary development: it takes more than 2 generations. We aren't even one generation removed from the events, so the possibility of legend and myth creeping in is virtually zero.

Hang on, though. There are parts of the NT that we can date even earlier. One of the most interesting passages in the NT is 1 Cor. 15:3-7. First, we should note that the First Corinthians letter is dated by most scholars to A.D. 55 or 56. Now, in the verses mentioned above, scholars have noted some peculiarities that indicate Paul is repeating an oral creed about the resurrection of Jesus that had existed for some time.

In fact, many believe that Paul received the information in this creed from James and Peter in Jerusalem around A.D. 36-38 (Gal. 1:18-19). This would mean that we have information about the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus within just a few years of the events themselves. Even scholars who are unfriendly to Christianity admit this could be true. If so, there is no chance that this creed could be legendary.

Let's sum all of these facts up. Early dates are important to establishing the historical truth of a document. If we can establish that the documents were written before 2 generations had passed, there is very little chance of legend or myth sneaking in. The historical books contained in the NT more than meet this criterion.

We have good reason to believe that Mark, Luke, and Acts were written prior to A.D. 62, well within one generation; we have good reason to believe that First Corinthians contains an oral creed that dates to a few years after Jesus' death; and we have good reason to believe that most, if not all, the NT was written prior to A.D. 70. Even if we grant that some of the books of the NT were not written until the late 1st century, it is still too early for legend to corrupt the core facts. Now that we know the documents of the NT are early, we need to ask whether the writers of the documents are trustworthy and reliable. We will deal with that in the next post.

http://www.toughquestionsanswered.org/2009...fiction-part-4/

Based on the previous post, we know that the NT documents were written soon enough after the events of Jesus' life to prevent anyone claiming that they are largely tainted by myth or legend. This fact was very important to establish, but we are still left with a nagging question. Just because it was written soon after the events doesn't mean that the writers didn't make it all up.

Maybe the followers of Jesus fabricated this story about him dying and rising from the dead right after Jesus died, so that Jesus couldn't correct them. How can we trust them? After all, don't people start religions to gain power and wealth? We certainly see many modern-day religious figures becoming quite wealthy.

One newspaper story from a couple years ago featured a man in Miami, Jose Luis de Jesus Miranda, who claimed to be the reincarnated Jesus himself! He owns armored Lexus' and BMW's as well as several diamond-encrusted Rolex watches; he wields tremendous influence over his thousands of followers – everything a charlatan could dream of. Maybe the disciples, the writers of the NT, were just like de Jesus Miranda. Let's find out.

We are going to ask questions of the NT writers that any court of law would ask of witness testimony. It's interesting to note that many famous attorneys who have studied the evidence of the NT became Christians because they understood how compelling the evidence is. So let's pose some of the questions that would be asked of a witness.

Question 1: Do the witnesses claim to be eyewitnesses or claim to have received their information directly from eyewitnesses? This question is obvious since eyewitness testimony will always be more accurate. With respect to the NT writers, all of them implicitly claim to be eyewitnesses of the events surrounding Jesus' life. They write as if they were there and they heard Jesus' words themselves.

However, we have several instances in the NT where the writers explicitly claim to have eyewitness testimony. They go out of their way to prove this point. For example, Luke claims to have "carefully investigated" the accounts "handed down . . . [by] eyewitnesses" (Luke 1:1-4). In 1 John 1:1-3, the apostle John makes it clear that he is writing about what he himself heard, saw, and touched. In fact, in the span of three verses, he claims eyewitness credentials 8 times! Here is a person that wants you to know he was there. Not to be outdone by John or Luke, Peter reminds his readers in 2 Pet. 1:16-18 that "we were eyewitnesses of [Jesus'] majesty." Time and again, the writers of the NT claim to be presenting eyewitness testimony, so question 1 is answered with a resounding "yes."

We will continue with additional questions in future posts.

http://www.toughquestionsanswered.org/2009...fiction-part-5/

Continuing from part 4, we will now ask further questions of the writers of the New Testament (NT) documents.

Question 2: Do we have multiple witnesses or just one? The more witnesses, the better, because one person could make a mistake, but if several people are saying the same thing, it's more convincing.

In the NT, we have 27 books written by 9 eyewitnesses or contemporaries of eyewitnesses. Five of these books contain eyewitness accounts of the resurrected Jesus: Matthew, Mark, John, 1 Corinthians (written by Paul), and 1 Peter. Additionally, Luke based his writings (Gospel of Luke and Acts) on eyewitness testimony.

So, we have at least 6 individuals all telling the same story about Jesus' life, death, and resurrection. As Dr. Norman Geisler and Dr. Frank Turek state in their book, I Don't Have Enough Faith to Be an Atheist, "Six sane, sober eyewitnesses, who refuse to recant their testimony even under threat of death, would convict anyone of anything in a court of law. . . . Such eyewitness testimony yields a verdict that is beyond a reasonable doubt."

Question 3: Are the eyewitnesses trustworthy? Can we believe what they are reporting? There are several ways to check this out. First, did the witnesses include embarrassing details about themselves in their accounts?

If I was making a story up about myself and my friends, I certainly wouldn't include embarrassing details about us. Remember, the alleged goal of the apostles was to gain power and wealth by starting a new religion. Making themselves look bad in their written documents would not have been an effective way to get this done, but that is exactly what happened.

The apostles provide plenty of embarrassment. They often seem dimwitted or ignorant (Mark 9:32, Luke 18:34, John 12:16).

They are uncaring when they fall asleep while Jesus is praying in the garden of Gethsemane.

Peter is rebuked by Jesus and even called "Satan" in Mark 8:33.

They are cowards who hide during Jesus' crucifixion; Peter even denies him three times right after saying he wouldn't!

They are doubters who, after being taught many times that Jesus would be resurrected, still didn't believe it when it occurred.

They allowed Joseph of Arimathea, a member of the Sanhedrin (the very group that sent Jesus to his death), to bury him instead of burying him themselves. This list could go on and on. Needless to say, the writers of the NT pass this test with flying colors. There are several more points on which we can test the trustworthiness of the NT writers. We will discuss those next!

http://www.toughquestionsanswered.org/2009...fiction-part-6/

From part 5, we are still examining whether the eyewitnesses who wrote the books of the NT are trustworthy. Previously we noted that the eyewitnesses recorded embarrassing details about Jesus' disciples. We concluded that embarrassing details would not be included in a fictional work meant to emphasize the greatness of the first followers of Jesus. But there are additional points to consider.

A second point to examine is that the NT writers included hard-to-explain details and sayings of their Lord and Messiah, Jesus Christ. Again, if you were creating a new religion for selfish reasons, you would not include some of the following details about Jesus because they don't portray a simple, straightforward version of Jesus, but a more complex version.

For example, Jesus' family thought he was out of his mind (Mark 3:21).

Jesus was deserted by many of his followers (John 6:66).

Jesus was almost stoned to death several times because of what he said.

Jesus was accused of being a drunk in Matt. 11:19.

In John 6:53 Jesus encouraged his followers to eat of his flesh and drink of his blood. This was difficult for many non-Christians to understand during the early years of the church (Jesus was speaking symbolically, not literally); some accused Christians of being cannibals!

To cap it all off, Jesus' moral teachings were incredibly challenging. He told his disciples to love their enemies (Matt 5:44-45) and he said that if a man just thinks seriously about adultery, then he is guilty of it. Just our thoughts are enough to break the moral law.

Why include these facts about Jesus if you're making up a new religion to gain power and wealth?

A third point about the NT writers is that they include divergent details about the life of Jesus. Imagine that 5 teenagers attended a church retreat at a camp one weekend. After the weekend was over, I asked each of them to write a one-page essay about what they did over the weekend. All five gave me their essays and they were all virtually word-for-word identical. Each teen wrote about the same events, included the same details about those events, commented on the same people they saw at the events, and even mentioned the color of the shirt worn by one of the counselors.

What should I conclude? Obviously, the five teens all got together and agreed on the story before writing their essays (they colluded). Probably one of them wrote down the events and the rest copied her.

Likewise, when a judge listens to several witnesses talk about one event, he is watching for collusion. Witnesses that do this cannot be trusted, can they? They don't seem to be interested in telling the truth, but in getting their stories straight, in conspiring.

In fact, one way we know witnesses can be trusted is if their stories don't match on all the details. If the five teens mentioned the same general events of the weekend camp, but gave differing perspectives of those events and wrote about different details, then it is more likely they can be trusted to be telling the truth, and thus we have more confidence in the events they're describing.

This is exactly the case we have with the NT writers. They all talk about things like Jesus' birth, his miracles, his crucifixion, and his resurrection, but they tell about all these events in different ways and they include different details.

For example, Matthew's account of Jesus' early years include his parents traveling to Egypt to escape King Herod. Luke, in his gospel, does not mention the trip to Egypt. Why? Is it because Jesus never went to Egypt and Matthew made it up? No, it's probably because Luke was not so interested in the trip to Egypt while Matthew was. Matthew was writing his gospel to Jews and he realized that the family's move to Egypt fulfilled an Old Testament prophecy that would convince the Jews of Jesus being the Messiah. Luke was not likely writing to a Jewish audience, but to a Gentile audience, so he left it out because it wouldn't mean as much to them.

There are many other examples of divergent details in the gospel accounts, but they can be explained along these lines. These different details actually serve to prove the integrity of the writers, not the other way around.

In the next post, we look at even more lines of evidence that bolster the trustworthiness of the NT writers.

Did the New Testament Writers Record Fact or Fiction? Part 7

http://www.toughquestionsanswered.org/2009...fiction-part-7/

Continuing from part 6, we will examine more evidence for the trustworthiness of the NT writers.

A fourth question about the NT writers' integrity: are any of the historical facts they mention corroborated by other sources? Here the NT writers really shine. During the first and second centuries, there were many historians who were writing books and letters. We still have many manuscript copies of these writings. Not only do we have copies of ancient documents, we also have archaeological finds from this time period. Since some of the NT writers described people, cities, languages, landmarks, and topography, we could check these things out to see if the NT writers were accurate.

First, the book of Acts contains numerous historical facts that can be checked out. One researcher, Colin Hemer, found that at least 84 historical facts found in Acts can be confirmed by independent evidence. 84 facts!! According to modern-day Roman historian A. N. Sherwin-White: "For Acts the confirmation of historicity is overwhelming. . . . Any attempt to reject its basic historicity must now appear absurd. Roman historians have long taken it for granted." In other words, the book of Acts is used by professional historians to study Roman history. In that same book of Acts that contains rock-solid history, Luke also records 35 miracles. We need to give Luke the benefit of the doubt, don't we? Using other sources to check his facts, Luke has been proven a first-rate historian, so it is eminently reasonable to believe the miraculous accounts he recorded in the days of the early church.

Luke's reputation as an historian carries over in the Gospel of Luke. Just read Luke 3:1-2 and tell me Luke didn't care about getting the facts right. He practically begs his readers to check his facts. World-famous historian William Ramsay studied Luke's historical accuracy for 20 years and concluded: "Luke's history is unsurpassed in respect of its trustworthiness. Luke is an historian of first rank. [He] should be placed along with the very greatest of historians."

Now pay close attention. Luke's account of Jesus' life, death, and resurrection contain all the same general facts as Mark, Matthew, and John. Therefore, they should also be trusted. In fact, the Gospel of John has also been dissected for historical accuracy and was found to have at least 60 independently corroborated historical facts correct.

There's more. We have copies of manuscripts from 17 ancient non-Christian writers who corroborate many of the basic historical facts mentioned in the NT. These include people who were hostile to Christianity. Additionally, archaeologists have discovered the ruins of virtually every major biblical city and we actually have the ossuary (bone box) that contained Joseph Caiaphas' bones! He was the high priest who sentenced Jesus to death. Volumes have been written which chronicle the archaeological evidence matching the names of people and places recorded in the Bible, but we don't have space to discuss it all.

The bottom line: wherever we can check the historical facts written into the books of the NT, they show themselves trustworthy. Does this prove everything the NT authors' claim? Of course not. But it is still strong evidence that they were reliable recorders of what they saw.

In this series of posts, we have shown that the NT writers claimed to be eyewitnesses or associates of eyewitnesses; we have shown that we have multiple witnesses, and we have shown that the eyewitnesses were trustworthy. How? They included embarrassing details about themselves and difficult details about their subject of worship, Jesus; their accounts contain divergent details, just as we would expect from independent witnesses; and they wrote about historical facts that have been thoroughly corroborated by ancient non-Christian writers and modern archaeology.

There is one final line of evidence that will conclude this series of posts. You won't want to miss it…

Did the New Testament Writers Record Fact or Fiction? Part 8

http://www.toughquestionsanswered.org/2009...fiction-part-8/

In this series of posts, we have shown that the NT writers claimed to be eyewitnesses or associates of eyewitnesses; we have shown that we have multiple witnesses, and we have shown that the eyewitnesses were trustworthy. How? They included embarrassing details about themselves and difficult details about their subject of worship, Jesus; their accounts contain divergent details, just as we would expect from independent witnesses; and they wrote about historical facts that have been thoroughly corroborated by ancient non-Christian writers and modern archaeology.

There is one final piece of evidence that you should consider, though. I think it is one of the strongest historical evidences we have.

Here it is. The apostles, some of whom wrote portions of the NT, were all killed for their beliefs, except John. According to historical documents, Paul was beheaded and Peter was crucified upside down – both of them killed in Rome. James, the brother of Jesus and leader of the Jerusalem church, was thrown off the top of the Jerusalem temple and stoned to death. The other apostles met similar fates. Before they died, they were beaten, stoned, imprisoned, mocked, and persecuted, mostly because of their professed beliefs in Christ.

I was having lunch with a couple of bright engineers a few years back, and we started discussing religions, Christianity in particular. They challenged my belief in the NT documents by saying that many people have created religions in order to gain fame, fortune, and power. They thought it was quite possible that the NT writers were merely doing the same. I asked them if they knew what happened to the apostles after Jesus died, and they did not know. When I shared the facts above, they became silent. Fame, fortune, and power eluded all of these men while they were alive. Their lives would have been far easier if they had just kept quiet.

Maybe the apostles weren't in it for the money, so to speak. Maybe they had been lied to or deceived. Maybe they just died for their false religious beliefs like so many other fanatics do. Many people die for their religious beliefs, don't they? The Muslim fanatics on 9/11 certainly died for their beliefs. Aren't the apostles just the same?

No, they aren't. There's a fundamental difference between the disciples and the 9/11 extremists. The 9/11 crowd died for contemporary beliefs that reflected someone's modern-day interpretation of the Qur'an, a book which was written 1,400 years ago. They had no way of knowing if the source of that book, Muhammad, was telling the truth or not. They weren't there to see it. They believed based on what they had been taught by their contemporary religious teachers.

Not so with the disciples. They all went to their deaths claiming that they saw Jesus risen from the dead. But they knew this, not based on information delivered 1,400 years after the fact, but based on their own two eyes!! If Jesus did not rise from the dead and the NT is a pack of lies, then the disciples knew it. They were there. But if they knew Jesus didn't rise from the dead, then we must explain why they willingly went to their deaths. Many people die for a false belief, but nobody dies for a false belief they know is false, especially not 12 different people! The martyrdom of the apostles is the strongest evidence for the truth of the historical resurrection of Jesus. There exists no other theory which can adequately explain their behavior.

I conclude this series with an extended quote from Chuck Colson, who is often asked about why he believes that Jesus rose from the dead, which is the central event and miracle of the NT. Here is Colson:

QUOTE

Watergate involved a conspiracy to cover up, perpetuated by the closest aides to the President of the United States, the most powerful men in America, who were intensely loyal to their President. But one of them, John Dean, turned state's evidence, that is, testified against Nixon, as he put it, "to save his own skin," and he did so only two weeks after informing the president about what was really going on – two weeks! The real cover-up, the lie, could only be held together for two weeks, and then everybody else jumped ship in order to save themselves. Now, the fact is that all that those around the President were facing was embarrassment, maybe prison. Nobody's life was at stake.

But what about the disciples? Twelve powerless men, peasants really, were facing not just embarrassment or political disgrace, but beatings, stonings, execution. Every single one of the disciples insisted, to their dying breaths, that they had physically seen Jesus bodily raised from the dead.

Don't you think that one of those apostles would have cracked before being beheaded or stoned? That one of them would have made a deal with the authorities? None did.

You see, men will give their lives for something they believe to be true – they will never give their lives for something they know to be false.

The Watergate cover-up reveals the true nature of humanity. Even political zealots at the pinnacle of power will, in the crunch, save their own necks, even at the expense of the ones they profess to serve so loyally. But the apostles could not deny Jesus because they had seen Him face to face, and they knew He had risen from the dead.

No, you can take it from an expert in cover-ups – I've lived through Watergate – that nothing less than a resurrected Christ could have caused those men to maintain to their dying whispers that Jesus is alive and is Lord. Two thousand years later, nothing less than the power of the risen Christ could inspire Christians around the world to remain faithful – despite prison, torture, and death.

Jesus is Lord: That's the thrilling message of Easter. And it's an historic fact, one convincingly established by the evidence – and one you can bet your life upon. Go ahead researchers – dig up all the old graves you want. You won't change a thing. He has risen.

Wow, I remember back when I used to listen to Korn. I was listening to the local rock station 4/5 or so years ago and heard that he found God and tattooed Jesus on his palms so he wouldn't masturbate anymore. Back then I thought he was a loon and scoffed at it him but now I see that I was the one that was the fool.

2 Corinthians {5:17} Therefore if any man [be] in Christ, [he is] a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. {5:18} And all things [are] of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; {5:19} To wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. {5:20} Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech [you] by us: we pray [you] in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God. {5:21}

For he hath made him [to be] sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

NEW YORK, NY, March 09, 2010 /24-7PressRelease/ -- In his book Out of the Devil's Caldron: A Journey from Darkness to Light, John Ramirez tells the story of how he was trained to be the third-ranked high priest of a satanic cult (Santeria) in New York City--casting powerful witchcraft spells and controlling entire spiritual regions. But what started as a long spiral into the underworld ended in a miraculous encounter with God that changed his life.

Raised in violent ghetto neighborhoods, Ramirez grew up despising his father for his careless disregard of his family. He learned to live like a street animal to survive the cold, harsh streets of the South Bronx. Looking for love and validation, he eventually found it in a new "family" of witches and warlocks who groomed him to become a high priest in their occult religion. Ramirez's plunge into the dark side reached a boiling point on the night he sold his soul to the devil in a diabolical, blood-soaked ritual. With renewed fervor--and the mark of the beast now cut into his right arm--he actively recruited souls into this "unholy kingdom," haunting the bars and clubs of NYC by night to find his next victims, including those who professed faith in Christ. His life continued on this dark path for 25 years until God intervened through a larger-than-life dream, revealing Himself for who He really is and snatching Ramirez back from the pit of hell.

Out of the Devil's Caldron walks you through the dark alleys of the occult religions of Santeria, Palo Mayombe, and espiritismo (spiritualism) while exposing the hidden secrets of darkness. Be held in suspense as you read each chapter of this chilling true story of the life of a Santeria high priest and his journey from darkness to light. Many have dabbled in the occult and fallen victim to the satanic underworld, never finding their way out. John Ramirez is the one in a million who made it out.

John Ramirez is a sought-out speaker by many who want to hear of his involvement in the highest levels of the occult and how he got out. He speaks at churches, schools, rallies, and conferences and has been a featured guest on TV and radio programs. Visit him at www.JohnRamirez.org. Former Dawkins Atheist Richard Morgan Continues to Praise God

Thu, Mar. 24 2011 06:58 AM EDT
By Eryn Sun|Christian Post Correspondent
http://www.christianpost.com/news/former-d...aise-god-49558/

Three years later and still going strong, one man continues to prove to atheists that his conversion was not a “temporary brain infarction.”

Nominal Christian, Mormon missionary, atheist, and now a born-again Christian, Richard Morgan recently spoke to Apologetics315 about his life-changing, or saving, experience on none other than Richard Dawkins’ infamous website.

Having been through his share of religious inquiry at a young age, Morgan realized that he was constantly in search of something, whether it be spiritual or not.

Embracing answers in whatever shape they took, he found himself a Mormon at one point in his life after meeting two Mormon missionaries. But after becoming a missionary, he began to have some serious doubts about his beliefs, which later caused him to abandon that religion altogether.

Blindly searching still for something to hold on to, Morgan shared in his interview, “I was aware that probably much more than seeking God I was seeking a social context where I would be accepted. I think basically all of us deep down, we’re all looking to be accepted in some way or another.”

Having grown out of the need for that kind of moral support however as he aged, Morgan one day began to read Dawkins’ book, The Blind Watchmaker which revolutionized his life and made sense of everything he had been experiencing.

The book made one thing clear: There was nothing to look for, so stop looking and get on with your life.

“This was a real epiphany experience… to realize of course all those years of searching for something spiritual or God-like were bound to be completely frustrating because God didn’t exist.

“I didn’t feel like I became an atheist, the feeling was more that I realized I always had been," expressed Morgan. "I had a feeling that I never actually believed in God but I was looking for some unhealthy psychological reason [to believe]… coming out as an atheist was really a hallelujah experience for me."

Morgan's interest in evolution increased dramatically after reading the book, redirecting his attention towards understanding the nature of living things around him more than trying to understand things that were above.

More than the religious debate, it was his interest in evolution that led him to follow Richard Dawkins. Upon finding the author's actual website, Morgan was excited to communicate with scientists and philosophers who could offer more insight into evolution.

But rather than discussing the nature of evolution in the "oasis of clear thinking," Morgan was horrified to discover in his first forum that more than half of the people devoted their time saying rude things about believers using extremely foul language.

"I don't know if you've seen 'The Social Network' but there's one point where a girl says to the main character 'Just stay in your dark room and make snide remarks because that's what the angry do these days.'"

After witnessing the discussions firsthand, the newly minted evolutionist agreed that the Internet was more a place where people could hide behind their anonymity and say rude things as a kind of therapy.
Still searching for answers however, Morgan continued to be a part of the community, drawn particularly to a discussion on David Robertson's open letter replying to Dawkins' first chapter of The God Delusion.

Prompted to write a response to each of Dawkins' chapters in the book, the Scottish pastor eventually compiled all the letters into a book called The Dawkins Letters.

Criticizing the book in the forums, members began to attack the letters until one day Robertson himself appeared in the discussions and began defending the points he made.

"I don't know how many hours he must have spent just replying very calmly and politely to people who were sending out the most vilest insults and criticisms," Morgan recalled. "He just kept coming back and occasionally with a few words of Scripture thrown into his general discourse."

Unable to understand what was wrong with Robertson, Morgan himself posed a question on the discussion boards asking members why the pastor kept coming back and what result he expected. One of the seasoned and experienced posters on the forum commented, "It's just another Christian attention seeker."

"Yes, David Robertson was seeking attention but it wasn't for David Robertson. We all know for whom he was seeking attention," expressed the now Christian Morgan.

For several days the attacks continued, until one day someone replied that David Robertson was a liar. But Morgan throughout all of the threads had not noticed this and asked where the pastor had lied, bringing him a bout of criticisms as well.

"I was probably too unintelligent to see where he was a liar," remembered Morgan.

As time went on, he began to see more and more the brutality and harshness of the chats, recalling one shocking post where the site administrator had published an article about an extremist Russian prophet who tried to commit suicide when his prediction for the date of the end of the world failed to come true.

A couple of posters in response to the story regretted that the fallen prophet had failed in his attempt to put an end to his life. Stunned by the level of inhumanity, Morgan wondered how any civilized person could say they wanted to see anybody die. Writing a protestation to some form of humanity in the forums about his shock and disappointment in the members, one respected member on the site simply replied to his post with an LOL– laugh out loud.

It was then that Morgan realized he did not want to be a part of these people. "I'm not condemning all atheists," he clarified in the interview. "I'm talking about anonymous atheists on internet discussion boards and the messages they express which are extremely negative, puerile, [and] full of hate…"

Coming back to Robertson's replies to all the "nastiness and unpleasantness," which Morgan himself was a part of, composing a piece of music just to insult the pastor, Morgan reread the debates and was impressed at several aspects of Robertson's participation.

First, his persistence and continual presence in the discussions astounded Morgan. Robertson always came back and sometimes got up two hours earlier in the morning to give adequate response time to the criticisms.

Secondly he defended himself in a robust manner while not hesitating to wish everyone well. He wasn't the meek and mild kind of Christian who said "I love you all and you're all nice," but the kind of Christian who stood up for what he believed in.

Printing out over fifty pages of Robertson's posts, Morgan read through all the posts again and found no lies. What he discovered instead was humility, intelligence, sensitivity, and several references to the Bible.

In his confused state, without God or a community of atheists to turn to, Morgan started to post on The Free Church of Scotland's forum, which the Scottish pastor was a part of.

Writing to Robertson about how he appreciated his responses and comments, Morgan shared how he couldn't believe in God. "I'm not an atheist because I want to be an atheist. I'm not a happy atheist. I'm an atheist because I can't believe in God."

In response to Morgan's post, Robertson, the "resident fruitcake" at the Dawkins' forums, asked him two questions which subsequently changed his life: 1) Why don't you believe in God? 2) What could make you believe in God?

Dismissing the first question as dumb, Robertson's initial reaction to the second question was "certainly not proof and evidence."

At that moment, Morgan's instinctive response conjured up to his memory, probably from his previous Mormon days, the verse, "We love because he first loved us." And in that instant, Morgan understood the expression "amazing grace."

"I was certain without having any rational explanation that God existed, that he loved me without waiting for me to love him, that he loved me unconditionally without waiting for me to deserve it."

"Science and philosophy are wonderful manifestations of the enormous capacities of the human mind, but the Word of God is truth, and truth is what it took to set me free," Morgan stated. "Only a personal relationship with God can bring us to any kind of meaningful, personal, transcendental truth."

In his renewed experience with God, he went back on the Dawkins site and posted about his newfound faith to which many replied with vile insults and commented, "You need counseling" and "This is a temporary brain infraction."

But now, three years later, the "temporary brain infraction" Morgan was affected with continues to persist. Morgan is still amazed and feels the love of God even more now every day, being plugged into a church, which Robertson referred him to.

"I didn't cease to know everything I knew before and I didn't forget everything I learned about evolution or all of a sudden lose interest. I was [just] aware of how limited it was, how it could not answer man's deepest needs.

"There's a famous French quotation that says, 'In every person's heart there is a God-shaped hole.' I am aware of the presence of this God-shaped hole and that only the love of God can fill it."

Advising believers to speak to people in their language and maintain open lines of communication as Robertson had before in the forums, Morgan noted, "There's no point speaking the truth if you are speaking a language that the person in front of you can't understand."

"It's important to understand where atheists are coming from in their modern day arguments and how many valid refutations there are in the Christian message to all these criticisms."

Speaking to atheists, Morgan said, "Science and philosophy do not have the answer to everything. If you are willing to listen with an open mind and an open heart and just say 'perhaps I do not possess all the truth,' that is an act of humility and I know that God never rejects or ignores acts of humility."

Referring to Revelation 3 where Jesus spoke, "I stand at the door and knock," Morgan concluded, "Jesus hasn't invited you to come and knock on his door. He says, 'I am here, I am standing at the door, and knock.' All you have to do is open the door and invite [him] in."

Morgan's testimony is now a part of the revamped edition of The Dawkins Letters, by David Robertson.

If Only I Could See a Miracle, I Would Believe

http://www.toughquestionsanswered.org/2009...-would-believe/

If you are a person who says this about Christianity, excuse me for being skeptical.

God performed miracles through Moses, and yet Pharaoh did not believe.

God performed miracles through Elijah, and yet Jezebel did not believe.

Jesus performed numerous miracles that confirmed his power over sickness, weather, and even death. Ultimately he rose from the dead. Yet still some who saw these miracles did not believe.

God has provided plenty of evidence that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and rose from the dead. If you are a person who has heard the gospel message and understood it, but you continue to demand more evidence in the form of miracles, ask yourself if there isn't another problem.

Is it possible that you just don't want to believe? Is it possible that no matter how much evidence you are shown, that no matter how many times God reveals himself to you, that you just will not believe?

If that is the case, search your own heart and figure out why you don't want to believe. Where is this barrier of belief coming from? We can answer your questions about Christianity, but until you deal with your will, our answers will remain unpersuasive.

Always Now - April 25, 2011 10:01 AM (GMT)

Brothers i am coming round to the idea of Geocentricity when you appreciate the depths to which satan will go to decieve people using their satanic babylonian system state science and lies.
Imagine brothers just how many more would pick up a bible if they the accepted the world as the centre of Gods creation.
It blows apart the evils of evolution and that we evolved from bacteria and apes and that GOD did indeed create the known world. God says he stopped the sun in the sky not the earth from rotating and i trust God over any pseudo scientist from the beast system.

Wolves hater, does the bible in Hebrew say anything notable or different concerning the geocentricity?

Alexandra - May 4, 2011 05:56 PM (GMT)

Keith, take a look in Joshua chapter 10, where he orders the sun and the moon to stand still. Joshua didn't tell the earth to stop rotating.

golden_oil - May 5, 2011 08:48 PM (GMT)

The depiction of the Sun in the center as a stationary object in our near Solar system is completely wrong. Scientists have duped us over hundreds of years teaching this error which takes us away from the truth of Geocentricity where Earth is the center of our near solar system.

An examination of the creation story in Genesis 1 shows the Earth was created first - on the third day of Creation, and the creation of the Sun and the moon followed on the fourth day.

Our eyes tell us that the Sun moves as it rises in the morning and sets in the evening. Moreover, Biblical evidence shows God giving Joshua the authority to speak to the Sun to stand still, Joshua 10:12, 13.

We need only check on God's Word and stop following what godless men are teaching.

Alexandra - May 6, 2011 12:32 AM (GMT)

Exactly, golden oil. The sun was created, what, the fourth day? If heliocentricity were true, then what was the earth going around the first few days?

My point is heliocentricity is but a theory, while Geocentricity stands as biblical truth, meaning the Earth is stationary.

Alexandra - May 6, 2011 09:10 PM (GMT)

I know.

I wonder, is the sun really another star, as claimed? Somehow I don't think so.

I don't think so either. My bible doesn't say the sun is a star.

Always Now - May 7, 2011 01:06 PM (GMT)

Of course the Young age of the earth goes hand in hand with the earth being the centre of creation.
http://www.earthage.org/youngearthev/evide...young_earth.htm
Notice how God created the sun for day and the moon for the night and both discs showing the exact same size. The chances of that happening with evolution and using their own satanic science would be trillions to one.
Its all backwards, its these evolutionists who are the religious believers.

Title: What makes you happy?

Phazon - May 7, 2011 06:31 AM (GMT)

The greatest feeling in the world is Love.

Love is unconditional and not self motivated.

When you love others unconditionally you deserve to feel good about yourself.

The greatest love you can show for others is to share with them this truth and all truth and is the reason that I'm telling you this.

The greatest truth is that the one who can truly satisfy your need to feel loved is Jesus Christ, God the Son who died on the cross in your place for your sins to show you just how much he loves you unconditionally and to save you, he also did it because his Father Jehovah had asked him to and he loves his Father and all he wants is for us to love his Father. God the Father, Jehovah gave his Son to the world even though he knew what would happen to him because he wants us to know how much he loves us and wants to save us and wants us to love his Son.

When you realise this and ask Jesus to forgive you, God the Holy Spirit who also loves you will come into your life and you will receive eternal life and an eternal adoption into God's family.

God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Spirit are three seperate persons that have the same identical divine essence or nature and are the one eternal triune God.

golden_oil - May 7, 2011 11:49 AM (GMT)

To meet a brother or sister who is filled with the love of the Lord and who exhibits the fruit of a life filled with the Holy Spirit.

That makes our Lord happy too!

Start reading in the Book of John.

Jesus is God Himself and is the Messiah! Jesus died on the cross to pay for all of our sins, and then Jesus resurrected from the dead. So to get into heaven, believe in Jesus. Jesus is truly the only way to heaven.

Maximiliano - April 16, 2011 10:18 AM (GMT)

Jesus Christ is Yahweh God? I am sorry but i don't understand, maybe any of you can help me and 14april2000 to do it.

John 1:1 says:" •ν •ρχ• •ν • λ•γος, κα• • λ•γος •ν πρ•ς τ•ν θε•ν, κα• θε•ς •ν • λ•γος "

Now, for my knowledge of the greek lenguage, "Tón Theón" (τ•ν θε•ν) means "The God", while "kay theós" (κα• θε•ς), means "and a god".

Why?, becouse when no article is expressed in Greek, the English indefinitive article "a" is signified. Thus "•νθρωπος" (antropos) means "a man"; and "• •νθρωπος" (ho antropos), "The Man".

THIS IS THE SAME IN OTHERS LENGUAGES LIKE THE HEBREW AND THE COPTIC, SUCH LENGUAGES IN WHICH ALSO WAS WRITTEN THE NEW PACT (BAD CALLED NEW TESTAMENT)

We must decide, are we going to follow mens, or are we going to follow the Only God Yahweh? Prejudgement or Judgement?

Who is running the universe as God Almighty? - the Father because of the following statement by Jesus:

John 14:10 "the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works."

Jesus is therefore not doing the works, so how can he be God?

trk - April 16, 2011 04:40 PM (GMT)

To 14april2000:

Jesus is indeed God Himself. Just stick with this truth. No need to argue with others about it.

To get into heaven, you must believe that Jesus is God Himself, and that Jesus is the Messiah, and that Jesus died there on the cross for all of our sins, and then Jesus resurrected again from the dead. Jesus is truly the only way to heaven.

So to get into heaven, believe in Jesus. It is truly that easy! John 3:16

Lets gonna understand this... In Romans 14:10-12 the Apostle is quoting Isaiah 45:22-25, where said the following in the King James Bible Version:

22 Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: for I [am] God, and [there is] none else.

23 I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth [in] righteousness, and shall not return, That unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear.

24 Surely, shall [one] say, in the LORD have I righteousness and strength: [even] to him shall [men] come; and all that are incensed against him shall be ashamed.

25 In the LORD shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and shall glory.

But in the original hebrew manuscripts says the following

•••• 45:24 Hebrew OT: WLC (Consonants & Vowels)

This is the Tetragrammaton and not the hebrew word fo Lord, "adonai".
So the Lord in Romans 14:10-12, is not the Lord in Isaiah 45:22-25.

Regarding 1 John 5:7, was prooved that this passage was apocrifal and modificated. This happened becouse the KJV is a translation from latin to english of the Vulgate. And this is recognized by all. This is an apocrifal inclusion made by the Catholic Institution. Whether you like it or not, there is not one ancient Greek text containing those words

Lastly, regarding (again) John 1:1, in the Coptic Sahídic manuscripts of the New Pact, becouse of the nature of that lenguage, is presents the definitive and indefinitive articles, vindicating so the same that i said about the Greek Lenguage and Manuscripts.

In COPTIC IN 20 LESSONS, Introduction to Sahidic Coptic With Exercises & Vocabularies by Bentley Layton, the translation from coptic to english is the following:

ϩⲛ̄-ⲧⲉ-ϩⲟⲩⲉⲓⲧⲉ ⲛⲉ-ϥ-ϣⲟⲟⲡ ⲛ̄ⲑⲓ-ⲡ-ϣⲁϫⲉ
In-the-beginning past tense marker-He-exists subject marker-the-Word = In the beginning was the Word

ⲁⲩⲱ ⲛⲉ-ⲩ-ⲛⲟⲩⲧⲉ ⲡⲉ ⲡ-ϣⲁϫⲉ
And past tense marker-a-god is the-Word
= And the Word was a god

Did you see that "Y"? Well, that is the indefinitive article in the coptic lenguage, and it means in english: "a".

The spiritual power of Satan, working through the Pope, over my German ancestors was broken by the Luther Bible. Even though the old language gives me troubles at time, I still have chosen an 1545 Edition instead of one in a more modern language as the original has proven itself to be "working" and I expect perversions in the altered versions.

It teaches that Jesus is the word and the word is God.

In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. -Genesis 1:1

Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear. -Hebrews 11:3

Throughout the beginning of Genesis we have: "God said...called...said...called"
Is this not the word talked about in John 1:1-14?

Probably I'm too daft but I can't see how Jesus is not God/the word.

servant of truth - April 18, 2011 02:48 AM (GMT)

No, your completely right Jens tell me people when did the bible which you say is the word of god first appear? over a thousand years AFTER Jesus (the real word of god) appeared the bible points us to Jesus its our job (yes works, faith without works is dead- IE wont save you from Hell) to obey and follow him if we wish to be saved

Romans 6:16
Donâ€™t you know that when you offer yourselves to someone as obedient slaves, you are slaves of the one you obeyâ€"whether you are slaves to sin, which leads to death, or to obedience, which leads to righteousness?

trk - April 18, 2011 02:27 PM (GMT)

To the original poster:

Jesus is God, and Jesus only saves by us believing in Jesus. Not by works, not with any works. Romans 4:5 makes this abundantly clear. We are never to add any works to Jesus' salvation.

Works are for rewards but never for salvation.

Works are never to be added to salvation, because Jesus did all the work Himself for our salvation. Jesus paid for all our sins with His death on the cross, and then Jesus resurrected from the dead!

I know better. I am not a Jehovah's Wittneses but i, as a true christian must be a witness of Jehovah.

But I obey the scriptures when the apostle said: "Prove all things" and i will "hold fast" only "which is good".

I have investigated all the christian denominations and i found bad and good things in all. ¿Did any one know and cares that the Jehovah's Witnesses denounced and exposed the Catholic Hierarchy, the Catholic Action, and the Knight of Columbus? We are forced to believe that a freemason as George Washington could repent but we must not believe (and we are forced to not believe) that a possible masonic influenced organization can not also repent? This is against the doctrine of christianism that preach forgiveness.

About your most mediocres articles of the links. ¿Did not you know that there is a difference between the hebrew word " ’El Schad·dái " and " ’El Guib·bóhr "?

In Isaiah 9:6 refering to Jesus Christ the hebrew word ’El Guib·bóhr is used, no the hebrew word ’El Schad·dái which appears only in reference to God Yahweh as in Genesis 17:1.

Can you please make your own investigations preaching to Yahweh for wisdom?
Or you want to follow mens instead of follow God?

About the topic of "all creations" and, about the topic of "gods" and "God", even the apostle made it clear in 1 Corinthians 8:5,6 in the King James Bible Version:

For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth, (as there be gods many, and lords many,)

But to us [there is but] one God, the Father, of whom [are] all things, and we in him; and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom [are] all things, and we by him.

Enough said! Becouse there is a difference between "OF" and "BY", becouse Christ helped God to create all things, and becouse his sacrifice we are living right now.

James 2:14-26 (KJVB)

What [doth it] profit, my brethren, though a man say he hath faith, and have not works? can faith save him?

If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food,

And one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be [ye] warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body; what [doth it] profit?

Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone.

Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works.

Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well: the devils also believe, and tremble.

But wilt thou know, O vain man, that faith without works is dead?

Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar?

Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect?

And the scripture was fulfilled which saith, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness: and he was called the Friend of God.

Ye see then how that by works a man is justified, and not by faith only.

Likewise also was not Rahab the harlot justified by works, when she had received the messengers, and had sent [them] out another way?

For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also.

The JWs beliefs may be in question, but they sure did suffer political persecution in the United States for their door to door preaching, handing out pamphlets. In 138 cases involving JWs, appeals, and petitions have been presented to the U.S. Supreme Court. For 111 of these cases Hayden Covington served as attorney. The JWs eventually Won, and so did the 1st Amendment. It is well established that the Roman Catholic Church was behind the attempts to shut them down, and the JWs to this day point to Rome and the Vatican as the whore. Not only that, but JWs have gone to prison rather than join the military and go to wars and kill other humans. So regardless of Biblical interpretations differences, giving them a bum rap is unjustified in my opinion. Some of you 1611ers just might be shocked to meet a few of them in paradise.

Edit; and that persecution is not just in the u.s., They suffered mightily in Germany, Romania, Japan, Korea, Ghana, Russia, etc. etc.. And those countries cases were all pushed by the Roman Catholic church. And when we look at all of the churches Universally tethered up to the Vatican, their not there.

So don't be surprised when you are in the camps about to be beheaded and you meet JWs in there with you.

The belief in Jesus Christ is in ones Heart regardless of the church they stubbornly attend. All religions have evil doers in their midst, yet all doers in those religions do not do evil.

While feuding with others I often wonder is this person going to be beheaded later. after the great taking away, and those who turn to Christ after wards are beheaded. Am I fighting against one of those future Saints, who learned later and endures the guillotine..

Maybe I am going to be passed over at rapture, I don't know.

I hope not. I don't like guillotines.

My opinion
I will stand for the King James Bible, not because is PERFECT, but because it is the Best English translation out there. Modern bible publishers are trying to convince people that those are better but at the same time, they are trying to deceive people in changing the word of God with the word of man by giving us vatican nonsense. And that makes me Angry when some people who say that the (spanish) Reina Valera 1960 is better modern translation than the 1865 or the 1909 without finding out all these ALEXANDRIAN NONSENSE within.

Narrow: ¿You think that i don't know or remember this? I posted here my discovery about the greek texts compiled by the jesuits Bover and Merk... But ¿have you investigated that texts as i did? Do it and after that talk to me about this again. Please read the PDF that i posted ¿How can be jesuits puppets if they directly attacked the Jesuits? I must to believe that the Knight of Columbus and the Jesuit Order used the JW's to denounce and expone the evil actions of the firsts?

Also, that was the first edition of 1950 but the standard version is made from almost all the texts and manuscripts that exists, I didn't believe this after i made my own study.

By example, in the NWTBV were used: "Ancient Greek Uncial manuscripts: Ephraemi Syri rescriptus, of Beza, Alexandrinus, Sinaiticus, Vaticanus, Greek text of Griesbach, of Erasmus, of Stephanus, Wescott and Hort, Coptic versions, Siriac versions, Arminian versions, Consonantic Hebrew Text, Masoretic Text, Codex Leningradis, Biblia Hebraica, Stutgartensian Hebrew Bible, Aleppo Codex, Peterburg Codex, Death Sea Rolls, etc, etc."

¿Did anyone knows here that the KJBV is based in the Latin Catholic Vulgate?
¿Did anyone knows here that the "Textvs Receptvs"was made based in only 8 Manuscripts from the X century?

Again: "Prove all things"

So I have a question here;

Lets say a Mormon man, and JW man, live by their interpretations, and these men follow the Bible, the Commandments, and they believe in Creation, they know not to worship false idols, they end prayer in Jesus Christs name.

Are you actually going to be so bold as to say they are going to hell? Basically for and interpretation error ? Other than that they have lived moral decent lives.

Some of these people I know, and they would not even lift a hand to another who might be beating them.

And you guys are sending them to hell.

I'm glad that decision is not yours to make.

Thats good, becouse i don't believe also in Hell... I mean, the Hell exists, and also the "Infernum", which are the same, but i don't give to this words the theological meaning but the etymological and correct meaningthat it actually have.

By example, the greek word "HADES" occurs 11times in the Greek "Testament" (lit. "Pact"), and is improperly translated in the common version 10 times by the word "Hell". It is the word used in the Septuagint as a translation of the hebrew word "She-ól", denoting the abode or world of the dead, and means literally "that which is in darkness, hidden, invisible, or obscure". As the word Hades did not come to the Hebrew from any clasical source, or with any classical meaning, but through the Septuagint, as a translation of their own word "sheól", therefore in order to properly define its meaning recourse to must be had to the various passages where it is found. The Hebrew word "sheól" is translated by "hades", in the Septuagint, 60 times out of 63; and though "sheól" in many places, may signify "keber", the "grave", as the common receptacle of the dead, yet it has the more general meaning of "death", "a state of death", "the dominion of death".

To translate "hades" by the word "hell", as is done 10 times out of 11 in the New Testament (lit. New Pact), is very improper, unless it has the Saxon meaning of "helan", to cover, attached to it. The primitive signification of "hell" only denoting what was "secret or concealed", perfectly corresponds with the Greek term "hades" and its hebrew equivalent "sheól", but the theological definition to it at the present day by no means expresses it.

Also, ¿Is not believe in the theological meaning of "hell" believe in the immortality of the soul? ¿and that don't deny the doctrine of resurrection? If Jesus is the Resurrection, therefore to believe in the theological meaning of hell is deny Christ, and Who is the liar but he who denies that Jesus is the Christ? (1 John 2:22).

Let's no mix the 1st Death with the 2nd Death. The Lake of Fire is just eternal destruction.

Wolveshater - April 18, 2011 08:40 PM (GMT)

And I agree with this http://www.jesus-is-savior.com/False%20Rel...itnesses/jw.htm

But once again there are thousands of people in those faiths totally unaware of this, and if shown it, they would think it was intended to destroy their faith in Jesus Christ.

I know some of these folks personally, and they do not have horns sticking out their heads, and if they thought this true they would be horrified.

A Mormon friend that fits the description I posted above, showed me a letter he received inviting him to join Masonry, I knew where the letter originated, but he does not know, he thinks an oil billionaire we both know sent it to him.

I don't believe Jesus is going to toss him into hell.

The true Biblical Jesus does.

Jehovas Witnesses' Jesus is a fallen angel (that demonic inspired cult says Jesus is actually Michael the archangel). The JW's Jesus can not save anyone. Just like the Mormon Jesus, the Muslim Jesus, the "New Age" Jesus, the Roman Catholic Jesus (for the most part), and on and on it goes.

Who cares if the JW's talked against Roman Catholicism, when both cults are actually sending MILLIONS to hell. Seriously .....

Matthew {7:13} Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide [is] the gate, and broad [is] the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: {7:14} Because strait [is] the gate, and narrow [is] the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.

King James Bible Verses Stating Jesus is God

Statement	Verse
Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us.	Matthew 1:23
And there came a fear on all: and they glorified God, saying, That a great prophet is risen up among us; and, That God hath visited his people.	Luke 7:16
In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.	John 1:1
No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared him.	John 1:18
Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill him, because he not only had broken the sabbath, but said also that God was his Father, making himself equal with God.	John 5:18
I and my Father are one.	John 10:30
The Jews answered him, saying, For a good work we stone thee not; but for blasphemy; and because that thou, being a man, makest thyself God.	John 10:33

Ye call me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am.	John 13:13
Jesus said to him, "...He who has seen Me has seen the Father; how do you say, `Show us the Father?'"	John 14:9
And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was.	John 17:5
And Thomas answered and said unto him [Jesus], My Lord and my God.	John 20:28
...lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them.	2 Corinthians 4:4
...Christ Jesus: Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God:	Philippians 2:5,6
...after Christ. For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily.	Colossians 2:9
God was manifest in the flesh...	1 Timothy 3:16
...our Lord Jesus Christ: Which in his times he shall shew, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords;	1st Timothy 6:14,15

God...Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son... Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person...	Hebrews 1:1-3
But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever...	Hebrews 1:8
...the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ;	Titus 2:13
Simon Peter... through the righteousness of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ:	2nd Peter 1:1
I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.	Revelation 1:8
And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS.	Revelation 19:16

May you please spell it out for me, I can't quite understand what it says in Titus 2:13. Yes, I'm being awfully sarcastic.

... and remember Revelation 1:8, who is the Alpha & Omega ? Read the verse before (v. 7) - who will come in the clouds ? If you can guess who we are talking about in verse 7, then who do you think we are talking about in Revelation 8 ?

As clear as crystal.

> The most important reason that Jesus has to be God is that if He is not God, His death would not have been sufficient to pay the penalty for the sins of the world (1 John 2:2). A created being, which Jesus would be if He were not God, could not pay the infinite penalty required for sin against an infinite God. Only God could pay such an infinite penalty. Only God could take on the sins of the world (2 Corinthians 5:21), die, and be resurrected, proving His victory over sin and death.

1 Timothy {3:16} And without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh*, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.*

Why do you think verses like this have been taken out in the new Bible perversions ?! One of Satan's main goal is to deny, pervert, obscure and confuse people about the TRUE Jesus (who is God the Father, God the Son & God the Holy Spirit, these three being one and the same).

1 John {5:7} For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one.

Kalogni, i am making the same study from some weeks ago in spanish... I will present it here when finished. Although i think that you or any here don't really cares about what i said and prooved... i have said a lot of things and you still don't had refuted nothing. I presented very reasonable proof that the Theological understanding of Hell is a human doctrine but you still don't counter refuted with the scriptures none of that. You just say "you are wrong, you are wrong, you are wrong". ¿Who cares about some people fighting against the Catholic/Satanic Hierachy?... hummm ¿YAHWEH God? If it's not important why you do it? Why i do it? You say Lord, Lord; but i say Yahweh, Yahweh.

Maybe the next week will be ready the study.

Kalongi,

Then those who have failed the hard works of linguistics researching are dead meat. Their hearts are foul and not worthy because they thought they followed Christ but instead were tricked by a superior invisible being. Man, Christ is one ruthless tyrant according to you. And here I thought praying to Christ for forgiveness was enough, Nope, we all need to be able to read and understand several languages in order to avoid being burned in fire for ever. Sounds like works to me.

“And ye, in putting them [the departed souls] in heaven, hell, and purgatory, destroy the arguments wherewith Christ and Paul prove the resurrection…. And again, if the souls be in heaven, tell me why they be not in as good case as the angels be? And then what cause is there of the resurrection?” — William Tyndale, An Answer to Sir Thomas More’s Dialogue (Parker’s 1850 reprint), bk. 4, ch. 4, pp. 180, 181.

However, I permit the Pope to establish articles of faith for himself and for his own faithful—such are: That the bread and wine are transubstantiated in the sacrament; that the essence of God neither generates nor is generated; that the soul is the substantial form of the human body that he [the pope] is emperor of the world and king of heaven, and earthly god; that the soul is immortal; and all these endless monstrosities in the Roman dunghill of decretals—in order that such as his faith is, such may be his gospel, such also his faithful, and such his church, and that the lips may have suitable lettuce and the lid may be worthy of the dish.—Martin Luther, Assertio Omnium Articulorum M. It doesn't matter what any of these men said. They're just men.

The Bible is what matters, and the Bible clearly teaches that heaven is eternal, and the lake of fire is eternal torment, and that only believing in Jesus as God and as the Messiah, is what gets a person into heaven. It is no longer possible to be saved after a person dies.

You are right and you are wrong. It does not matter what a man says, and only matter what the Bible says. But ¿The Bible says that the Hell is a place of torment, or a place of death? Tyndale haves a good point here, if the soul it's alive and suffering in the Lake of Fire, then the Soul is Immortal, and this goes totally against the Christian Doctine of Resurrection, such Resurrection which is Christ. There is a clear difference between the 1st (Hell) and 2nd (Lake of Fire) Death.

The one who dies without Jesus, is sent to hell. They are later sent to the lake of fire for eternal torment. There is no second chance inbetween. So being in hell means going to the lake of fire.

> The one who dies without Jesus, is sent to hell. They are later sent to the lake of fire for eternal torment. There is no second chance inbetween. So being in hell means going to the lake of fire.

No, the Bible don't say that:

Revelation 20:14

And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death.

trk - April 26, 2011 11:04 PM (GMT)

Revelation 20:10 "And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever."

The lake of fire is eternal torment. I can find you dozens of more verses like this one, where Jesus says they are tormented forever and ever, and other sources. Death in the Bible is not ceasing to exist. Death in the Bible never means that. That's the world's definition.

Death in the Bible is passing onto the next place. And the lake of fire is eternal torment. The second death is eternal torment.

Notice how you quoted verse 14 and skipped over verse 10. Verse 10, which totally contradicts your wrong doctrines. But that's the issue with arguing with those that (right now) don't want the truth. They ignore the verses that are clearly against their doctrine.

kalongi - April 26, 2011 11:05 PM (GMT)

Ah, yes .. quoting Revelation 20:14 and "forgetting" about verse 10 lol. How suitable.

"MARTHIN LUTHER AND TYNDALE DID NOT BELIEVE IN HELL"

..... and ? (what's with the CAPS btw). Scripture is the authority, not the reformers or any other man.

Eternal torment in hell is a reality for the unsaved (as bad as it sounds, as hard as it is to accept it).

Matthew {25:46} And these shall go away into everlasting punishment: but the righteous into life eternal.

The righteous (those who are saved, made righteous by the blood of the lamb) will have eternal life. Those who are not will go into everlasting punishment. Both are eternal, no doubts here ... now,

... question, if God does not provide justice (ie. hell), then what kind of "punishment" is that in Matthew 25:46 ? If, let's say, Hitler, just dies ... and stays dead ... he is actually SAVED !!!! If Hitler could come back to life, knowing he'd go into everlasting torment in hell, then it's safe to say that he'd come up with something along the lines: "NO, please SAVE me and kill my soul !!!".

What blasphemy to Jesus His finished work on the cross.

I mean .... we, who are in Christ, are saved (saved from what btw ?), and those who will, apparently, not have any kind of justice done to them, will be saved too !!! lol.....

Saved from what is the question.

If I can go on killing people left and right, sin (commit crimes) against the living God ... yes, when the unsaved sins, he commits crimes against the living God (an eternal crime against an eternal being), as per Psalms {51:4} Against thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done [this] evil in thy sight: that thou mightest be justified when thou speakest, [and] be clear when thou judgest.

... then it's actually a blessing to stay dead for eternity. Afterall, "I" hate God, I didn't want Him, I didn't care for Him, for His creation, for anything related to Him.

Jude {1:7} Even as Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities about them in like manner, giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire*.*

Eternal torment in hell is a reality, like it or not. Not a pleasant doctrine to discuss, that is for sure, but it's the way it is.

2 Thessalonians {1:9} Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power

What kind of punishment is .... eternal death (not Biblical) ?!?! If I don't want eternal life, if I don't want to actually see God and/or be in His presence for eternity, then I am BLESSED after I die and experience ... eternal death (so much for being "tormented").

God to Hitler: "eternal death for you Hitler !"

Hitler to God: "Thank you !"

Revelation {14:10} The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb: {14:11} And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name.

Hey, look ... those who will take the mark of the beast will have eternal death / cease to exist (false doctrine of anihilation), but apparently they will have no rest ... day nor night ! lol.....

You can now post more books (.pdf format) while avoiding true scriptures being posted and avoid all kinds of logic.

edit: Max, once again you quoted Luke 16, but stopped at verse 22. Let's read the rest, shall we (you have already done this with Revelation 20:10-14, only posting verse 14).

Luke {16:23} And in hell he lift up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom. {16:24} And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame. {16:25} But Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things: but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented. {16:26} And beside all this, between us and you there is a great gulf fixed: so that they which would pass from hence to you cannot; neither can they pass to us, that [would come] from thence. {16:27} Then he said, I pray thee therefore, father, that thou wouldest send him to my father's house: {16:28} For I have five brethren; that he may testify unto them, lest they also come into this place of torment. {16:29} Abraham saith unto him, They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them. {16:30} And he said, Nay, father Abraham: but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent.

If Eclesiastes was even talking about eternal hell / anihilation ...

... then, if the "dead know not any thing", does that include all who are saved too ?!?!?

I thought those who are in Christ would have .... eternal life, you know ...after physical death, but apparently all will be anihilated. sigh lol.

Then again, I wonder how can there be "weeping and gnashing of teeth" if you are ..... anihilated. Having a hard time understanding this, but surely you can enlighten us, Max.

Matthew {13:41} The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; {13:42} And shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.

The Parable of the Rich and Lazarus Is just that, a Parable.

Shame of you. The King James Bible Version says in Psalm 16:10 and in Acts 2:31 that Jesus was not in the Sheol or Hades (as says in the originals manuscripts) but that he was in "Hell".

trk - April 27, 2011 02:32 AM (GMT)

The rich man and Lazarus is not a parable. Parables never use literal names. It is a literal account of what happened to two literal people.

The posting of some verses, and avoiding neighboring verses in the same chapter, proves that you are not being faithful with the Scriptures.

That the Parable of the Rich man and Lazarus is not a parable is a Papal Lie of the Medieval Ages.

I have also refuted your misinterpretations of the other verses.
The fact is that you believe that Jesus Christ was not dead but in Hell and some of you have even mocked the NAME OF GOD, YAHWEH.

trk - April 27, 2011 03:28 AM (GMT)

God's Name is Yahweh. Jesus is Yahweh.

I know what the Bible says. You cut sections of Scripture apart, and pick and choose what you want. You approach Scripture that way, you just pick the parts you want.

I go with the whole Bible. And I'm done with this discussion.

> Wasn't the Apocrypha in the King James?
>
> The King James translators never considered the Apocrypha the word of God. As books of some historical value (e.g., details of the Maccabean revolt), the Apocrypha was sandwiched between the Old and New Testaments as an appendix of reference material. This followed the format that Luther had used. Luther prefaced the Apocrypha with a statement:
>
> "Apocrypha--that is, books which are not regarded as equal to the holy Scriputres, and yet are profitable and good to read."
> King James Version Defended page 98.
> In 1599, TWELVE YEARS BEFORE the King James Bible was published, King James said this about the Apocrypha:
>
> "As to the Apocriphe bookes, I OMIT THEM because I am no Papist (as I said before)..."

King James Charles Stewart

In his A Premonition to All Most Mightie Monarches," King James said this-- "...Is it a small corrupting of the Scriptures to make all, or the most part of the Apocrypha of equall faith with the canonicall Scriptures...?"

Not only this, but the sixth article of the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England (1571 edition--the church of England published the Authorized (King James) Version) states that the Old and New Testaments are the Bible and the apocrypha is not:

In the name of the Holy, we do vnderstande those canonical bookes of the olde and newe Testament, of whose authoritie was never any doubt in the Churche...

Now concerning the apocrypha it states,

And the other bookes, (as Hierome sayeth), the Churche doth reade for example of life and instruction of manners: but yet doth it not applie them to establish any doctrene.

Philip Schaff, Creeds of Christendom. Grand Rapids: Baker Book House, 1977, Vol. III, pp. 489-491.

The Hampton Court Document came as a result of the famous Hampton Court Conference of 1604 when King James authorized the translation of the Bible that would one day bear his name. Concerning the apocrypha and the Church of England, it states--

The Apocrypha, that hath some repugnancy to the canonical scriptures, shall not be read...

The Apocrypha began to be omitted from the Authorized Version in 1629. Puritans and Presbyterians lobbied for the complete removal of the Apocrypha from the Bible and in 1825 the British and Foreign Bible Society agreed. From that time on, the Apocrypha has been eliminated from practically all English Bibles--Catholic Bibles and some pulpit Bibles excepted.

The "apocrypha" isn't from God at all.

The truth is that the true Bible is 66 Books only.

As you are probably aware, "christening" is also not from God, so it does nothing.

The truth is that Jesus is God and is the Messiah. Jesus died upon the cross for all of our sins, and Jesus resurrected from the dead. Jesus is the only way to heaven, so to get into heaven, believe in Jesus! John 3:16! That easy!

In reading the Bible, start with the Book of John.

I am with you brother on christening and the true baptism, my parents much as love them are not practising Christians and only had me done because everyone else did at the time.
I have read John and Matthew. The Sermon on the Mount reduced me to tears and blew me away. No wonder they were astonished.

I own a copy of Martyrs Mirror and the book is a giant brick. Whats most humbling is that it really doesn't do any justice to the vast persecution of Christians throughout history because it's only scratching the surface. Think of all the persecution that took place that didn't get reported/documented.

I hear that China supposedly has 100 million Christians in their underground (not government approved) Church. In an interview I recently listened to, a missionary said that they teach members of the Church how to get out of handcuffs and how to jump off 2-3 story buildings if they're being chased. Many Christians who get captured end up as slave labor in sweatshops. The official government "Christian" church doesn't allow preaching on things like the book of Revelation or the Genesis creation account.

Colombia (MNN) ¯ 28 indigenous Colombian Christians have been imprisoned since October for refusing to denounce their faith.

Logan Maurer with International Christian Concern says the central government gave local governors relative autonomy. "They have devolved power to a governor there who has outlawed Christianity. He has said that if anybody there is a Christian, they're going to go to prison."

With that announcement, the local governor over the Kogui (ko-gee) called the Christians together on October 27th. "He was holding a meeting to discuss this issue," said Maurer, "and he surprised these Christians by saying, 'You're all under arrest.'"

The governor wants them to maintain more of the traditional identity to the tribal region, which includes animism. The group is still being held because they refuse to reconvert.

Christian Solidarity Worldwide says at last report, two of the kidnapped infants were seriously ill. The governor and his allies also humiliated non-Christian leaders who had supported the Christians in the community and protected them from being expelled.

What's especially odd about this case is that the Colombian government has apparently refused to act on behalf of the Christians. That's prompting outcry from human rights watchdog groups. Maurer adds that the Colombian government is "willing to ignore its own Constitution and its international agreements, including the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the ICCPR, the ICSECR, and the American Convention on Human Rights--all of which explicitly protect the right of individuals to choose their own faith and to convert of their own free will."

ICC remains concerned about what this means for other believers. Maurer explains, "There's over 100 individuals that consider themselves Christians and would be affected. If this governor continues to imprison men, women and children, as he has done, you could be looking at up to 100 people in prison for their faith."

Pray for the release of these believers. Pray that their captors will see the love of Christ and repent. Pray for other Christian members of the Kogui community under fire in Colombia.

Pakistan Muslim Extremists Kill Christian; Injure Evangelists

Tuesday, December 22, 2009 (4:26 am)

SARGODHA, PAKISTAN (Worthy News)-- Christians on Tuesday, December 22, were mourning a Christian man who was shot dead by Muslim extremists while other believers recovered from injuries after an apparent Muslim attack on an evangelistic meeting showing the Jesus Film in Pakistan's tense Punjab province.

Patras Masih was shot because he refused to recant his faith in Christ, and died from gunshot wounds on December 3 in Karol village, his family said.

Locals said Masih had received an ultimatum after being falsely accused of killing a Muslim, identified as Anees Mahammad.

He was allegedly told he would not be killed if he abandoned Christianity and "embrace Islam." However, "My son bravely refused to recant Christianity and clung to Christ," said the man's father, Gulzar Masih, his voice trembling.

After his son refused to recite the Islamic conversion creed, three Muslims known locally sprayed bullets at his chest, killing him instantly, Masih explained.

DOZENS ATTACK

The attack came shortly before elsewhere in Punjab province dozens of Muslim villagers, armed with clubs and axed, attacked a showing of the film "Jesus" about the birth, life, death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, witnesses said. At least three part-time evangelists and four spectators were reportedly injured in the December 9 attack near the city of Sargodha.

Christians have expressed concerns about the alleged refusal by local police to investigate these cases. Police had no comment, although Pakistan's government has made clear it wants to crackdown on Islamic extremism.

Speaking from hospital, Evangelists Ishtiaq Bhatti, Imtiaz Ghauri and Kaleem Ghulam suggested they were surprised by the attack of some 50 Muslim villagers as they were screening the film within the premises of a Catholic Church. "They threatened to kill us and left us injured. They also broke all our appliances and took away funds" collected by fellow worshipers, Bhatti said.

"Muslim men also injured those Christian villagers who tried to intervene and stop them," he added.

The violence underscored mounting religious tensions in Punjab province and other areas of Pakistan, where Christians form a minority. (With reporting by Worthy News' Jawad Mazhar from Pakistan).

Report: Muslims Attack Christian Town in North Iraq on Christmas

Mon, Dec. 28 2009 05:38 PM EDT
By Ethan Cole | Christian Post Reporter
http://www.christianpost.com/article/20091...tmas/index.html

A group of Shiite Muslims attacked an Assyrian Christian town in Northern Iraq on Christmas morning, according to reports over the weekend.

The assailants, a minority ethnic group called Shabak, took over the entry checkpoint into the Christian-dominated town of Bartilla, about 28 miles north of Mosul, and tore down Christmas decorations in the Assyrian market, reported Assyrian International News Agency (AINA).

Witnesses say they also harassed a Christian procession headed toward St. Mary Church, throwing rocks at participants.

Around 100 armed Shabaks later tried to enter St. Mary Church but church guards reportedly blocked them from entering, leading to a conflict and an exchange of gunfire that left four Christians wounded.

Assyrians in Bartilla, who are unarmed, fear more attacks against their community in the near future.

According to AINA, Christians in Bartilla say they did not provoke the attack and have in the past worked with Shabaks to advocate for the rights of ethnic minorities in Iraq.

The Shabak assailants are residents of Bartilla and were said to have been led by Hassan Ganjou, who is allegedly a former member of the Mahdi Army (JAM) and the Islamic Supreme Council of Iraq, and now works as a security guard for a Shabak parliament member.

The attack in Bartilla followed a church bombing at St. Thomas Church in Mosul on Dec. 23 that killed two men and wounded five others.

Since 2003, more than 200 Christians have been killed in Iraq, and since June 2004, some 65 churches have been attacked or bombed, including 40 in Baghdad, 19 in Mosul, five in Kirkuk, and one in Ramadi.

Human rights groups such as Hudson Institute's Center for Religious Freedom have criticized the Iraqi government for not doing enough to protect the country’s Christian minority.

The U.N. High Commission for Refugees estimates that since 2003, some 250,000 to 500,000 Christians have left the country, which translates to about half the Christian population leaving within six years.

North Korea and Iran top list of worst persecutors of Christians

Jan 7, 2010 1:39 | Updated Jan 7, 2010 2:11

North Korea, Iran and Saudi Arabia are the worst persecutors of Christians around the world, according to a ranking released Wednesday by a Christian mission agency.

In an annual assessment of the 50 worst state persecutors of Christians by California-based Open Doors USA, North Korea topped the list for the seventh year in a row. Iran moved up to the second position on Open Doors' World Watch List, bumping Saudi Arabia down from last year, to the third slot.

"Maryam Rustampoor and Marzieh Amirzadeh were arrested simply for being Christians and refusing to recant their faith in Jesus Christ," said Carl Moeller, president and CEO of Open Doors USA. Although they've been released, he said, "Hundreds of other believers still remain at risk inside Iran."

The rankings, based on a 53-question survey of Open Doors contacts, field workers and church leaders, focus on legal restrictions, attitudes and incidents of persecutions. This year, Somalia moved up to No. 4, from No. 5, because in April the parliament voted unanimously to institute Islamic law. Other countries in the top 10 include Afghanistan, Yemen, Mauritania, Laos and Uzbekistan.

Open Doors USA noted that eight of the 10 worst persecutors have Islam as their dominant religion, while two - North Korea and Laos - are communist countries. Out of 50 countries on the list, 35 have Islamic governments.

Moeller said it was no surprise that North Korea topped the list. "There is no other country in the world where Christians are persecuted in such a horrible and systematic manner," he said, noting that three generations of a family are often imprisoned when one relative is incarcerated.

According to the World Watch List report released Wednesday: "The North Korean regime especially targeted secret Christians all over North Korea to arrest and kill them. They have arrested and tortured Christians in various horrible ways, such as sometimes using them as a means of testing biological or chemical weapons."

In Iran, where protestors have clashed with government officials for months following the contested re-election of President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, Open Doors said a wave of arrests of Christians that began in 2008 grew stronger in 2009, resulting in 85 arrests. Speculating that the arrests were meant to distract attention from internal problems, the report noted: "Under the judicial interpretations of Sharia law, any Muslim who leaves Islam to embrace another religion faces the death penalty" in Iran, and many churches are monitored by secret police.

Other changes to the list include Mauritania jumping to the top 10 for the first time. Open Doors said it moved up 10 spots because of the murder of a Christian aid worker in June; the arrest and torture of 35 Christians in July, and the arrest of 150 sub-Saharan Christians in August.

Tahe list included the Palestinian Authority and Gaza, at No. 46, below Egypt at 20 and Libya at 22. Syria was ranked 41, Jordan 39 and Cuba came in at 38. Israel did not make the list of 50.

Tajikistan Churches Face Closures, Uncertain Future

Tuesday, January 5, 2010 (2:38 am)
By Worthy News Europe Bureau in Budapest with Worthy News' Stefan J. Bos
http://www.worthynews.com/7291-tajikistan-...ncertain-future

DUSHANBE/BUDAPEST (Worthy News)-- Devoted Christians in several areas of Tajikistan faced uncertainty Tuesday, January 5, over the future of their churches after the former Soviet republic introduced a new religion law that the United States has criticized as highly restrictive.

The Religion Law, which came into forces on New Year's Day, empowers the government to impose stricter control of religious groups in the former Soviet republic that tolerates only the state-approved version of Islam.

Under the legislation groups that choose not to register with authorities or fail to gain re-registration will become illegal. All Christian and other “religious organisations” need to provide the national government with written confirmation of their existence from their local administration.

Christians say however that local officials “have been slow” at issuing confirmation documents or have “deliberately” refused to do so for groups that they did not like.

Less than half of the religious organizations known to authorities have been registered, according to estimates by the Culture Ministry's Head Department for Religious Affairs (HDRA).

TERRITORIAL RESTRICTIONS

HDRA officials have also imposed territorial restrictions on the activity of some non-Muslim groups, including Christian churches, during the re-registration process, according to Christians familiar with the procedures.

The measures cast doubts about the future of groups such as the Council of Churches Baptists which refuses on principle to register with the State. Last month, a Council congregation in Dushanbe was reportedly already banned by a local court.

The new law also imposes censorship on religious literature and restricts performing “rituals” to state-approved venues, making it even more difficult for evangelical missionaries and other Christians to openly evangelize.

In Tajikistan, religion has been a particularly thorny issue since President Imomali Rakhmon defeated an alliance of Islamists and liberals in a 1990s civil war.

Rakhmon has defended his decision to sign the controversial legislation and other measures. Worried about the resurgent Taliban militant group in neighboring Afghanistan, he says his main goal is to maintain political and economic stability in his impoverished homeland.

POLITICAL DISSENT

However countries across former Soviet Central Asia, including Tajikistan, have been criticized in the West for using the threat of religious extremism as an excuse to crack down on political dissent and religious groups outside state-sponsored Islam.

Protestant and Jewish communities are the main non-Muslim groups that have been targeted, according to rights activists. In 2008, Tajikistan even demolished the country's only synagogue to make way for a presidential palace.

In a gesture apparently aimed at sweetening the decision, Khasan Asadullozoda, Rahmon's brother-in-law, donated a new building to the Jewish community, community members said. "We are extremely grateful," said chief rabbi Mikhail Abdurakhmanov at the time. "Now we have a place of worship again."

The Religion Law seems part of Rahmon's efforts to strengthen his power base and “legalise harsh policies already adopted” towards the population, the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom said.

"The picture for religious freedom in Tajikistan is growing dim," said the Commission, which advises the U.S. government on religious freedom in the world. "The passage of this problematic new law could severely limit religious freedoms in Tajikistan," it added in a recent report.

Like elsewhere in Central Asia, most people in Tajikistan, a mountainous Persian-speaking nation, practice the Sunni branch of Islam, but there is a substantial Shi'ite minority.

Church attacks in Malaysia deepen racial tension

By EILEEN NG, Associated Press Writer Eileen Ng, Associated Press Writer – Mon Jan 11, 3:49 am ET
http://news.yahoo.com/s/ap/20100111/ap_on_...2h1cmNoYXR0YWNr

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia – Malaysia strongly condemned attacks on nine Christian churches and sought to assure foreign governments Monday of its commitment to religious freedom for minorities.

The unprecedented attacks have strained ties between minority Christians and the majority Malay Muslims, denting Malaysia's image as a moderate Muslim-majority country and raising questions about its political stability.

The attacks, which started Friday, were apparently triggered by a Dec. 31 High Court decision that overturned a government ban on Roman Catholics' using "Allah" to refer to their God in the Malay-language edition of their main newspaper, the Herald.

The ruling also applies to the ban's broader applications such as Malay-language Bibles, 10,000 copies of which were recently seized by authorities because they translated God as Allah. The government has appealed the verdict.

On Monday, the Home Ministry held a one-hour briefing for about 70 foreign diplomats to assure them that the situation was under control. The ministry pledged to "protect the sanctity" of the diversity of the country's religions and said police would step up patrols at churches and mosques around the country.

The ministry said the attacks were perpetrated by extremists who wanted to weaken the country's commitment to racial harmony, one of the key draws for foreign investors.

"These were not just attacks on houses of worship, they were attacks on the values and freedoms all Malaysians share," the statement said.

About 9 percent of Malaysia's 28 million people are Christian, most of whom are ethnic Chinese or Indian. Muslims make up 60 percent of the population and most are ethnic Malays.

The attacks are also a blow to racial unity espoused by Prime Minister Najib Razak under his "1Malaysia" slogan since taking power in April, and pose a new challenge for him as he seeks to strengthen his ruling coalition after its losses in 2008 general elections.

"It showed that, after 52 years of living together, nation building and national unity is in tatters," said Charles Santiago, an opposition member of Parliament. "The church attacks shattered notions of Malaysia as a model secular Muslim nation in the eyes of the international community.

The latest attack early Monday left the main entrance of the Borneo Evangelical Church in southern Negeri Sembilan state charred, said the Rev. Eddy Marson Yasir. He said it was unclear how the wooden door was burned, but there was no evidence that a firebomb had been used.

The church caters mostly to Christians from eastern Sabah and Sarawak states, who worship in the Malay language and use the word "Allah" to describe God.

Firebombs have been thrown at seven other churches nationwide since Friday, with another splashed with black paint. No one was hurt and the churches suffered little damage, except the Metro Tabernacle Church in a Kuala Lumpur suburb, which had its office on the first floor gutted by fire.

Some 130 Muslim voluntary groups have offered to help protect the churches by becoming the "eyes and ears" of the police, said Nadzim Johan, a representative of the groups.

Religious minorities in Malaysia have often complained about what they say is institutionalized religious discrimination as Islam takes on increasing dominance.

Jamil Khir Baharom, the Cabinet minister responsible for Islamic affairs, called on Christian leaders Monday to drop their claim to the use of "Allah" to help ease tensions, the national news agency Bernama reported.

"I urge them to be wary and responsible toward peace and security in Malaysia," Jamil was quoted as saying.

The Allah ban is unusual in the Muslim world. The Arabic word is commonly used by Christians to describe God in such countries as Egypt, Syria and Indonesia, the world's largest Muslim nation.

The Herald has been using Allah in its Bahasa Malaysia publication since 1995, but it was not until 2006 that it was warned by the government to stop using Allah to refer to God.

Some analysts say the government ban showed that Najib's ruling United Malays National Organization was using Islam to shore up its support among Malays, blurring the line between race and religion.

"Malaysia is heading toward dangerous waters," said James Chin, political science lecturer at Monash University in Malaysia. "Minorities are under siege and feel they don't have a place in Malaysia anymore," he said.

Islamists loot and burn protestant church in Algeria

Islamists looted and burned a Protestant church in Algeria, the congregation's leader said Monday, suggesting they were inspired by a recent wave of religious intolerance in the Arab and Muslim world.

The church - hosted in an apartment block in the city of Tizi Ouzou some 100 kilometers (60 miles) east of Algiers, the Algerian capital - was ransacked and set ablaze on Saturday night, several Algerian newspapers said.

The independent El Watan daily published a picture of a smoldering pile of pulpits and desks that had been brought outside for destruction. It quoted the pastor of the local Pentecostal community, Mustapha Krireche, as saying worshippers fled the temple because local police had left a gathering of anti-Christian rioters unchecked.

The congregation was worshipping in the apartment block because it had not received official government approval to operate a church.

The Man Who Would Keep Us Safe From Terrorists Would Rather Focus on Baptists Than Islamic Terrorists

Had Sen. Jim DeMint (R-SC) not put a hold on the nomination of Erroll Southers to be the head of TSA, he might have been confirmed by the Senate without any serious digging into his background.

We know, for example, that the White House now admits it did not vet Mr. Southers. In fact, were you to pass through a TSA checkpoint at the airport, you will have been more heavily vetted that Mr. Southers.

But now there is new and far more troubling information about Mr. Southers caught on video. According to Erroll Southers, pro-life Christians and our support of Jews is a bigger threat to national security than Al Qaeda.

Mr. Southers, in 2008, said he was more worried about “Christian identity” terrorist groups inside the U.S. than islamic terrorists. What are “Christian identity” terrorist groups? White-supremacists naturally. The KKK. And the Southern Baptist Convention.

Southers identifies pro-life groups and anti-government activists as particular problems.

Yes, you read that right. Mr. Southers is worried more about tea party activists than Islamic terrorists.

Mr. Southers also thinks that America itself is to blame for the terrorist attacks. Had we not sided with Israel and France, which he says is an anti-Islamic nation, we would not be attacked by Islamic extremists.

“Some people might argue that U.S. foreign policy exacerbates terrorism.”

Mr. Southers seems to at least understand the basics — we are being attacked by Islamic extremists. Surely he would, as head of the Transportation Safety Administration, institute some sort of profiling to stop Islamic extremists.

Not so fast. Erroll Southers says the thought that terrorists are all Middle-Eastern and Islamic is a misconception. According to Erroll Southers, we’ve overrated the threat posed by Islamic radicals and we need to focus on pro-lifers and Christians instead.

Lastly, never mind the guy setting off the Geiger counter. Southers wants us all to know the nuclear terrorism threat is quite small.

Newest attack on Christianity: Just shut up!

Noise ordinances latest weapon against churches

A Christian legal organization in the United Kingdom is reporting a skirmish victory in the latest war against Christians and their churches – the demand that they essentially be silent in their worship.

Cases have cropped up in recent months both in the U.K. as well as the United States in which governmental bodies have demanded that Christian groups essentially be silent – so that no one can hear their worship.

The Christian Legal Centre in the U.K. is reporting a victory in a battle, although the war remains.

The group said this week there has been a "last-minute out of court settlement" that will allow a 600-member church in London to continue its worship.

The Lambeth Council previously had issued a noise abatement notice to the All Nations Centre in Kennington which prevented the church from using any amplification for its worship music and its pastor's preaching.

No allowance was made for any of the seniors in the congregation, some of whom have hearing difficulties, officials said.

The noise abatement order was issued last fall without warning or discussion, shortly after the church, which has been in the same location for more than 45 years, began to publicize its services in its own neighborhood.

Onn Sein Kon, case manager at the Christian Legal Centre, said the organization has noticed an increasing number of attacks on churches because someone can hear the worship.

"Regrettably, our case load is increasing with councils issuing noise abatement notices as a means of curtailing or closing churches in London," Kon said. "Success in this case sends out a clear message that this method will not work. These churches are vibrant and growing and play a critical part in their communities."

"What is really going on here is action by secularists to try and restrict Christian freedom and expression in this country. We will do all we can at the Christian Legal Centre to oppose such discrimination," Kon said.

Andrea Williams, the director of the legal organization, said the real motivation behind such attacks is "hostility to the Christian message."

"The law is being used as a pretext to harass and silence Christian viewpoints not approved by the state," Williams said. "All Nations Church is simply trying to make Christianity relevant to 21st century Britain and it will be a great loss if the church, which is a great benefit to the community, has to curtail its activities and outreach programs."

"The complaint has nothing to do with the noise and everything to do with our faith," said the senior pastor, Abraham Sackey.

The church, with the help of the Christian Legal Centre, fought the order then said the damage already was done, even though the council suddenly withdrew the order.

"The church believes that the council's withdrawal is an attempt to conceal what happened and which has been ongoing for some time, not only in Lambeth but nationally. The leaders of the church maintained from the very outset that the notice had nothing to do with noise," Sackey said.

The legal organization said another church, Immanuel House of Worship in London, also has been "silenced" by the government because the sound of its worship drew a complaint from a single Muslim neighbor.

That's despite the fact the neighbor is living in what used to be a church house adjacent to the church itself.

The church in Walthamstow was targeted by a noise abatement order even though local government officials had tested – and approved – its sound mitigation plan.

Ade Ajike, a church trustee, reported that after a visit from a government environmental health officer, the officer warned, "the church had to keep the noise down so as not to offend the Muslims living in the area."

"He told us 'this is a Muslim borough, you have to tread carefully,'" Ajike reported about the 2009 dispute.

The church has since reduced its Sunday worship from four hours to two hours and 30 minutes, of which music is played for only about 45 minutes. Midweek services were changed so that no music was used, and Sunday evening services were reduced to one a month.

The church further eliminated the use of percussion from its worship.

"Despite all our action, the occupant, who actually lives in what was the former manse to the church, would stand at the church's main entrance door and shout his complaints and demand our pastor come out to speak to him during his sermon," Ajike said.

That church's case continues on appeal.

Williams said, "The charge of nuisance in law must involve proving there is a substantial interference with comfort. Surely, any reasonable person would think that singing for 40 minutes or so once or twice a week would not cross this threshold. Worship in a church is to be expected.

"The environmental health officers do not seem to have taken this fact into account. This is a vibrant Afro-Caribbean community of Christian believers whose worship of God is fundamental to the expression of their faith," Williams said.

A battle over a church's "noise" also developed just months ago in Phoenix, where three worship centers now have brought legal action against the city after one pastor was convicted of violating an ordinance.

WND reported at the time the lawsuit filed by the Alliance Defense Fund on behalf of St. Mark Roman Catholic Parish, First Christian Church and Christ the King Liturgical Charismatic Church.

The dispute focuses on the city ordinance that even city officials have conceded is vague, according to the lawsuit. Nevertheless, on the strength of neighbors' complaints and the existing statute, one pastor already has been convicted and sentenced for violating the city ordinance with church bells. The complaint alleges others now also are threatened.

"Churches shouldn't be punished for exercising their faith publicly," said ADF Senior Legal Counsel Erik Stanley. "The law is unconstitutionally vague and has been abused to silence a form of worship that has peacefully sounded through the streets of our nation since its founding.

"No one should be sentenced to jail and probation for doing what churches have traditionally done throughout history, especially when the sound of the church's bells does not exceed the noise level that the law allows for ice cream trucks," he said.

The complaint notes that city officials wrote into the noise ordinance an exemption allowing ice cream trucks to play loud music but refused to include a similar exemption for churches.

Bishop Rick Painter of Christ the King Church was convicted and sentenced to three years probation and a 10-day suspended jail sentence for allowing his church's electronic chimes to be heard. They now are restricted to Sundays and certain other specific occasions.

The Alliance Defense Fund earlier had battled in San Francisco over orders there that a team of Christians turn down their volume. The issue was the message from Christian evangelists who were preaching along the streets and in the parks of the city. They were cited for their noise even though authorities refused to address officials with another group that was using an 80-watt amplifier only 15 feet away from the Christians.

Christians hit by random arrests, arson

Threats follow holiday attack that killed 8

Christians facing the prospect of random murder on the streets of their own communities now also are dealing with the additional intimidation from the threat of arrest, arson and looting, according to ministries working within Egypt.

Coptic Orthodox Christians there are reporting the attacks have been on the rise ever since a gun assault on a church earlier this month that left eight people dead

Ministry officials say since the violence, which was directed at Christians, Egyptian State Security officers have been arresting Christian youths at random – an activity that is contributing to the instability in the region.

It was on Jan. 5 when eight members of the Coptic Orthodox Christian church in Naga Hammadi were murdered by three gunmen while they were leaving a Christmas Eve liturgy.

Several others were severely injured in the attack that coincided with the Christmas holiday. On the Coptic Orthodox calendar, Christmas falls in January.

According to eyewitness reports, three gunmen opened fire on attendees of the worship service as they exited the celebration. The youngest of those killed was only 17 years old.

What has followed has included the torching of homes belonging to Christians by rampaging Muslim mobs, related looting, and various attacks on Christians that even included, according to one witness, the beating of Christians by Egyptian Security forces.

According to reports on the U.S. Copts Association website, demonstrations in support of the Christians have been held – or are scheduled – across the United States as well as in France, Holland, Austria, New Zealand, Germany, Canada, Sweden, Greece and Australia.

But not Egypt. In a first-person story from reporter Ader Shukry posted on the Copts website, it was described how the "security apparatus" in the region of the gun attack confronted several hundred upset Christians rallying to protest the deaths.

When they were persuaded to disperse and go home, the report said, "the security forces allowed them to cross through the cordon … when some 200 of them had crossed, the security forces closed the cordon and caught the others. The scene turned bloody as they tried to escape but were harshly beaten and dragged on the ground by the security forces."

WND reported earlier when officials in the Christian community said the original attack was being blamed on Muslims who wanted revenge for accusations that an imam incited riots against Christians.

In that report, Ibn Misr, who monitors attacks on Coptic Christians through his Coptic news organization, told WND the dead were shot by an attacker who zoomed up to a church just as worshippers were leaving the Christmas Mass.

Revenge was a motivation because of an allegation of a sexual assault of a Muslim girl by a Christian man in November, officials said.

But Misr reported that investigators have concluded the assault report was manufactured. He said it's part of a campaign to spring violence on unsuspecting Christians.

Misr said Christians, including Bishop Anba Kyrollos, had raised the issue of Muslim imams reporting such allegations during weekly worship for their followers, and inciting "mobs to attack, burn, destroy, and loot Coptic homes and businesses and terrorize the whole Coptic population."

He said Kyrollos had sought accountability from a Muslim imam for inciting such riots and had refused demands to withdraw his complaint. The result was the attack on the church where he had just led worshippers in the Christmas event, Misr told WND.

"This is … meant to be a revenge against Bishop Kyrolos for his refusal to drop the charges," Misr said.

Reports now have confirmed that more than 100 Christian teens have been arrested since the fatal attacks – without warrants – by security forces.

The actions by Egypt are drawing concern from U.S. State Department.

"The United States is deeply concerned by [the] arrests of individuals traveling to the Egyptian town of Naga Hammadi to express support for those tragically killed and injured during Coptic Christmas celebrations on January 7," acting spokesman Mark C. Toner said in a prepared statement.

In Egypt, the constitution provides that Islam is the religion "of the state" and also serves as the "principle source of legislation" there.

Shukry's eyewitness account provides some chilling details of the attack.

"We found the blood of the victims still on the ground; the site was fenced with yellow ribbons so that no one would tread on it," Shukry said. "[One witness] told us of the murders and the violence which broke in front of Naga Hammadi public hospital when officials there rudely refused to admit the injured."

"Some of these were in critical conditions and thus had to be moved to Sohad public hospital was 200 kilometers away," Shukry wrote.

Three suspects have been arrested in the deaths.

The Assyrian International News Agency also has been documenting the rising level of attacks on Christians.

And according to FreeCopts.net, a teacher from Naga Hammadi, Anwar Samuel, had his home invaded by state security officers at 4 a.m. who were looking for his nephew, Mohareb. When he told the police that his nephew was in Kuwait, the officers arrested his three other nephews, Fadi, Tanios and Wael Milad.

Honestly!
How can people say that we are not in great tribulation right now?

Maybe cause the western countries are not having these kinds of slaughter in their streets.. but hey..give it time, it will happen.

Egypt's Christian Converts Face A Life On The Run

http://liveshots.blogs.foxnews.com/

Egyptian Maher El-Gowhary and his 15 year old daughter Dina never pray twice at the same church, never stay longer than a month in any one apartment. They are constantly under threat, always on the run because they converted to Christianity in a largely Muslim country.

Maher and Dina nervously agreed to meet us at a Church in Cairo. The pastor at the Church said he feared problems from the Egyptian authorities and while he agreed to have us watch his service, the pastor declined to speak to us about what is happening in Egypt and to the El-Gowhary's.

They tell their story out of fear and desperation. Born Muslims they chose to convert to the Christian Church after both claim they had religious visions.

Now Maher says "Muslims try to kill us, and will kill us if they find us."

Several religious fatwas have been issued for "spilling his blood" after Maher asked an Egyptian Court to legally recognize his conversion, so he can one day be buried as a Christian and so his daughter won't be forced into a marriage by her Muslim mother.

The court ruled a legal conversion to Christianity would threaten public order. His lawyer told us it's a dangerous double standard because in Egypt a Christian can convert to the Muslim faith in a week, but a Muslim cannot convert to the Christian faith.

Ten percent of Egypt is Christian, largely the Coptic Christians who increasingly say they face daunting discrimination and even death.

We had to hide our camera as we followed the El-Gowhary's because we were told if the authorities discovered we were preparing our story we would be arrested.

Religious tensions are running high in Egypt.

On January 6th, the Coptic Christmas eve, three Muslim men sprayed gunfire at a Church in Upper Egypt killing six Christians and wounding up to a dozen more. Christians rioted the next day and the area is still closed to outsiders including the press.

Human rights activist Hussein Bahjet say's Egypt has the potential to become like Lebanon because of growing sectarian violence.

"Civil strife that could engulf the country" Bahjet says.

The U.S. State Department reports respect of religious freedom in Egypt is declining, Christians are denied Government jobs, Pastors are threatened and harassed, Christians are increasingly attacks in what State describes as "a climate of impunity that encourages violence."

In some cases authorities turn a blind eye to attacks on Christians, in other cases there is evidence police sparked the attacks.

Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak has been largely silent about the problem, but this week he spoke out saying Egyptians must up-root "fanaticism and sectarianism, which threatens the unit of our nation."

Dina has written a letter to President Obama which has been published on Christian websites. She has been pulled out of school. She has only a blue jean jacket to stay warm and little food to eat. Her letter was a desperate plea. "I wrote that we are a minority Christian Community treated very badly and I want to tell President Obama to tell the Egyptian Government to treat us well."

Her father Mayer says he can't stay in Egypt anymore. He and his daughter are in such grave danger we can't report where they are in Egypt now, or where they are planning on moving tomorrow.

In recent days the two met with the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom in Cairo. They asked for refugee status to get out of Egypt.

A source at the Commission say's its a complicated matter because Dina has a Muslim mother and there are legal issues, but their request is being considered.

The Commission source also says because of religious discrimination in Egypt, last year the State Department down graded Egypt to being on a watch list. This year it could potentially be downgraded further to a Country of particular concern. That means the U.S. might even consider sanctions against a Country which receives some 2 billion dollars in U.S. aid every year.

As I write this Dina and her father are packing, moving to another area of Egypt. Out of money. And running of out hope.

Pastors on Edge After String of Texas Church Fires

Thursday, February 04, 2010
http://www.foxnews.com/story/0,2933,584822,00.html

TYLER, Texas — Eight Texas churches barely 150 miles apart have caught fire since New Year's Day, putting pastors and congregations on edge and on guard wondering whether theirs is next.

Authorities determined seven of those fires were intentionally set and they are investigating one that broke out Thursday as a possible arson. There have been no reported injuries or arrests, and federal officials aren't saying whether there's a connection.

Most people in these parts can't help but think they are.

"I think everybody is expecting more of these, to tell you the truth," said pastor David Mahfood, whose Baptist church in Tyler was destroyed in a Jan. 16 fire. "I think the worst is probably behind Tyler, but I'd worry about other cities."

Six of the seven arsons were just nine days apart, sending many congregations in east Texas scurrying to install security systems and prompting volunteers to keep close eyes on church properties from dusk to dawn. Federal and local authorities have released scant details and say they need more information.

"These things are painstakingly slow because a lot of evidence is lost in fire scenes," said Tom Crowley, a Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives spokesman. "They're still working it, but we could use more leads."

The fires have struck a region where Christian stations fill the radio dial and an area newspaper runs a Bible verse on the front page every day. All seven churches varied in size and denomination.

Some were Baptist. One was a red-bricked Christian Scientist's church nestled among stately homes. Another was a nondenominational church on the outskirts of town.

"The shock of it, it's so outside the norm," said Lloyd McCaskill, pastor of a church in Tyler that has given Mahfood's congregation a temporary home. "To try to get into the mindset, why would someone want to do this?"

Athens was the site of the first arson Jan. 1, and two more churches burned 10 days later in that town of about 12,000. After that, blazes blackened two churches about 35 miles away in Tyler. Days later, a church in Temple went up in flames, followed by one in Lindale, just north of Tyler. Thursday's fire was less than 50 miles away in Wills Point.

Two earlier fires at churches in the area came under suspicion, but authorities haven't determined whether arson was the cause.

Police have increased patrols near churches. In Tyler, a city of nearly 100,000 about 100 miles from Dallas, authorities also are sending fire trucks on burglary calls. Tyler fire Chief Neal Franklin would only say it was a precautionary move.

Some residents have moved swiftly to protect their churches.

Lloyd Young, who owns a small security alarm company in Tyler, has been updating churches' existing systems or loaning them what little extra equipment he has. He said he's helped about a dozen.

Young also was among those who stayed overnight at his church.

"The general feeling is it's too fresh to just let our guard down," Young said.

Authorities aren't factoring race as a reason for the arsons, but Mahfood considers them a hate crime.

"I don't really think you can look at this devastation and not realize this has hate as its impetus," he said as he stood in front of the charred rubble of his church. "We have probably experienced every emotion possible."

Mahfood said he plans to rebuild his church. Some congregations are still figuring out what to do.

"The church is pretty strongly sewn in with the community here," Mahfood said. "If you're not a churchgoer, you're related to somebody who is. So everybody is affected."

Street Preachers Gunned Down In Boynton Beach

BOYNTON BEACH (CBS4) ¯ A pair of street preachers plying their trade on the streets of Boynton Beach was gunned last week by someone they were reportedly ministering.

Police says Tite Sufra, 24, and Stephen Ocean, 23, had been preaching to 18-year-old Jeriah Woody when his cell phone went off.

Woody left the two men then allegedly turned and started walking toward them. When Sufra approached, Woody allegedly shot him in the head. Ocean ran, and police say Woody shot him in the back, then walked up and shot him again — this time in the head at point-blank range.

Woody, who is known by the street name "Plug" surrendered Wednesday on two counts of first-degree murder charges.

Fires strike 2 more east Texas churches

Tue Feb 9, 1:34 am ET
http://news.yahoo.com/s/ap/20100209/ap_on_...mVzc3RyaWtlMg--

DALLAS – A sheriff's dispatcher says fires have struck two more rural east Texas churches, just hours after investigators announced that a blaze last week marked the eighth arson against a house of worship in the state this year.

A Smith County sheriff's dispatcher says fire struck a Baptist church near Tyler Monday night. Another hit a church about 3 miles away.

The fires come the same day the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives announced a blaze that happened last week was the seventh east Texas church fire of 2010 to be deliberately set. Bureau agents in Houston say arson also caused a fire that destroyed the sanctuary of a central Texas church last month.

There have been no reported injuries or arrests. Federal officials aren't saying if there's a connection.

Christian sentenced to life in prison for blaspheming Islam

A court in Faisalabad, Pakistan, sentenced to life imprisonment Imran Masih, a young Christian, for having insulted and desecrated the Koran, according to the Minorities Concern newsletter.

On July 1, 2009 Masih, a shopkeeper by profession, was brutally tortured by a group of Muslims, then arrested by police on charges – allegedly fabricated- that he had burned pages of the Koran.

On January 11, 2010 the judge sentenced him to prison for life, which he will serve in the federal prison in Faisalabad where he is currently confined.

The court also imposed an additional penalty of 10 years' imprisonment and payment of 100 thousand rupees (just over 800 euros), under provisions of the law prohibiting blasphemy against Islam.

Peter Jacob, executive secretary of the National Commission on Justice and Peace, sponsored by the Catholic Church, while not openly criticizing the ruling, speaks of "not a good verdict " and "lack of freedom" of the judiciary.

Iranian Pastor Has Visible Marks of Torture, Says Wife

Thu, Mar. 04 2010 12:01 PM EDT
By Ethan Cole|Christian Post Reporter
http://www.christianpost.com/article/20100...wife/index.html

An Iranian evangelical pastor who was suddenly arrested and then imprisoned has visible marks of torture, his wife said after she visited him.

Pastor Wilson Issavi of the Assyrian Evangelical Church in Kermanshah, a remote city in western Iran, is living in dreadful condition and appears to have been tortured while in prison, his wife Medline Nazanin told reporters and human rights activists in Iran, according to Farsi Christian News Network.

Nazanin also said intelligence officials told her that her husband is “awaiting his trial and his death sentence,” reported FCNN on Thursday. Issavi is accused of converting Muslims to Christianity and performing their baptisms.

Issavi was arrested by security agents on Feb. 2 while visiting a friend’s house in the central city of Isfahan. For weeks, the pastor’s family had no information on where he was located. But recently, his wife was allowed to visit him – the only time she has seen her husband since he was arrested. Issavi is held in an unmarked prison, his wife said.

The Assyrian Evangelical Church in Kermanshah, which Issavi oversees, is one of the oldest churches in the city. The church has been shut down and parishioners are reportedly under government surveillance.

Those who know Issavi describe him as low-keyed, meek and humble.

Authorities had raided his home in January and shut down his church, but the pastor requested that FCNN not report the news because he was afraid officials would crack down on the church members even more. He tried to quietly negotiate with local officials to reach a compromise. An FCNN news correspondent said the pastor tried to respect the law even though it is oppressive towards religious minorities.

In addition to the persecution of Pastor Issavi, Iranian intelligence agents recently also raided the home of Hamid Shafiee and his wife, Reyhaneh Aghajari, two house church leaders in Isfahan. After the raid on Feb. 28, agents arrested the couple, took them to an unknown location, and confiscated books and CDs.

Several months ago, officials also shut down the Friday service of Iran's largest official church. The Assemblies of God Church in Iran now only holds Sunday services.

25 years for touching Quran before washing hands

Defendants say charges trumped up by Muslim radicals

Posted: March 06, 2010
9:20 pm Eastern
http://www.wnd.com/index.php?fa=PAGE.view&pageId=127080

In Pakistan, a Christian man was sentenced to life in prison after a neighbor with whom he had a business disagreement accused him of desecrating the Quran, and a husband and wife were jailed for 25 years for touching Islam's holy book without washing their hands.

The reports came from Compass Direct News, the Center for Legal Aid Assistance and Settlement and LogansWarning.com.

According to Compass, the life term was imposed on Imran Masih, 22, of Faisalabad after he was convicted under the notorious Section 295-B of Pakistan's legal code, which bans "blasphemy" against Islam.

The conviction was based on the accusation of a rival shopkeeper who was accused of using a mosque loudspeaker to incite a mob that beat Masih.

Masih had been accused by Hajji Liaquat Abdul Ghafoor, the neighboring shopkeeper, of tearing pages out of the Quran and burning them. But Masih explained he was burning old merchandise records he had gathered while cleaning his store.

Compass reported Masih's family members claimed Ghafoor fabricated the blasphemy case because of a business disagreement. Other shopkeepers reported to Compass they has seen the two arguing over business just a few days before the accusations.

"Ghafoor started shouting that Masih had desecrated the Quran and made blasphemous remarks about Islam and prophet Muhammad," said one of the shopkeepers, according to Compass. "Ghafoor spread misconceptions about Imran Masih, and a mob of angry Muslim men unaware of the facts attacked Masih and viciously beat him, looted his shop and later handed him over to police."

An appeal is planned to the Lahore High Court.

The second episode developed, according to reports from CLAAS, when Munir Masih and Ruqqiya Bibi were accused of touching a Quran without washing their hands.

The organization said the husband and wife were convicted of "contaminating" the Quran when they touched it.

The group, which fights for the rights of the poor and marginalized in Pakistan, said the incident dated back to late 2008 when the accusations unleashed the fury of Islamic extremists. CLAAS reported local stories suggested police agents were paid to discover additional evidence that would be used to convict the couple.

Munir Masih was locked up in Kasur's district prison, and his wife went to the women's prison in Multan on conviction.

Their convictions also are being appealed to the Lahore High Court, officials said.

Christians in Pakistan say Islamic laws regarding the Quran and blasphemy routinely are used to harass members of other faiths. Tahir Naveed Chaudhary, a Christian member of Punjab's legislative assembly, reported such accusations are used to settle personal grudges against Christians, Compass reported.

WND recently reported increasing incidents of attacks on Christians in Pakistan – both through criminal accusations and physical assault.

International Christian Concern's Pakistan analyst Jonathan Racho described the nation's penal code as extreme.

"If I say that as a Christian, I don't believe Muhammad is a prophet of God, the state of Pakistan is saying that I should be killed," he said.

"Pakistani law limits my ability to talk about what I believe," he explained. "The Pakistani penal code is literally against the United Nations Charter of Human Rights which says I should have freedom of religious expression."

The ICC Pakistani analyst went a step further.

"If anyone communicates the Gospel message in Pakistan, that person is automatically going against the Pakistani state," he said. "That's what Pakistan says with their criminal code."

Some nations are attempting to persuade Pakistan to repeal the volatile parts of the criminal code. The U. S. State Department issued a 2008 report critical of Pakistan's human rights record, the British Foreign Office has issued statements addressing Pakistan's human rights record and Canada also has favored strong human rights enforcement.

According to a statement from the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, Pakistan also has been debating the adoption of full Islamic law. The Wilson Center's Bhumitra Chakma and the American Enterprise Institute's Michael Rubin see the Taliban and other groups continuing to gain influence in Pakistan’s internal operations.

Michael Rubin, the AEI's Central Asian expert, said Pakistan quickly is becoming a "human rights cesspool."

In Gojra, a series of attacks left 11 Christians dead and more than 40 Christian-owned homes destroyed.

WND also reported recently when the European Center for Law and Justice filed a petition with the U.N.'s special rapporteur seeking prosecutions in Pakistan for those responsible for the attacks and killings of Christians.

"We have expressed in the strongest terms possible that the Pakistani government must prosecute acts of violence based upon religion," said Jay Sekulow, chief counsel for the organization, as well as the U.S.-based American Center for Law and Justice.

"Christians are being singled out and murdered because of their faith. Only when the Pakistani government effectively prosecutes those responsible for the acts of violence will attacks against Christians end," he said.

The ECLJ is urging the U.N. to call on Pakistan to prosecute the perpetrators of attacks that have killed at least 60 Christians in recent years.

Attack on Nigerian town kills hundreds

March 8, 2010 2:49 p.m. EST
http://www.cnn.com/2010/WORLD/africa/03/08...dex.html?hpt=T1

Lagos, Nigeria (CNN) -- The death toll from weekend violence in central Nigeria climbed to more than 200 Monday after members of a machete-wielding Muslim group attacked a mostly Christian town south of the city of Jos, officials said.

More than 200 were dead and 32 injured, according to Choji Gyang, a religious affairs adviser to the head of Plateau state, who said bodies were still being recovered.

Sani Shehu, president of the nongovernmental agency Civil Rights Congress, put the number of dead at about 485 people.

Twenty-six arrests had been made in connection with the violence, Gyang said.

Nigerian Vice President Goodluck Jonathan put security on high alert Sunday and began operations to capture the "roving bands of killers" who attacked Dogo Nahauwa, a town just south of Jos.

Are you there? Send your video, images to iReport

The townsfolk are predominantly Berom, an ethnic group that mostly practices Christianity, said Manase Pampe, spokesman for the Red Cross Plateau state office. Reports of the attack described the assailants as members of the Muslim Hausa-Fulani ethnic group, Pampe and government spokesman Gregory Yenlong said.

The attackers stormed the town at 3 a.m. Sunday (9 p.m. Saturday ET) and remained there for 2½ hours, Pampe said. Buildings were set afire and people were attacked with machetes, Yenlong said.

The violence resembled previous outbreaks of ethno-religious clashes in the West African nation.

But John Onaiyekan, archbishop of Abuja, told Vatican Radio the most recent outbreak is the result of a dispute over access to natural resources, not religion.

"The point that needs to be made is that people are not killing one another because of religion," Onaiyekan said. Instead, he called it a "classical" economic conflict between farmers and less sedentary groups.

The Plateau attack prompted Jonathan to place the area and neighboring states on "red alert," the vice president's office said in a news release. He directed security forces to "undertake strategic initiatives to confront and defeat these roving bands of killers," the office said.

Jonathan, who became acting head of state in February while President Umaru Yar'Adua recovers from illness, called for calm.

"He calls on all Nigerians to remain peaceful and law abiding since violence only begets further violence," the release said. "He also sympathizes with those who have lost relatives and friends in these attacks, asking the Almighty to grant them the fortitude to bear the loss."

Onaiyekan said the government had imposed a dusk-to-dawn curfew but noted it's difficult for authorities to impose curfews outside the cities. The recent casualties don't "say much about the ability of government to defend its citizens," he said.

Hundreds fled the town as the violence raged Sunday. The Red Cross was caring for about 600 people at its camp in Boto in Bauchi state, said Alhaji Abubakar, the group's spokesman in the state. Bauchi is just north of Plateau state.

Forty-eight people were treated at hospitals, national Red Cross spokesman Umar Maigari said. Red Cross officials counted 30 bodies in one community but were unable to continue their investigation, he said. Residents wanted to direct the attention to burying the dead, he said.

Nigeria -- with more than 150 million people -- is the most populous country in Africa and almost evenly divided between Muslims and Christians.

It has the sixth-largest Islamic population in the world -- 78 million-plus Muslims, according to a study last year by the Pew Forum on Religion and Public Life.

While some outbursts of violence are between Christians and Muslims, some disputes are also ethnic-based. The country is home to 250 to 400 ethnic groups, making it one of the most diverse African nations, according to the International Displacement Monitoring Center.

Thousands were displaced in January when violence flared up in Jos, said Shehu of the Civil Rights Congress. A local activist said 69 people were killed and about 600 injured.

Also in January, at least 150 Muslims were killed during an attack in Kuru Karama south of Jos, Human Rights Watch reported. Community leaders from Jos and journalists told Human Rights Watch they saw dozens of bodies lodged in wells or sewage pits. Most of the town's homes were burned, the group said.

In November 2008, at least 700 Nigerians died in Christian-Muslim riots that followed a disputed local election, Human Rights Watch reported.

VOODOO PRIEST ANNOUNCES WAR AGAINST EVANGELICAL CHRISTIANS

http://thelastcrusade.org/2010/03/02/voodo...cal-christians/

SATAN ALIVE AND WELL IN HAITI
thelastcrusade.org

Haiti’s supreme Voodoo leader and hundreds of his followers intend to wage “war” upon Christian Evangelicals after they attacked a Voodoo ceremony in which chickens were beheaded to honor the Haitians killed in last month’s massive earthquake.

The attack on the Voodoo ritual within Port-au-Prince’s sprawling Cite Soleil slum came amid rising religious tensions, as Protestant Evangelicals and other denominations vie for converts in the wake of the earthquake that killed more than 200,000.

Some of the converts say they abandoned Voodoo to embrace fundamental Christianity because, they believe, God caused the earthquake to give them a spiritual warning.

“It will be war — open war,” Max Beauvoir, supreme head of Haitian voodoo, announced to the press at his home and temple outside the capital.

“It’s unfortunate that at this moment where everybody’s suffering that they have to go into war. But if that is what they need, I think that is what they’ll get,” Beauvoir said.

The quake also left more than a million homeless and left much of the capital and surrounding areas in ruins in this Caribbean nation of more than nine million.

Police said a Christian pastor urged followers to attack the Cite Soleil ceremony, resulting in a crowd of people throwing rocks at the voodoo followers.

Rosemond Aristide, a police inspector in Cite Soleil, said he had since spoken with the pastor, who agreed to allow voodoo ceremonies to take place there.

But he would not explain why no arrests were made nor provide further details.

Beauvoir accuses the Christian denominations of using post-quake aid supplies such as food and medicine to try to “buy souls.”

“I would like to see each one of them tied up in ropes and thrown in the sea, and I hope the best of them will be able to catch a plane and run away and leave in peace,” the voodoo priest said.

Asked whether he would encourage voodoo followers to respond with the same kind of violence, Beauvoir said he would.

“They have not been aggressors,” he said of his followers. “I think they are aggressed (attacked), and they will have to answer with the same type of aggression. I don’t mean for (Evangelicals) to die. I am not out to kill them.”

More than 50% of Haiti’s population practiced voodoo in some form, though many are thought to also follow other religious beliefs at the same time.

Voodoo evolved out of beliefs slaves from West Africa brought with them to Haiti. It is now deeply rooted in Haitian culture.

A voodoo priest named Boukman has been credited with setting off the country’s slave rebellion in the late 18th century and the creation of the world’s first black republic.

World Vision Workers Attacked in Pakistan

Wed, Mar. 10 2010 08:10 AM EDT
By Nathan Black|Christian Post Reporter
http://www.christianpost.com/article/20100...stan/index.html

A World Vision office in Pakistan was attacked by gunmen on Wednesday, leaving at least five staff members dead.

The international humanitarian organization said the attack was unprovoked.

Initial reports say the militants detonated grenades and opened fire on the office, which is located in the Mansehra District of Pakistan, north of the capital, Islamabad. The office received no threatening letters prior to the attack.

"World Vision today is mourning the brutal and senseless deaths of five members [of] our staff," the Christian organization said in a statement.

Seven additional employees have been hospitalized and one staff member is missing.

"Those who kill humanitarian workers must be reminded that they are not only killing their own country's residents, but also people seeking to improve the lives of victims of poverty and injustice," the statement on Wednesday further reads.

The staff consisted of local Pakistanis who were serving in relief and development work.

Up to 15 gunmen arrived in pick-up vehicles and began firing on the staff, according to UK's The Times. World Vision administration officer Mohammad Sajid said the militants took their mobile phones, "dragged people one by one and shifted to an adjacent room and shot and killed them."

World Vision established offices in the South Asian country, where Christians make up less than three percent of the population, in 1992 and was focused primarily on relief interventions. In 2001, the organization expanded its operations as it collaborated with other aid groups in the North West Frontier Province and Punjab Province on emergency relief assistance and community development initiatives. After a massive earthquake struck the country in October 2005, World Vision expanded further and began operating in the Mansehra District.

All of World Vision's operations in the country have been suspended indefinitely.

Egypt: Crowd of 3000 Muslims attacks Coptic Christian community

Posted by Marisol on March 13, 2010 8:18 AM | 10 Comments
http://www.jihadwatch.org/2010/03/egypt-cr...-community.html

"[Their] fury, encouraged by the imam, was sparked by the rumor that the Christians have begun to build a new place of worship."

Apologists often insist that no one pays attention to stipulations on unbelievers such as those which appear in the Pact of Umar. Really? Here are about 3000 people in Egypt who missed that memo.

"Crowd of 3 thousand Muslims attack a Coptic Christian community, 25 injured," from Asia News, March 13:

Cairo (AsiaNews / Agencies) - The toll from an attack on the Coptic Christian community that took place yesterday in the north-western province of Mersa Matrouh, Egypt is 25 wounded, including women and children. A crowd of around 3 thousand Muslims attacked the faithful gathered in prayer in a building adjoining the local church. The fundamentalists fury, encouraged by the imam, was sparked by the rumour that the Christians have begun to build a new place of worship.

Around 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, the Muslims - a group of Bedouins and Salafi fanatics - started throwing stones at a construction site, which they believe in reality will be a new church. Local witnesses reported that security forces present were not sufficient to contain the attack. The police fired tear gas and arrested a dozen people, including Muslims and Christians. Only this morning, reinforcements arrived from Alexandria, thanks to which the Coptic faithful trapped inside the building could return to their homes.

At the moment of the attack the Christian prayer house contained four priests, one deacon and about 400 parishioners. Christians say that the building under construction, in fact, is a nursing home and said they were "terrified" by the latest attack. The local imam Shaikh Khamees intervention during Friday prayers has helped to foment the anger of Muslims. He emphasized the duty to fight against the "enemies" of Islam and stressed that "we do not tolerate the Christian presence in our area."

Reverend Matta Zakarya confirms that this morning there was a summit between the leaders of the local church, state security forces and even some Muslims. "The Coptic are scared - he stresses - especially women and children who were inside the building and witnessed the assault."

In Egypt, the Coptic Christian community is about 10% of the population in a country with an overwhelming Muslim majority, which discriminates against the Christian community. It is the victim of violence, caused by a sharp rise of Islamic fundamentalism. Sometimes the basis of many attacks there are disputes over land ownership and disputes for women, but they soon become sectarian clashes."

Second Wave of Attacks Leaves 13 Christians Dead in Nigeria

LAGOS, Nigeria (Compass Direct News) – Less than two weeks after a massive attack in Nigeria that killed 500 Christians, Muslim Fulani herdsmen on Wednesday unleashed more horrific violence on two Christian villages in Plateau state, killing 13 persons, including a pregnant woman and children.

In attacks presumably over disputed property but with a level of violence characteristic of jihadist method and motive, men in military camouflage and others in customary clothing also burned 20 houses in Byei and Baten villages, in the Riyom Local Government Area of the state, about 45 kilometers (29 miles) from the state capital, Jos.

Christians in neighboring villages are living in fear of possible attacks by the herdsmen, who have not been deterred by the joint military and police security team enforcing curfew in the state. The ethnic Berom Christians, who live as farmers, have long faced off with Fulani nomads who graze their cattle on the Beroms' land.

The slaughter comes after a similar attack on March 7 on Dogo Nahawa, Zot and Rastat, three villages in Jos South and Barkin Ladi Local Government Areas where hundreds of villagers were struck with machetes and burned to death.

"The assailants armed with dangerous weapons attacked the two communities simultaneously at about 1 a.m. on Wednesday, March 17," Brig. Gen. Donald Oji said in a press statement, adding that timely deployment of troops averted further carnage. "Seven of the assailants have been arrested, while troops are still on the trail of more of them. Items recovered from the assailants include three locally made short guns with cartridges, bow and arrows, machetes, knives and cutlasses."

State Gov. Jonah Jang condemned the killings, alleging that some unnamed persons were fueling misunderstanding among communities in conflict. Because the style of killing is typical of jihadist fundamentalists, Christian leaders suspect Islamic extremists are encouraging the attacks, throwing religious gas on low-burning land and ethnic conflicts.

Dalyop Nyango Mandung, a survivor of the attack whose 90-year-old mother, Ngo Hwo Dongo, was killed in her room, told newsmen that the villagers were awakened by gunshots from the Muslim herdsmen who were barricading their houses. Mandung, however, distinguished the assailants in military fatigues from the Fulani herders.

"We saw them in military uniforms, about two of them were in military uniform and the Fulani were in their normal clothes," Mandun reportedly said. "My mother was the only one killed in the family."

Another survivor, Kachollom Pam Dauda, who is pregnant, told Nigerian media that she was lucky to have escaped the killers. She also described the men in military uniform as distinct from the herders, saying, “The killers came and first shot, and the Fulani were machete-ing people.”

“I climbed the roof of the house and held to the wood,” she reportedly said. “It was painful more so that I am pregnant. I saw the killers kill my two sisters-in-law, Chundung and Kangyang – they could not escape. I saw as they were being butchered and slain.”

Dauda said she dared not make any movement that would attract the attention of the killers.

“After they killed my sisters-in-law, they sat at the back of our house and were saying they would still come back in two days to finish us in the village,” she reportedly said. “I saw two soldiers. They were speaking English and were saying, “Come let’s go.’ The Fulanis were more than 20 in number. When they left, my husband’s uncle, Yohanna, came crying saying, ‘They have killed people in the next compound.’”

In the March 7 attack, the ethnic Berom victims also included many women and children killed with machetes by rampaging Fulani herdsmen. About 75 houses were burned. State Information Commissioner Gregory Yenlong confirmed that about 500 persons were killed in the attacks.

Christian leaders said that in the March 7 attack, eyewitnesses said the Fulani Muslims were chanting “Allah Akbar” as they broke into homes and slashed men, women and children.

Gov. Jang said word of the new attacks challenged everyone’s strength to endure.

“It gets to a stage when one remains strong, but when you receive the news of fresh attacks, you get broken before you recover again,” he said. “I have total faith in God because I am a child of God; and because I know there is nothing that happens that God is not aware particularly when it happens to His children. I have talked to God that whatever sin we have committed on the Plateau He should have mercy on us.”

NEWS ALERT: Pakistan Christian “Burned”, Wife “Raped”, For Refusing Islam

Saturday, March 20, 2010 (12:06 pm)
By BosNewsLife Asia Service reporting from Pakistan
http://www.bosnewslife.com/12035-news-aler...-refusing-islam

RAWALPINDI, PAKISTAN (BosNewsLife)-- A Christian man was fighting for his life in Pakistan's Punjab province Saturday, March 20, after Muslim leaders backed by police burned him alive for refusing to convert to Islam, while his wife was raped by police officers, Christian and hospital sources familiar with the case told BosNewsLife.

Arshed Masih was burned Friday, March 19, in front of a police station in the city of Rawalpindi near Pakistan's capital Islamabad, following apparent death threats from his Muslim employer Sheikh Mohammad Sultan, an influential businessman, and religious leaders, said the Rawalpindi Holy Family Hospital.

His wife, Martha Arshed, was allegedly raped by police officers. Their three children -- ranging in age from 7 to 12-- were reportedly forced to witness the attacks against their parents.

"Both [Masih] and wife were rushed to the Holy Family Hospital and are under treatment," the hospital said.

He was listed in serious condition with about 80 percent of his body burned.

POLICE INVESTIGATION

Local police officials said they were "aware" of the attacks carried out by Muslim leaders and apparently at least some officers and added that an investigation was underway. No arrests were reported yet late Saturday, March 19.

Sheikh Mohammad Sultan could not immediately be reached for comment and it was not clear whether he had been in contact with police Saturday, March 20.

Before tensions emerged about their Christian faith, Masih worked as a driver and his wife as a maid for the Muslim businessman since 2005, Christians said.

The couple apparently lived with their children in the servant quarters of Sultan's estate in Rawalpindi, a key trade and tourist destination. In January, religious leaders and Sultan allegedly asked Arshed to convert to Islam with his whole family. After he refused, the group reportedly threatened him with "dire consequences".

DEATH THREAT

Arshed offered to quit his job, but the businessman allegedly said he would "kill" him if he were to leave.

He apparently also told Christian mediators that he would never allow the Christian family to live somewhere else.

This week tensions rose after Sultan reported a theft of 500,000 Pakistani Rupees (5,952$), according to a document seen by BosNewsLife.

The Christian family members were not named as suspects in the so-called 'First Information Report' from police.

Sources familiar with the situation, who asked not to be identified for security reasons, told BosNewsLife that the businessman had offered the couple to drop the case if they convert to Islam or "else that both would not see their children again."

However, "Arshed refused to convert and stood firm in his faith. Arshed`s wife was raped by the police and he was burned alive," Friday, March 19, local Christians said, speaking on condition of anonimity.

The case comes at a time when church groups have complained about growing attacks against minority Christians by Muslim militants, often with the alleged support by local law enforcement officials and other authorities.

Praying in park puts man in jail for 9 days

Letter warning of warrant arrives after defendant taken into custody

Posted: March 24, 2010

By Bob Unruh
http://www.wnd.com/index.php?fa=PAGE.view&pageId=131521

A Christian who prayed in a public park with six other people is serving a nine-day jail sentence for disorderly conduct even though his case is under appeal and charges against the others were dismissed or overturned.

Julian Raven of Elmira, N.Y., said he was "surprised by police at his office," handcuffed and taken into custody this week, according to the Alliance Defense Fund, which is defending Raven.

"According to his wife, police escorted him out of a court hearing … in handcuffs in front of his crying children to begin serving his nine-day jail sentence," the organization said in a report.

"We are surprised at how eager the city was to arrest Mr. Raven again in light of his appeal. Now he will serve time in jail; however, we will continue to aggressively pursue his appeal in court," said Joel Oster, ADF senior legal counsel.

WND previously reported on the decision to appeal Raven's conviction.

Raven was arrested while praying in an Elmira public park during a 2007 "gay pride" event. His attorneys are waiting for a response from the New York Court of Appeals.

Originally seven people were arrested June 23, 2007, in Elmira's Wisner Park at a homosexual festival promoted by city officials as open to all. Four were convicted, but three of the convictions already have been overturned.

The Christians "made their way to an area in front of the stage and began to pray silently while lying prostrate in the grass. A police sergeant had earlier informed Julian Raven that he could not enter the public park, walk through the park, or talk to anyone in the park about his religion. After the group began to pray silently on their faces, all were arrested and charged with disorderly conduct," ADF reported.

Court records show Sgt. Sharon Moyer told Raven he could not disrupt the event.

So, ADF reported, he and the others "entered the event to pray silently for event participants and to share the Gospel with them."

"There was plenty of room in the park. No one was being turned away. They walked in silence. Neither the defendant nor anyone from the group bumped into anyone as they entered and they did not force others out of the way," ADF said.

They walked to a grassy area near the front, kneeled or laid down, and prayed.

"They chose this posture in order to be as non-threatening as possible," ADF said.

Moyer then arrested the seven and reported it was because of concern that the homosexual festival participants might react with hostility to the Christians.

Three defendants were removed from the case almost immediately, leaving four to be convicted by Elmira city Judge Thomas Ramich of "disorderly conduct."

But the convictions for three – Gloria Raven, Maurice Kienenberger and Walter Quick – later were overturned in the Chemung County Court.

ADF is arguing, under the First and 14th amendments to the U.S. Constitution, "peaceful speakers may not be arrested simply because others in the forum may react to their message in a hostile manner."

"The lower courts in this case ruled that the arrests were proper because the defendant must have known that other event participants would respond with hostility. This, however, is precisely what the … cases prohibit," ADF asserts.

When the Christians were arrested, officials with Elmira justified their actions to WND.

Assistant Police Chief Mike Robertson told WND at the time that the members were accused of a "combination" of allegations, including the "intent" to cause a public inconvenience, a "disturbance" of a meeting of persons and obstructing vehicular or pedestrian traffic.

He also said at the time that the accusations would include taking part in "any act that serves no legitimate purpose."

The prosecutor, Robert Siglin, said the city was concerned for public safety, and that's why the Christians were arrested while exercising their First Amendment rights.

ADF said it is ironic that Elmira recently settled a lawsuit in a separate federal civil action involving Raven and two others. In that 2008 case, Elmira police threatened the men with arrest as they tried to share their faith during another "gay pride" event.

The men were wearing shirts with the message "Liberated by the blood of Jesus," handing out literature and holding up signs on a public sidewalk at the event.

Court documents show the city paid each defendant in that case $5,000 plus the attorneys' fees and costs for the action.

Oster told WND that the city appeared to go out of its way to create controversy in the case. Raven has been represented by legal counsel throughout, yet the city mailed to his home address – not his legal counsel – a notification of an arrest warrant.

The city then arrested Raven before the notification reached him, Oster confirmed.

"They wouldn't have to do that," he said. "It was intentionally to create embarrassment."

Bombs target buses of Christian students in Iraq

By SAAD ABDUL-KADIR, Associated Press Writer Saad Abdul-kadir, Associated Press Writer – Sun May 2, 9:29 am ET http://news.yahoo.com/s/ap/20100502/ap_on_re_mi_ea/ml_iraq

BAGHDAD – Two bombs exploded minutes apart Sunday near buses carrying Christian students in the northern Iraqi city of Mosul, killing at least one bystander and injuring around 100 others, a security official said.

Sunni Muslim insurgents have frequently targeted members of Iraq's Christian minority, especially in Mosul, which is home to a large Christian community. Some extremist Sunnis consider Christians to be nonbelievers and supporters of the Shiite-led government they oppose.

A shop owner in the area was killed in Sunday's attack, said Abdul-Rahim al-Shammari, head of the provincial council's security committee. The injured included students and other civilians, he said.

The attack began with a roadside bomb that exploded around 7:30 a.m. and appeared to target buses carrying students to Mosul University. Moments later, a car bomb exploded nearby.

At least 17 people with serious wounds were taken to a hospital in Irbil, in the Kurdish autonomous region, said Dr. Muhsin Shamzi, who works at the hospital.

"Today was terrible and I will not forget it for the rest of my life," said Wisam Jarji, a student who was wounded in the blast. "Following the explosion, the situation in the bus was chaotic and I could see blood stains and hear screams all over the place."

The U.S.-based National Council of Churches sent a letter last week to U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton calling on her to urge Iraqi officials to do more to protect Iraq's Christian community. The organization said they were particularly worried now as Iraq struggles to seat a government after the March 7 parliamentary elections.

"Our concern is now particularly acute because it is possible that tensions will increase as various political forces continue to vie for power following the recent elections," the letter said. "We fear that a growing climate of mistrust and animosity will further threaten the fragile Christian community."

Iraqi Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki's bloc narrowly lost to a coalition led by secular challenger Ayad Allawi, but the prime minister has challenged the results. The ensuing political vacuum has left many observers worried that violence will rise as political battles spill over into the streets.

Evangelist murdered in India's Bihar state

Posted on May 6, 2010 | by Staff
http://www.bpnews.net/bpnews.asp?id=32879&...ews-RSSFeed0506

LAXMANPUR, India (BP)--An evangelist who helped screen a film about the life of Jesus in eastern India's Bihar state was brutally murdered May 2.

Reported details of the murder vary. The International Christian Concern human rights group reported May 5 that Ravi Murmu and members of his team had completed the screening and started their journeys home. Along the way, the evangelist separated from the rest of the team to take a shortcut home. When he failed to arrive by late evening, a search was organized and his body was found with his right hand severed and deep cuts on his neck and other parts of his body.

The All India Christian Council, however, reported that the team's generator developed problems during the screening and the evangelist went to fix the problem but did not return.

Robbery apparently was not the motive because the attackers in the incident, which occurred in Laxmanpur, didn't take any of the evangelist's belongings, including his motor bike, cell phone and watch.

Police took the body to a hospital for a post mortem exam, after which the family was able to take the body, ICC reported.

Murmu (listed as age 28 by ICC, 30 by the Indian council) is survived by his wife Rinku, an 8-year-old daughter Celesty and his widowed mother.

Murmu's brother Shailendra, who also is an evangelist, was asked how the family is coping with the murder and answered, "The peace of God still reigns in this house and in this family," ICC reported.

Ravi Murmu was an evangelist working with Brethren Church, according to the All India Christian Council's indianchristians.in website. Two people reportedly have been detained by police in connection with the murder.

India's censusindia.gov.in website says Bihar's 83 million people are 84 percent Hindu, 16.5 percent Muslim and .06 percent Christian. Religious violence, which often is connected to Hinduism's traditional caste system, is a chronic problem in the state.

Muslim Teachers in Pakistan Allegedly Abuse Christian Students

Wed, May. 19 2010 05:01 PM EDT
By Compass Direct News | Jawad Mazhar
http://www.christianpost.com/article/20100...ents/index.html

SARGODHA, Pakistan (Compass Direct News) – Muslim teachers at a girls school here have derided Christian students for their faith, beat them, pressured them to convert to Islam and forced them to clean school bathrooms and classrooms after class hours, according to area Christians.

Muslim teachers at Government Higher Secondary School in village No. 79-NB (Northern Branch), Sargodha, in Punjab Province, have so abused Christian students that two of the dozens of Christian girls at the school have dropped out, said a 16-year-old student identified only as Sana.

“Christian students are teased and mocked by radical Muslim, female teachers from the start of the school day to the end,” she said. “Due to the contemptuous behavior on religious grounds by the fanatical Muslim principal and staff, Christian students feel dejected, depressed and frustrated. I am totally broken-hearted because of the intolerance and discrimination.”

Rebecca Bhatti, a 16-year-old grade 10 student, told Compass she left the government school because her main teacher, along with an Islamic Education & Arabic Language teacher identified only as Sumaira, a math teacher identified only as Gullnaz, other Muslim teachers and Ferhat Naz, the principal, would call Christian girls in to the staff room at recess and demand that they polish their shoes or wash their undergarments and other clothes.

“If any girl turned down the orders of any of the Muslim teachers, they were punished,” Bhatti said as she spilled tears. “The Muslim school teachers ordered us to wash lavatories daily and clean the school compound and classrooms, even though there is staff to keep the school clean."

She said that the school also denied Christian students certificates of completion when they had finished their studies.

"This was to bar Christian students from gaining admission to other educational institutions or continue their education," she said.

The principal of Christian Primary School in the village, Zareena Emmanuel, said that Naz and Sumaira subjected Christian students to beatings. Emmanuel also said that Muslim teachers at the secondary school derided Christian students for their faith.

"I regret that it is the only government school of higher education for girls at the village and adjoining areas," Emmanuel said, "and therefore Christian girls have to experience such apathy, religious discrimination and bitterness each day of their schooling, which is supposed to be a time of learning and imagination."

Christian residents of the village said they have been longing to bring abuse at the school to light. The Rev. Zaheer Khan of Maghoo Memorial United Presbyterian Church and Emmanuel of the primary school have asked education department officials of Sargodha Region to investigate, he said.

Khan also said that Naz and Muslim teachers including Gullnaz, Sumaira and Muzammil Bibi have treated Christian students contemptuously and have frequently asked them to convert to Islam.

"The attitude of the Arabic & Islamic Education teacher, Sumaira, toward the Christian students is beyond belief," he said, "as she has forced the Christian girls to wash toilets, classrooms and clean the school ground, saying they must not be hesitant to do sanitation work because it's the work of their parents and forefathers handed down to them."

Questioned about the abuses, Naz told Compass that she would immediately take note of such incidents if they had occurred.

"Any of the teachers held responsible of forcing Christian students convert to Islam will be punished according to the departmental rules and regulations," Naz said. "A few Christian girls have abandoned their education because of their domestic problems, but even then I'll carry out a departmental inquiry against the accused teachers, and no one will be spared if found guilty."

Naz said the inquiry would focus especially on the accusations against Sumaira, Muzammil and Gullnaz.

Protesting residents gathered outside Naz's office last week said she had no real intention of investigating the alleged abuses; some said she was making weak excuses to defend her staff members. They urged an independent investigation of Sumaira, Gullnaz, Muzammil and Naz.

“This cannot be tolerated, as it’s a matter of their girls’ careers and education,” said one protester.

Noureen Austin, a 19-year-old Christian student in grade 12, described the school environment as discriminatory, depressed, gloomy and agitated.”

“No Christian student can get a quality education there,” she said. “Most of the school faculty are fanatical female Muslims who would not waste any chance to target Christian girls because of their belief in Christ.”

Islamists mounting bomb attacks on Christians in South Lebanon

http://www.worldtribune.com/worldtribune/W...n0567_06_24.asp

NICOSIA — Lebanon has ordered its security forces to prepare for a crackdown against Islamist insurgents who have targeted the Christian community in the south.

Officials said the government of Prime Minister Said Hariri has ordered the military and security forces to conduct a sweep through the Sidon region. They said Christians around the southern port city have come under steady attack from Islamists believed aligned with Al Qaida.

Sidon has a Palestinian refugee camp of Ein Hilwe, said to include a significant presence of Al Qaida supporters. Over the last two years, several bombings around Sidon have been traced to Ein Hilwe.

The Christian minority has been alarmed by the spate of recent attacks. In late June, a bomb was detonated in the Bekaa Valley town of Zahle during the visit by Lebanese Maronite Patriarch Nasrallah Butros Sfeir, a critic of the Iranian-sponsored Hizbullah. The visit was the first by a Maronite patriarch to the Bekaa since 1938.

"The Internal Security Forces, by taking all measures, will do what is necessary to reassure citizens," Internal Security Forces commander Maj. Gen. Ashraf Rifi said.

In mid-June Christians in the Sidon area found leaflets tacked to their homes that warned them to leave immediately. So far, no group has taken responsibility.

"All those who operate in the dark will not succeed because Lebanon has moved past this stage," Lebanese parliamentarian Amr Khoury said.

AP Exclusive: NKorean killed for spreading Gospel

By HYUNG-JIN KIM, Associated Press Writer Hyung-jin Kim, Associated Press Writer – Mon Jul 5, 12:01 am ET http://news.yahoo.com/s/ap/20100705/ap_on_...nd_missionaries

SEOUL, South Korea – Like most North Koreans, Son Jong Nam knew next to nothing about Christianity when he fled to neighboring China in 1998.

Eleven years later, he died back in North Korea in prison, reportedly tortured to death for trying to spread the Gospel in his native land, armed with 20 bibles and 10 cassette tapes of hymns. He was 50.

His story, pieced together by his younger brother, a defector who lives in South Korea, sheds light on a little-discussed practice: the sending back of North Korean converts to evangelize in their home country — a risky move, but one of the few ways to penetrate a country that bars most citizens from outside TV or radio and the Internet.

Little is known about the practice, believed to have started in the late 1990s. Missionaries won't say how many defectors they have sent back, citing their safety and that of the defectors.

"It's their country, where people speak the same language. They know where to go and where to escape," says the Rev. Isaac Lee, a Korean-American missionary in Seoul who has dedicated his life to spreading Christianity in the North. "But I agonize a lot whenever I have to send defectors to the North as I know what kind of punishment they would get if arrested."

Officially, North Korea guarantees freedom of religion for its 24 million people. In practice, authorities crack down on Christians, who are seen as a Western-influenced threat to the government. The distribution of bibles and secret prayer services can mean banishment to a labor camp or execution, defectors say.

For North Koreans, a personality cult surrounding the country's founder Kim Il Sung and his son and current leader Kim Jong Il serves as a virtual state religion.

"Kim Jong Il is above the country's law ... and in North Korea what he instructs is like Jesus Christ's words in the Bible," says Son Jung-hun, a human rights activist who has become a devout Christian since his brother's death.

It was into this world that Son Jong Nam was born on March 11, 1958.

He served in the presidential security service for 10 years until his discharge as a master sergeant in 1983. In those years, he was ready to dedicate his life to fighting the "American imperialists," his brother says. Son worked at an army-run performing arts center after his discharge.

The first twist in his life came in 1997.

His wife, eight months pregnant at the time, was arrested for allegedly saying Kim Jong Il had ruined the economy and caused a mass famine. Interrogators seeking a confession kicked her in the stomach, forcing her to discharge blood and have a miscarriage, Son's brother says.

Terrified and disillusioned, Son, then 39, fled in January 1998 with his wife and their 6-year-old daughter to the Chinese border town of Yanji. His younger brother had already arrived the previous year, fleeing what he says was a false charge of being involved in the illegal export of strategic items.

Son's wife died of leukemia seven months later.

That's when the next twist came.

Son grew closer to a South Korean missionary, who had talked to him about Christianity and North Korea, while sheltering and feeding him and his family after their arrival in China.

Their meeting was not unusual. South Korea has a large Christian population, and hundreds of South Korean, American and Canadian missionaries work undercover in Chinese towns near the North Korean border, say Seoul-based activists specializing in North Korean human rights issues.

They hide bibles in shipments of food, clothing, bicycles and other aid bound for North Korea. They release balloons imprinted with the Gospel of St. Mark and let winds carry them across the border. They help North Koreans flee and teach them about Christianity. And sometimes they send them back.

One missionary, Korean-American Robert Park, made headlines after he crossed into North Korea last Christmas, shouting that he brought God's love and carrying a letter demanding Kim's resignation. The 26-year-old was arrested and later released in February.

The South Korean missionary who converted Son disguised himself as head of a timber mill. Son's brother never met the missionary; he says his brother wouldn't let him or even reveal his name, because of concerns about the missionary's safety.

After becoming a Christian, Son began helping the missionary try to convert other North Koreans hiding in China.

"My brother said he realized the Kim Jong Il regime is hypocritical, and living in accordance with what the Bible says is what we have to do," the younger Son says. "Christianity can come upon innocent people like my brother so fast."

In January 2001, Son was arrested by Chinese police for allegedly trying to convert North Korean defectors in China, which bans foreigners from proselytizing. He was deported home in April, where he was detained and tortured, leaving him with a limp, his brother said. He lost about 70 pounds (32 kilograms) in captivity.

"He was beaten in the head with clubs and given electric shocks," his brother says, his eyes welling up with tears.

Son was released in 2004 and sneaked across the border to Yanji to see his daughter, who had been left in the care of a Chinese missionary. He soon decided to return to North Korea to proselytize.

"I repeatedly urged him to change his mind, but he told me he has something to do in North Korea," says his brother, who was living in Seoul by then but returned to China briefly to see his brother.

Son headed back with the bibles and tapes. Little is known about how he evangelized, though his brother says Son worked at a state-run defense institute and was allowed to travel freely.

It's unclear whether efforts such as Son's have met with much success. Lee, the Seoul-based missionary, claims his Cornerstone Ministries International has 135,000 members in North Korea.

But experts such as Kim Soo-am at the Korea Institute for National Unification in Seoul are skeptical of purported active underground church movements. "They know they would get severely punished," he says, adding that he thinks many North Koreans aren't even aware of religion as an option.

Son was arrested again in January 2006 after police found bibles at his home in the northeastern city of Hoeryong. He was also charged with spying for the United States and South Korea and sentenced to public execution by firing squad.

His brother launched an international campaign to save him. That apparently led his captors to switch to a less public method: torture. "There are many ways to kill people in North Korea," says his brother.

He died in a prison in Pyongyang, the North Korean capital, in December 2008.

"He told me his dream is to build a church at a good Pyongyang location and work as a pastor there," his brother says. "I thought the religious faith completely changed his fate."

His death went unannounced, at least outside North Korea. It was not until nearly a year later — when a fellow inmate who had been released managed to call in November 2009 — that the younger Son learned his brother had died.

Farmer killed in fresh attack on Nigerian Christian village

http://news.yahoo.com/s/afp/20100705/wl_af...aunrestreligion

JOS (AFP) – A farmer was killed and two others are unaccounted for after around 200 people raided a Christian village near the central Nigerian city of Jos, burning and looting, the military said Monday.

The daytime raid was staged Sunday said Lieutenant Colonel Kingsley Umoh, spokesman of a special unit deployed in the volatile region of central Nigeria.

"Bandits numbering about 200, some armed with automatic weapons and shotguns while some ...with machetes, spears, bows and arrows, invaded and attacked Gana Wuri and its environs in Riyom," he said.

"Several houses were torched, property looted and over a hundred cows stolen.

"One local herdsman was killed while two are still missing as a result of this mindless attack," said Umoh in a statement.

The gang was suspected to be cattle rustlers from the neighbouring predominantly Muslim state of Kaduna, he added.

The security forces had arrested seven suspects and recovered 140 head of cattle, he said.

Riyom is situated 30 kilometres (18 miles) south of Jos, the capital of Plateau State which lies in the so-called so-called "middle belt", between the predominantly Muslim north and the mainly Christian south.

Jos city has long been the centre of ethno-religious violence in a country whose 150 million population is divided almost equally between Christians and Muslims

Pastor Yanked From Capitol Over 'Jesus' Prayer

A North Carolina pastor was relieved of his duties as an honorary chaplain of the state house of representatives after he closed a prayer by invoking the name of Jesus.

“I got fired,” said Ron Baity, pastor of Berean Baptist Church in Winston-Salem. He had been invited to lead prayer for an entire week but his tenure was cut short when he refused to remove the name Jesus from his invocation.

Baity's troubles began during the week of May 31. He said a House clerk asked to see his prayer. The invocation including prayers for our military, state lawmakers and a petition to God asking him to bless North Carolina."

"When I handed it to the lady, I watched her eyes and they immediately went right to the bottom of the page and the word Jesus," he told FOX News Radio. "She said 'We would prefer that you not use the name Jesus. We have some people here that can be offended.'"

When Baity protested, she brought the matter to the attention of House Speaker Joe Hackney – a Democrat.

Pakistan: Christian brothers shot dead for 'blasphemy'

http://www.adnkronos.com/AKI/English/Relig...d=3.1.709964881

(AKI) -Two brothers were shot dead outside a courtroom in the Pakistani's Punjab province where they faced blasphemy charges after allegedly distributing Christian pamphlets. According to reports, two unidentified gunmen shot dead Pastor Rashid Emmanuel and his brother Sajjad, and left their police escort critically wounded, as they were leaving the court following a hearing.

The brothers killed in the city of Faisalabad by an unidentified person as they left the court accompanied by inspector Muhammad Hussain who was critically injured, the Express Tribune newspaper reported.

Clashes between Christians and Muslims broke out following the shooting prompting police to impose measures banning meetings of more than four people in some areas of Pakistan's third-largest city.

"Both brothers were rushed to hospital where they were pronounced dead," the newspaper cited police official Amanullah Khan as saying.

The Christian brothers on 2 July were accused of distributing blasphemous material in overwhelmingly Muslim Muslim Pakistan at a bus stand.

The brothers' supporters claim that the charges were fabricated. James Aftab, a senior church official in Faisalabad, said the men had been "implicated in a fake case" while Atif Jamil Pagaan, a spokesperson for the Pakistan Minorities Democratic Foundation, also said the men had been set up, according to the Express Tribune.

Gay revision of the Bible to go on sale

http://www.deadseriousnews.com/?p=237

Move over Adam and Eve. Here comes Adam and Steve, as well as Samantha and Delilah. A newly revised gay-friendly Bible is set to go on sale in the next few weeks. Reaction to the announcement has been met with venom from conservative Christian groups.

Pink Cross Publishing, the same company that published a gay-friendly version of the Koran, stated that they were adding the finishing touches to the newly revised Bible. Mary and Joseph will be replaced by Mary and Josephine, a lesbian couple unable to have children the conventional way, hence the virgin birth of Jesus. All of Jesus' disciples will be gay except for Judas. In the new Bible, all of the disciples will pair off after the Last Supper with the exception of Judas. Satan will also be straight. The new gay-friendly Bible has yet to be named.

Westboro Baptist Church has promised to picket Pink Cross Publishing and any store selling the new Bible. In response, members of the gay community have stated that they will purchase the new Bible to support Pink Cross Publishing.

A companion workbook for children will also be available for use in Sunday schools. With input from newly defrocked priests, a Catholic version of the gay-friendly Bible will be published by year end.

Hi Folks, i have been away from this forum for some time but have lurking around still.
I have gone full circle, i rejected God until recently and gone a long wild goose chase with new age nonsense and other things.
It was there all the time but i was to stupid to see it, it just seems so absurd to reject creation and the keys to salavation. When you read the words of Jesus they strike home with fundamental truth and wisdom don't they?
I am going through all of Jesus parables at the moment.
I am a sinner and i want to be saved.

Brent - April 16, 2011 01:23 PM (GMT)

Hello Always Now how are you? In order to be saved the 1st thing one must realize is that we are all sinners. You have done this. Next just pray to Jesus and say Lord Jesus I know I am a sinner and my sin deserves to be punished. I ask for your forgiveness of my sins. I believe Christ died for me and rose from the grave. I trust Jesus Christ alone as my Savior. Thank you for the forgiveness and everlasting life I now have, in Jesus' name I pray amen.

If you prayed that with a sincere heart you are saved my friend. Thats all there is to it. Praise the Lord!
The whole thing with being saved is trusting that Christ payed the full penalty for your sins and that there is nothing you can do yourself to earn salvation because Christ did the work for you.

Take Care

Yes they do. Go on, brother ... meet your maker, you'll enjoy your new adventure.

Matthew {7:24} Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: {7:25} And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock. {7:26} And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: {7:27} And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it. {7:28} And it came to pass, when Jesus had ended these sayings, the people were astonished at his doctrine: {7:29} For he taught them as [one] having authority, and not as the scribes.

SDA original movement misconception. Ellen G White was against all secret societies. Advent-ism has changed now from what it used to be and if Ellen G White was still alive she would have left the SDA denomination. TODAY mainly professed ADVENTISIM IS A NEW MOVEMENT THAT EVEN EGW AND MOST FOUNDERS WOULD NOT JOIN.

"Those who stand under the blood-stained banner of Prince Immanuel CANNOT BE UNITED WITH THE FREE MASONS OR ANY OTHER SECRET ORGANIZATION....-Letter 21, 1893. {Ev 622 .1} Ellen G White

"A power from beneath is working to bring about the last great scenes in the drama,--Satan coming as Christ, and working with all deceivableness of unrighteousness IN THOSE WHO ARE BINDING THEMSELVES TOGETHER IN SECRET SOCIETIES. Those who are yielding to the passion for confederation are working out the plans of the enemy. The cause will be followed by the effect. {Ev 622 .2}"Ellen G White

About the truth, God has a correct interpretation that is not necessarily popularly believed. He gave the Holy Spirit as a guide and it worked through humans like EGW but because Satan has His counterfeit spirits many do not believe.

Alexandra - July 1, 2010 01:33 AM (GMT)

Is it true that SDAs believe that Christians are to keep the Ten Commandments for salvation? If so they are WRONG. They do not make the distinction between Jews and the church.

SDAs would do well to take a good long look at Romans 14:5.

brigig - July 1, 2010 03:24 AM (GMT)

Christians should keep the commandments for Christ's sake not for salvation's sake. Christ kept all the commandments and since He is their example they also should keep them.

Justification cannot be retained unless sanctification follows if there is opportunity.

Sanctification is coming in harmony with all the ten commandments.

Alexandra - July 1, 2010 04:03 AM (GMT)

Christ kept the commandments because He was living in MOSAIC times and was a Jew! He kept the Law perfectly.

But nowhere does it say that Christians have to keep the Law. It does go on to say what fruits of the Spirit are, etc. And nowhere does it say Christians have to set one day aside.

brigig - July 2, 2010 12:10 AM (GMT)

It does not say anything as long as you do not want it to. Not one jot or title will pass from the Law said Jesus. Nowhere does it say that Christians shouldn't keep the Law. The Law is Holy Just and Good. Why do away with it if it ain't broke. It leads us to be like Christ and we know if we focus on Christ we will keep the law just as He kept it. Without having to focus on it we focus on Christ instead.

God is the one who set the seventh day sabbath aside not man. Man set sunday aside. We are Loving God by honoring him as Creator when we set that day aside or else we may as well believe evolution.

"In homage to the Papacy the United States will not be alone. The influence of Rome in the countries that once acknowledged her dominion, is still far from being destroyed.

In the last conflict the Sabbath will be the special point of controversy throughout all Christendom. Secular rulers and religious leaders will unite to enforce the observance of the Sunday; and as milder measures fail, the most oppressive laws will be enacted. It will be urged that the few who stand in opposition to an institution of the church and a law of the land ought not to be tolerated. . . . Romanism in the Old World, and apostate Protestantism in the New, will pursue a similar course toward those who honor the divine precepts.

The so-called Christian world is to be the theater of great and decisive actions. Men in authority will enact laws controlling the conscience, after the example of the Papacy. Babylon will make all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication. Every nation will be involved. [Rev. 18:3-7 quoted.]

The warning of the third angel [of Revelation 14] . . . is represented in the prophecy as being proclaimed with a loud voice, by an angel flying in the midst of heaven; and it will command the attention of the world.

In the issue of the contest all Christendom will be divided into two great classes--those who keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus, and those who worship the beast and his image and receive his mark. Although church and state will unite their power to compel "all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond" (Revelation 13:16), to receive "the mark of the beast," yet the people of God will not receive it. The prophet of Patmos beholds "them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God" and singing the song of Moses and the Lamb. Revelation 15:2, 3."

From Maranatha - Page 189 [EGW]

It's not just "a sabbath" but rather it is "The Sabbath of the Lord"

brigig - July 2, 2010 12:21 AM (GMT)

Dispensationalism is a Jesuit lie. Time will reveal the truth if nothing else can. When the church is not raptured in the tribulation. The devil may set up some fake raptures though as He is capable.

EGW= Ellen G. White

QUOTE

In the beginning, God gave His law to mankind as a means of attaining happiness and eternal life. Satan's only hope of thwarting the purpose of God is to lead men and women to disobey this law, and his constant effort has been to misrepresent its teachings and belittle its importance. His master stroke has been an attempt to change the law itself, so as to lead men to violate its precepts while professing to obey it....
One writer has likened the attempt to change the law of God to an ancient mischievous practice of turning in a wrong direction a signpost erected at an important junction where two roads met. The perplexity and hardship which this practice often caused was great.
A signpost was erected by God for those journeying through this world. One arm of this signpost pointed out willing obedience to the Creator as the road to felicity and life, while the other arm indicated disobedience as the path to misery and death. The way to happiness was as clearly defined as was the way to the city of refuge under the Jewish dispensation. But in an evil hour for our race, the great enemy of all good turned the signpost around, and multitudes have mistaken the way.

From Lift Him Up - Page 140 EGW

QUOTE

During the Christian dispensation, the great enemy of man's happiness has made the Sabbath of the fourth commandment an object of special attack. Satan says, "I will work at cross purposes with God. I will empower my followers to set aside God's memorial, the seventh-day Sabbath. Thus I will show the world that the day sanctified and blessed by God has been changed. That day shall not live in the minds of the people. I will obliterate the memory of it. I will place in its stead a day that does not bear the credentials of God, a day that cannot be a sign between God and His people. I will lead those who accept this day to place upon it the sanctity that God placed upon the seventh day." . . .

Through the setting up of a false sabbath, the enemy thought to change times and laws. But has he really succeeded in changing God's law? The words of the thirty-first chapter of Exodus are the answer. He who is the same yesterday, today, and forever has declared of the seventh-day Sabbath: "It is a sign between me and you throughout your generations." "It is a sign . . . for ever" (Ex. 31:13, 17). The changed signpost is pointing the wrong way, but God has not changed. He is still the mighty God of Israel. "Behold, the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance: behold, he taketh up the isles as a very little thing" (Isa. 40:15). . . . And He is just as jealous for His law now as He was in the days of Ahab and Elijah.

From Lift Him Up - Page 141 EGW

At present Sunday-keeping is not the test. The time will come when men will not only forbid Sunday work, but they will try to force men to labor on the Sabbath, and to subscribe to Sunday observance or forfeit their freedom and their lives. But the time for this has not yet come, for the truth must be presented more fully before the people as a witness....

Refraining from work on Sunday is not receiving the mark of the beast; and where this will advance the interests of the work, it should be done. We should not go out of our way to work on Sunday. . . .

From Maranatha - Page 178 EGW

QUOTE

> As the movement for Sunday enforcement becomes more bold and decided, the law will be invoked against commandment keepers. They will be threatened with fines and imprisonment, and some will be offered positions of influence, and other rewards and advantages, as inducements to renounce their faith. But their steadfast answer is: "Show us from the word of God our error." . . . Those who are arraigned before the courts make a strong vindication of the truth, and some who hear them are led to take their stand to keep all the commandments of God. Thus light will be brought before thousands who otherwise would know nothing of these truths.

From Maranatha - Page 187 EGW

> There is calamity by land and sea. Property and life are destroyed by fire and flood. Satan resolves to charge this upon those who refuse to bow to the idol which he has set up. His agents point to Seventh-day Adventists as the cause of the trouble. "These people stand out in defiance of law," they say. "They desecrate Sunday. Were they compelled to obey the law for Sunday observance, there would be a cessation of these terrible judgments."
>
> Calamities will come--calamities most awful, most unexpected;
> .....
> Satan puts his interpretation upon events, and they [leading men] think, as he would have them, that the calamities which fill the land are a result of Sunday-breaking. Thinking to appease the wrath of God, these influential men make laws enforcing Sunday observance. They think that by exalting this false rest-day higher, and still higher, compelling obedience to the Sunday law, the spurious sabbath, they are doing God service. Those who honor God by observing the true Sabbath are looked upon as disloyal to God, when it is really those who thus regard them who are themselves disloyal, because they are trampling under foot the Sabbath originated in Eden.

Even the Seventh Day Adventists cult had a few things right concerning the keeping of the Ten Commandments and the seventh day Sabbath.

Jesus is the same, today, forever, and His claim to being the Lord of the Sabbath, Matthew 12:8, Mark 2:28, means He is the Lord of the Sabbath 'forever'.

The book of Revelation comes to us from the apostle John and the Lord Jesus Christ and was written to the churches, Revelation 1:1,2.

The following verses which are therefore addressed to the church tells of the necessiaty of keeping the commandments, ten of them, which includes the seventh day Sabbath, are a requirement for obtaining the tree of life:

Revelation 22:11-14

11 He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still.

12 And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be.

13 I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last.

14 Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.

Keeping the commandments is not 'works', but proof that we do love Him.

John 14:15

If ye love me, keep my commandments.

Alexandra - March 18, 2011 06:14 PM (GMT)

Yes, Jesus is the same, yesterday, today, forever...but you need to look at the BIGGER picture. The whole picture. That is where dispensationalism comes in.

kalongi - March 6, 2011 11:17 PM (GMT)

Hi april.

Jesus sets people free.

John {8:36} If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.

You are rationalizing and talking about "independent thoughts" to suit your life in darkness.

John {3:19} And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil. {3:20} For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. {3:21} But he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God.

I am saved, I am as free as it gets. I have my independent thoughts too. Always had them, and always will have - in fact, it was my never ending adventure to seek the truth that it, ultimately led me to the Bible and Jesus (it was the other way around, Jesus leading me to Him).

I actually remember many years ago thinking "so awesome that my family is not religious, I am so free". Well, I still dislike religion (set of man made doctrines to bound you and block you from the truth - the Biblical Jesus), but all that time I was living in complete spiritual darkness.

You see, there are only two views (no more), it's either evolution or creation and God does exist, period (http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...showtopic=22382), this is something a subject you may want to pay attention to - or suffer the consequences. All in all, it's your choice brother april.

I love you, and so does Jesus - fact.

Romans {5:8} But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. {5:9} Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him. {5:10} For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life.

... but if you have already made your decision not to be saved, then there's nothing to be done.

I will be praying for you and may you come to the true light and be saved before it's too late.

Jesus will set you free, guaranteed. Ask all those who are saved (testimonies here: http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...showtopic=26021).

I, too, had problems with drugs, alchool, pornography ... all those are GONE.

2 Corinthians {5:17} Therefore if any man [be] in Christ, [he is] a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. {5:18} And all things [are] of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation

2 Peter {1:23} Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever.

The living God (Jesus) is NOT a religion !!!

CommanderKeen - March 6, 2011 11:22 PM (GMT)

The nordic spirit and soul is just incompatible with Christianity.

kalongi - March 6, 2011 11:34 PM (GMT)

It has nothing to do with the place where you live or with the culture. It is nothing but pride (sin) and eternal rebellion against the living God (not "a" God, but the living one).

Romans {5:8} But God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. {5:9} Much more then, being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him. {5:10} For if, when we were enemies*, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life.*

What more does God need to give us ?!

1. Creation (humanity is without excuse, feel free to believe in the Jesuit created theory of evilution all you want)

2. Jesus is risen Acts {2:32} This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses.. Feel free to believe the one who died on the cross was actually Judas (Muslim invention), that all the witnesses were "allucinating", or that the disciples "stoly His body".

3. Bible prophecy (example, all the messianic prophecies fulfilled in one person = Jesus. The odds of such are just ridiculous, it's really not even funny)

So, what more ?! Ahh, this eternal rebellion against the living one of Abraham, Isaac & Jacob. Comon brothers & sisters, don't see you that you are without excuse because evolution has been exposed as false science.

There is a God, there is a creator. Quit the rebellion please.

The Bible and Jesus have always set people free throughout time. Don't brush it off. Jesus is risen, and that is what matters.

Acts {4:10} Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, [even] by him doth this man stand here before you whole. {4:11} This is the stone which was set at nought of you builders, which is become the head of the corner. {4:12} Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.

If you die today, what will be saying then ?! Oh .. hmmm .. I thought evolution was true ?! Sigh.

Romans {1:19} Because that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath shewed [it] unto them. {1:20} For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, [even] his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse

God means what He says and says what He means. You and everyone else is .... without excuse. No other way around it.

It should be obvious too. The truth always equals freedom (never bondage), therefore, it should be logical to assume that, if the Biblical Jesus is the truth, then you should, somehow, be set free.

John {8:36} If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.

Up to you brothers.

So you basically believe in humanism, which is the religion of French Freemasonry, heterodox Jesuitism, communism, and certain Satanic and occult sects (believing man is or can become a god).

So you basically believe in the world view of the people this website is exposing.

So you've basically been brainwashed by the RELIGION of the mysteries and their public education system.

So you basically got a mind control prison but think you're free because you're puffed up with pride, like 90% of conspiracy theorists out there.

Welp, conspiracy theories always lead to the spiritual. And there's only two choices out there that you can make and you've picked the one of the men who run the world. You will reap your works.

Following our Creator is not a religion. Following our Lord Jesus Christ, is to be adopted as a Son or Daughter of the living LORD God and fellow Brother or Sister with the Lord Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God manifested in the flesh. To be fellow heirs of Gods eternal plan for His Creation, since before the foundation of the world.

Seek ye from the book and read, for the Lords sake.

God first loved us, while we were yet sinners and became a man to show us what love meant and lived a life of love towards everyone and then offered himself as a sacrifice to save us from the judgment for our sin. That whosoever would believe in him would be saved and for this we are eternally grateful and love him for the love he first had for us and we love and care about everyone else who we pray would see the truth about God and the love he's had for them from the beginning.

Jesus has set me free from the prison Satan had ensnared over my mind.

The Protestant reformation wasn't a religious war but a power struggle between different elite groups over land, power, and money like always.

Just like the the purge of the Knights Templars

No the KJV is God's handbook on how to live. God has placed 3 warnings in it, start middle and end, not to add or take from it. Its God's great plan of salvation for mankind, unfolded thru types in the old testament, to fulfilment in the new testament in the death on the cross of Jesus Christ. Its not organized religion, but a personal relationship.
I reccomend the following radio program, http://www.unshackled.org/listen_06.html these are re enacted testimonies of people who were messed up in all kinds of terrible lives but received new life thru Jesus Christ, and were transformed. They are KJV only and are the oldest mission in the US, from Chicago. Ive enjoyed their broadcasts for quite a while.

When I think religion, I think rules, rites, and regulations.

Christianity is not a religion. Not true Christianity. True Christianity simply means that you accept Jesus' substitutionary sacrifice for your sins, that He paid the sin debt for you.

I see Alexandra, so i guess Christianity here is very much like the RCC, and it has been that way ever since the reformation.

the white people just have totally forgotten were they are coming from. Especially you anglo-saxons are totally dissolved from your roots. We, the germanic tribes, the celts, the vikings... we had our own culture, our own tradition, we had our own alphabet, the runes, and not that romish latin, we had our natural and healthy faith...and then came the cross and destroyed it all. and dont tell me about real or true christianity as opponent to RC, no, it's all the same dirt, jewish crazy bulshit from the desert, written by crazy jews, totally alien and incompatible to real white people. i could tell you much more about christianity and where its coming from but you dont want to know and can't believe me anyway because you are afraid the jew-god jahwe will put you in hell for that. i was a christian by myself, because when i woke up to whats really going on in the world, i saw so many things i never could believe they were true, so i believed the bible was true also. But after sometime you should begin to see critical and see whats christianity really is and its indeed the very core of the evil conspiracy thats conquering the world. and that is also why you will never conquer the enemy because you are still stuck with your jew jesus who tells you to love your enemies, instead of hate and fight them, what our white ancestors used to do before they were conquered by the cross.

I believe in Jesus Christ, and I believe in a Centralized Earth, and a young Earth. I still cannot make up my mind about hell, I've also seen all of the evidence and arguments for and against the eternal punishment theoretical interpretations. I simply find it hard to believe Christ is going to condemn humans who failed to match wits with a superior being (Satan) and toss those sheep into the trash can, and award those of us who did out think this superior being. That said, I fear no man, or government, screw em, but to go out and martyr oneself, even with a large group, at this stage of the worlds power elites strangle hold on the world, would be nothing less than suicide. Especially when regardless of our personal beliefs, it is quite obvious they are destroying themselves. Going with them willingly is just stupid.

Yes, Jesus is/was a Jew, what's wrong with that?

Are you on the "blame the Jews" bandwagon? Time to get off if you are. Sure, there are Jews involved, but they are puppets, not the puppetmasters!

Catholicism IS NOT, nor has EVER BEEN, Christianity. For one thing they worship Mary. And Catholics have to jump through hoops if they hope to see heaven. Catholicism also teaches the purgatory lie. Since Jesus' sacrifice washes away sin, what need is there for purgatory? Think about it.

Good thing I'm not protestant. You should check out the 7 church age prophecy of Revelation 2-3.

Ephesus = Early years of the Church: 70-170 A.D.
Smyrna = Great persecution of the Church: 170-312 A.D.
Peragmos = Church joined the World: 312-606 A.D.
Thyatira = Roman power over the Church: 606-1648 A.D.
Sardis = Reformation Church: 1648-1750 A.D.
Philadelphia = True believers stand against unbelief in the Church: 1750-1945 A.D.
Laodecia = End of Church Age: 1945 to Rapture

http://www.hourofthetime.shoppingcartsplus...223/7213038.htm
http://www.scarletandthebeast.com/index2.htm

Jesus Christ had nothing good to say about the Protestant church age, except for a few remnant which eventually became/started the Philadelphia church era.

The purge of templars was righteous on the part of the RCC, the templars were heretics and practitioners of the mysteries. As were the Albigensian/Cathar Crusades, they were dualist and practiced the worst forms of sodomy.

The Bible IS the history of the human race. It exposes the conflict of Shem (Worshiped God) and Nimrod (believed man can become God) right in the text. There are no codes, it's very literal. You can't and will never understand Mystery Babylon if you don't take Genesis literally.

Yeah, gotta love those vikings. Cutting off the testicles and sodomizing their conquered enemies as an act of domination.

Hmmm that would explain why "white people" who reject God are now institutionalizing and teaching sodomy and the most depraved "sex" acts in their schools. That would also explain why white nations who reject God like the Netherlands have an organized political party to advance the pedarist agenda. That would also explain why Europe has a Total Fertility Rate of 1.3.

White people who reject Christ are more primitive and sexually depraved than African savages.

God can do what He wants and yes, predestination/election is fact.

One thing for sure, in His short ministry, Jesus Christ did manage many times to warn people about Hell, so we do have a choice.

An impersonal God He is not.

View Full Version: Messianic Judaism

Title: Messianic Judaism

thisisj1 - March 16, 2011 03:07 PM (GMT)

what is the issue about people that practice Messianic Judaism? are they abominations to true christianity or are they true believers?

golden_oil - March 16, 2011 05:09 PM (GMT)

Well, the orginal church in the Bible were the Messianic Jews. They kept the Sabbath and the Commandments of God and followed the teachings of Jesus while modern Messianics for the mostpart have laid aside the Commandments and keep The Catholic Church's sun god worship day.

trk - March 16, 2011 06:07 PM (GMT)

The only way to get into the kingdom of heaven, is by believing in Jesus as God and believing in Jesus as the Messiah, and it is that easy to get into the kingdom of heaven! Jesus died on the cross for all of our sins, and then Jesus resurrected from the dead! Jesus is the only way to get into heaven for anyone, Jewish or Gentile. And there is no way for anyone, Jewish or Gentile, to get into heaven without Jesus. Because works never save anyone.

Now Christians are not under any of the law. Christians are under grace, under the Lord Jesus's grace.

Romans 11:6 And if by grace, then is it no more of works: otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace: otherwise work is no more work.

Under grace, we are not to be under the law or the sabbath. Christians are not to keep the sabbath:

Colossians 2:16 Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holyday, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days: 17 Which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ.

Notice that the sabbath was just a shadow, a picture of resting in Jesus. So Christians don't keep the sabbath.

Romans 14:5 One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind

Every day is equal. Every day is the Lord's day! So Christians are not under the sabbath.

Acts 20:7 And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight.

Notice that the apostles met on the first day of the week, Sunday, for worship. So to claim that this was from catholicism to worship on Sunday, is ignorance of Scripture. Catholicism didn't exist for over 300 years after Jesus. Yet the apostles were worshiping on Sundays.

The Old Testament sabbath was never a day of worship. It was a day of rest. And the sabbath was only for Israel, never for Christians.

So Messianic Judaism is wrong if it is forcing people under the law (which it usually is). It depends on the group and the individual.

Avoid the doctrine of every person that tries to force you under the sabbath. That means avoid the doctrine of Messianic Judaism individuals that try and force you under the sabbath, and avoid all the doctrines of Seventh Day Adventists (SDA).

SDA will argue that "Sunday is the day of the sun, look at the name of the day!". So SDA worships on Saturday, which is the day named for Saturn, which is Satan. Please note how silly that line of reasoning is. Only in English are these days named that way anyway. Sunday is not Sunday in many other languages. It is just another different word used for the first day of the week. The name means nothing.

That's why it doesn't matter what day you worship. In reality, you ought to worship Jesus every day! :)

SDA is not a Christian group. While SDA has some decent information about the Jesuit issue, yet SDA is all wrong about Biblical doctrines. SDA will lead you to eternal torment in the lake of fire, because SDA teaches to do works for salvation, but works cannot save anyone.

thisisj1 - March 16, 2011 06:17 PM (GMT)

thank you guys for your reply. I have family members that recently converted to messianic judaism. from what i hear from them is they believe the sabbath was saturday, they strong oppose the catholic church, they believe in understanding from the word only. Im still monitoring them as well.

QUOTE

How do you think the United States Government would react if a major foreign power launched a crippling attack on the American and Canadian economies, then within a single decade tried to destroy Boeing Aircraft Corporation, blow up Air Force One, and assassinate the American President?

Do you believe the United States Government would simply accept this as “fate”, or do you believe it would instruct its intelligence agencies to launch a devastating counter-strike, aimed at proportionately punishing the aggressors without running the risk of an intercontinental thermonuclear exchange?

This report on 9-11 is not intended to undermine those who have taken rigid inflexible positions on events at the World Trade Center and Pentagon. Instead, it has been prepared for the tens of thousands of disenfranchised people who are not willing to believe the official line that “Osama Bin Laden did it”, and who are equally unwilling to believe the tempting Internet alternatives.

Most of the disenfranchised believe there was a lot more to this attack than Muslims trying to kill Christians, or a Republican Administration trying to enslave the American people. The disenfranchised are correct. Whoever the motivated first-world attackers were, they used state-of-the-art technology on their primary target, in fields as diverse as military stealth, aircraft avionics, pyrotechnics, and precision demolition.

With the methods and means at their disposal, the attackers could easily have wiped out half of New York and Washington that sunny September morning, but chose not to do so. The World Trade Center was their only primary target, a potent symbol representing America’s economic rape and pillage of the world for the last fifty years.

In military terms the World Trade Center operation was a brilliant success, with not a single brick left standing, followed shortly thereafter by a limited strike on the Pentagon. Although this second strike pointed directly at the armed enforcers of America’s overseas economic rape and pillage, it wasted no heavyweight tactical assets. The Pentagon was a reinforced “hard target” against which the planners threw a single relatively lightweight Boeing 757, with no serious intent of target destruction.

To find those really responsible for 9-11, we need to take a brief but fascinating trip through history, starting in 1989 when kindly democratic New York bankers “liberated” the people of Russia from the “horrors” of communism. Nobody asked the Russians if they actually wanted to be liberated, and nobody in New York gave a damn when Russian old age pensions vanished completely, or when members of the Russian Military were driven from relative wealth to the very brink of poverty and despair.

> To make things worse, the premeditated New York attack on Russia was also intended to destabilise Germany; which at that time was the unchallenged economic powerhouse of Europe.

Within weeks of the “collapse” of communism, the American media hyped up the need for the Berlin Wall to be taken down, allowing East Germans to be reunited with those in the west. This was an apparently noble gesture, but nobody in New York asked the Germans if they actually wanted to be reunited, nor if they were willing to become the economic basket case of Europe, when economically powerful West Germany was forced to absorb penniless and backward East Germany.

The New York bankers were sure this would cripple and subordinate the German economic powerhouse forever, but somehow, despite being badly mauled, Germany managed to survive the process. This was not an easy achievement, and in order to survive this external two-pronged American attack on their respective nations, the intelligence agencies of Russia and Germany were forced to develop an unprecedented level of direct and indirect liaison and co-operation.

> So by late 1989 these two old foes were talking to each other as never before, but deliberately excluding America and Great Britain.

America, and in particular the New York bankers, had made two new and powerful enemies with very long memories, but this was not enough to stop them. Russia had to be brought to heel completely, and that meant severing any external income streams, in particular Russia's lucrative cash flow from oil-rich Iraq. This was especially appealing to the [unashamedly Zionist] New York bankers, who also saw President Saddam Hussein as a clear and present threat to their Middle East hobby farm, otherwise known as the Jewish State.

Suddenly, as if out of nowhere, Iraq invaded Kuwait in clear violation of international law, and all nations including Russia were obliged to back a UN resolution designed to remove them. Then some months later it was obliged, along with all other permanent Security Council members including France, to back another resolution placing complete economic sanctions on Iraq until it was disarmed of the now-famous and highly misleading "Weapons of Mass Destruction".

> Nearly a year would pass before Russia and France [the other major oil player in Iraq] discovered they had both been victims of a deliberate scam devised by America, and initiated by Ambassador April Glaspie.

At her last confidential meeting with Saddam Hussein before Kuwait was invaded, Glaspie gave the Iraqi President the green light. ""We have no opinion on your Arab-Arab conflicts," she told Hussein, "such as your dispute with Kuwait. Secretary [of State James] Baker has directed me to emphasise the instruction ... that Kuwait is not associated with America."

Because of the new induced Iraqi oil crisis at the end of 1991, France had also been backed into a corner. With very few other oil interests of its own, France realised that the only real short to medium term chance of economic survival lay with its advanced aerospace industry and commercial airliner sales. But France had a problem, which stemmed from the fact that it was not big enough to pull off such a huge stunt alone.

Almost immediately the French started discreet negotiations with the Germans and Russians aimed at sharing the financial load, with joint ventures considered the most likely route to commercial success, and large-scale expansion of Airbus Industries, already a joint venture with Germany, the most likely vehicle.

QUOTE

Largely because of the top-secret nature of such sensitive aerospace negotiations, the French intelligence service [SDECE] joined the direct and indirect liaison and co-operation then existing between Russian and German intelligence.

Though it would be inaccurate to say all three agencies were “working together”, it is certainly fair to say that all were by then extremely wary of further American “tricks” that might be potentially dangerous to their respective nations, and passed such information freely between each other. In a subtle sense, and due entirely to its own hostile actions against Russia, Germany and Iraq, America had already become the enemy.

Though Airbus sales had been very slow since 1969, the consortium adopted a far more aggressive stance in the in the early nineties, to the point where it threatened Boeing’s virtual monopoly of the commercial airliner market. If the Americans saw this as a serious threat, they were quite right to do so. Back in 1969 the European manufacturers produced only 10% of all commercial airliners, despite having one quarter of all airline business world wide. By its 30th birthday in December 1999, the Airbus Consortium would be revelling in its new 50% share of the global airliner market.

Apart from its new aggressive sales stance, Europe had another weapon in its arsenal that could not be matched by America under any circumstances, in the shape of the supersonic Concorde. If the Airbus sales team wished to close an important sale, they had this infuriating habit of turning up in one of these sleek and truly awesome aircraft, described countless times as “the sexiest airliner in the world”. Sexy or not, Concorde was and still is the absolute guarantee of European aircraft industry excellence.

By the mid-nineties, these two-hundred-ton white darts had been flashing backwards and forwards across the Atlantic every day of the week at twice the speed of sound, for more than twenty years non stop without serious incident. A free ride in Concorde, and a glass or two of vintage champagne, was nearly always enough to convince even the most reluctant airline executive to choose Airbus over Boeing.

During early 1995, Boeing sales experienced an unconnected but serious internal problem in Europe, though the details were never made public. The German flag carrier Lufthansa discovered that its new Boeing 747-400 aircraft had been fitted with flight directors [auto-pilots] that were vulnerable to American remote-control, ostensibly designed to “recover” hijacked aircraft whether the hijackers wanted to be recovered or not.

> Lufthansa was not informed about this “free extra” in advance, and was furious that its sovereign aircraft might be covertly “rescued” by America, without the knowledge or permission of the German Government.

In a mammoth operation rumored to cost in excess of $800 million, Lufthansa stripped every flight director out of every Boeing in its fleet, replacing them in toto with German systems programmed by the Luftwaffe [German Air Force]. According to a member of the German internal security service in Frankfurt during October 1996, all Lufthansa aircraft had by that date been secured, rendering them invulnerable to remote flight director commands transmitted by any and all American authorities. Under the new intelligence protocols, Russia and France were made aware of these flight director risks.

During 1996 there were also two notable developments in Russia. First a major consortium was formed to bid for major production chunks of the Airbus A380, the huge double decker Jumbo jet still in its design stages, but which nonetheless would seriously threaten Boeing’s very existence if it got off the drawing board. The new “Aviation Euro-Russian Consortium” united the Russian Economic Development and Trade Ministry, the Aviastar, Hydromash and Tupolev design and production enterprises, as well as the NIAT and TsAGI research institutes.

During the same time frame, but operating completely outside Russian Government channels, NASA and Boeing approached private individuals at Tupolev with plans to “rent” an ancient supersonic TU-144 “Concordski”, which they wished to restore and use as a “Flying Laboratory”. Despite having been grounded for more than twenty years, huge sums of hard American dollars had the old Tupolev restored in record time, and the new NASA-Boeing “TU-144LL” made its first flight during late 1996.

Though they remained at a discreet distance, Russian intelligence officials were perplexed. Why on earth did the Americans want to restore this ancient Tupolev, based mostly on stolen Concorde drawings, which in the past they had scornfully referred to as the “flying train wreck” after it crashed at the Paris Air Show? Why not use one of their own supersonic American aircraft or, alternatively, rent a French or British Concorde in flying condition, which would surely have been much cheaper?

> All the Americans would say was, “It is hoped the knowledge gained from the flights will benefit NASA & Boeing's in their efforts to develop the technology that may enable design of an efficient, environmentally friendly second-generation supersonic transport”.

An “environmentally friendly supersonic transport” appeared to be a complete contradiction in terms, so Russian intelligence officials made a few inquiries of their own. Though it was meaningless to them back in 1998, the Russians noted that the NASA–Boeing experiments with the TU-144LL involved a lot of work associated with fuel system temperatures, and with low speed engine inlet and engine compartment thermal [heat] environments. To aid these technical but puzzling measurements, the Americans installed a total of 98 thermocouples [heat sensors], plus 16 total and 6 static pressure sensors.

Though the Russians thought the entire procedure was extremely suspicious, and might be indirectly connected to the Aerospatiale Concorde, they had nothing concrete to go on. Nevertheless, under the new intelligence protocols, France and Germany were made aware of this strange NASA-Boeing activity.

Concorde

IRREFUTABLE PHOTOGRAPHIC PROOF OF PRE-FLIGHT SABOTAGE

The definitive Japanese photograph on the left shows 2000°C flames pouring out of Concorde 4590's left mainwheel bay, well inboard of engines 1 & 2, and more than 30 feet forward of the hot engine afterburners. Note the small red circle which shows flames from the wheelbay being sucked into the open auxiliary air intake of No 2 engine, which caught fire eleven seconds AFTER the initial explosion in or above the wheelbay in fuel tanks 6 or 2. A fire of this magnitude inside the sealed wing requires its own self-generating source of heat and oxygen, which in this case was most likely Thermite, or a very similar compound.

When Captain Christian Marty taxied Concorde Flight 4590 away from the terminal at Paris Charles de Gaulle Airport on 25 July 2000, he knew that his performance would have to be exemplary. One day earlier a message had been received from Tokyo requesting that Flight 4590 be delayed until after the arrival back from the G7 summit of French President Jacques Chirac, his wife, and a bevy of Japanese guests who all wanted to watch the famous Concorde take off.

Captain Marty was a little late away from the terminal, but spot on time for the Presidential demonstration. In this particular case his exact time of departure was not governed by the inflexible rules of the tight Paris-New York Concorde schedule, because Flight 4590 was a special flight - a charter carrying 99 Germans, one American, and 9 French crew.

> As Concorde 4590 turned onto the threshold of Runway 26R to line up for take off, Captain Marty and his other flight deck crew could see the French Presidential Boeing 747 parked in the distance, at a holding point slightly to the left of Runway 26R.

It was almost perfect positioning, though perhaps a shade too close to the active runway. No matter, with all four reheats [afterburners] alight, Flight 4590 would be airborne and climbing long before it passed the Presidential Boeing, presenting the perfect picture for Chirac's enthusiastic Japanese guests, who had their expensive cameras at the ready. As you may have already guessed, the high-definition photographs of Concorde on this page were taken by a guest of French President Jacques Chirac, who was personally handed first-generation copies less than two hours later.

Sitting at the end of the runway, Captain Marty had already briefed his flight crew on emergency procedures [repeated in the CVR transcript an the bottom of this page], telling them “V1 is hundred and fifty [knots], VR one hundred and ninety-eight, V2 two hundred and twenty two” … “after V1 we continue on the SID we just talked about we land back on runway 28R".

In layman terms V1 is the speed at which the aircraft is committed to take off because it can no longer hope to stop on the runway, and is therefore a critically important point in the overall flight profile. Because of the incredible power of Concorde, it is important to note that all the events which follow next, happened in a mere 45.4 seconds.

With full power on all four engines, Captain Marty released the brakes and Concorde 4590 started accelerating down the runway towards the Presidential Boeing. At 150 knots the co-pilot called “V1”, and Marty knew on his own instructions that he was now committed to flight.

Less than one second later there was a low-frequency noise on the Cockpit Voice Recorder, as an explosion occurred in or above the main wheel bay in the forward left wing, sending white-hot 2000° C flames out through the wheel bay doors: flames which were then sucked into No. 2 engine [inner left] through the open auxiliary air intakes below. The hot gasses entering No. 2 effectively reduced its thrust to zero, and Flight 4590 started to drift to the left.

Of itself, a single engine failure would not have been fatal, but Captain Marty was unaware that a critical spacer had been removed from the left main wheel bogie before flight. Now exposed to lateral forces caused by the excessive asymmetric power from engines 3 and 4 on the right, the left main wheel bogie slewed slightly to the left, introducing drag which retarded acceleration, while sharply increasing the leftwards drift towards the Presidential Boeing 747, which was now frighteningly close.

> The co-pilot shouted “Watch Out!” and Captain Christian Marty dragged Concorde 4590 up off the runway at 188 knots, a full ten knots below his minimum allowable VR [Rotate] speed.

Concorde missed the Presidential Boeing by a whisker, but Captain Marty probably already knew his own aircraft was doomed. He had lifted off too early and was also losing engine power, a fact reinforced by the No. 2 engine fire alarm, which finally sounded a full 11 seconds after the original explosion in the wing, with the fire then spreading to No. 1 Engine. Captain Christian Marty had saved the lives of the President of France, his wife, and their esteemed Japanese guests on the Boeing 747, but he could not save the lives of the 109 souls on board the Air France Concorde.

> Two minutes and six seconds after starting its initial take-off roll, Concorde 4590 crashed on “La Patte d’ Oie” in Gonesse.

Within hours the western media, spearheaded by America, was telling the world that Concorde had crashed because of a “burst tire” or “a fire in the afterburner”, and was blatantly lobbying for all Concordes to be grounded forever, because they were “too dangerous”. The Presidential Boeing and the missing spacer were never mentioned, nor the obvious fact that fire from a blazing afterburner could not under any circumstances travel 35 feet upwind to the main wheel bay, while a 180 m.p.h. slipstream was simultaneously blowing backwards across the entire wing section.

Any such suggestion would require the laws of physics to be reversed. What was and still is obvious though, is that anyone planning sabotage of this sophistication during the take off run, would require specific detailed knowledge of fuel system temperatures, and low speed engine inlet and engine compartment thermal [heat] environments.

Shortly after the crash I posted a total of 14 web page reports about the Concorde crash, which over a period of about a year were joined by about 80 more pages written by various different authors. All pointed to serious discrepancies in the western media version of events, with many calling for criminal inquiries or proceedings of one kind or another. After a while people lost interest [as they do], but the pages remained undisturbed in cyber space, available to any net surfer doing a simple search on Google.

Then in late December 2002, all 14 of my Concorde web pages were hacked off the net, as were those belonging to the other dissenting authors. Though I doubt there is any direct connection, this “mass hacking” occurred almost exactly one month before the NASA Space Shuttle Columbia turned into a blazing Israeli star overhead Palestine, Texas, after a fire and devastating explosion in its left main wheel bay. My report on Columbia is here.

> The main argument in my earlier reports on Concorde was simply that Jet-A1 fuel in a sealed wing tank cannot spontaneously combust, nor can it generate temperatures of 2000°C under any circumstances.

Though this accurate claim drew a lot of abuse back in 2001, it has now become more fashionable with hundreds of people claiming that the “fuel fires” in the World Trade Center resulting from the two Boeing 767 aircraft impacting with the towers, could not have generated sufficient temperature to melt the steel in the structure, which remains the “government-approved” story of how the towers collapsed.

This 9-11 claim is correct. The short film clip below [a shorter Shock Wave Flash version of a film clip borrowed from whatreallyhappened.com] shows massive camera shake about 8 seconds before WTC1 finally starts to collapse from the inside, i.e. you can see the spire on top descending through the center of the tower, while the outer walls are still stationary.

The only realistic way this could happen is if the massive central steel elevator column was first melted in the basement, causing a delayed central collapse as steel temperature increased to liquefaction point. But melted with what? The only reasonable answer is the same as the only reasonable answer for Concorde 4590 – a Thermite compound burning at 2,200°C .

The exact sequence of events after the disastrous sabotage of Concorde 4590 has been deliberately suppressed, but it is generally known that within 48 hours of the crash, the French, Russian, German and Japanese intelligence services had concluded it was no accident. It is also rumored [but cannot be confirmed] that six weeks later a discreet and informal strategy meeting was arranged at a Chateau outside Paris, attended by senior representatives of all four intelligence services.

At that seminal meeting the culprit was confirmed, and a strategy devised for the future. Though these major powers could not stop America meddling in the affairs of minor nations like Serbia or Somalia, it [America] would be forcibly and punitively reminded that no further attacks, direct or indirect, overt or covert, would ever be tolerated against the major powers in future. The meeting lasted for five days, ending on 11 September 2000.

> QUOTE

> For the first few hours after the attack on the World Trade Center in New York, American politicians and officials visibly ran around chickens with their heads cut off. None had a clue what was going on, and most gratefully parroted subtle media insinuations that “Osama Bin Laden did it”.

Unlikely though that scenario was, the “Osama” line was good enough to stave off acute embarrassment for a day or two. During those first forty eight hours, not a single American politician or official showed even a trace of the “polish” normally associated with smooth individuals armed with foreknowledge. The entire World Trade Center had been disassembled brick by brick, and absolutely no-one knew who the attackers were.

Then reverse spin was put on the ball by “respected” and “alternative” commentators alike, who simply did not and could not believe that a carefully planned and devastating attack like this could possibly be the work of a devout Muslim freedom fighter living in an Afghan cave. Human psychology kicked in with a vengeance at this stage, flicking tens of thousands of brains into illogical thought-reversal.

If the government was saying that it was Osama when it was not Osama at all, then the government’s only reason for doing so must be because the government had ordered the attack itself. The entire Internet then became infected with the electronic equivalent of a serious bipolar disorder, with surfers being emotionally dragged up and down as one view clashed head-on with another, and authors called each other very nasty names.

Suddenly the Boeing 757 that hit the Pentagon was not a Boeing 757, but was instead an American F-16 dispatched from NORAD Headquarters by a crazed four-star general. The fact that seven primary radars tracked the Boeing 757 into central Washington no longer mattered. Clearly the radar controllers were all lying on government orders, with the Boeing, its crew and passengers somehow hidden at the bottom of the Potomac River, or perhaps spirited away to Area 51 to join the Aliens.

> As this particular rumor grew bigger and bigger, it deliberately led you further and further away from its origin in Paris, France.

Perhaps saddest of all is the rumor that President George Bush must have known about the attack in advance, because he did not react appropriately when whispered the news while reading a childrens book in a Floridaprimary school. While not wishing to detract from the dignity of the official Office of the American President, it must be pointed out that the present incumbent is an intellectually-challenged politician who avoided combat duty by failing to learn how to fly an F-102 in the Air National Guard.

It is also a media established fact that The President was reading the children's book upside down in Florida.To be able to react appropriately to whispered news of an attack on New York, you must first have the mental ability to perceive the gravity of the message. In all probability and based on the available evidence, George probably heard the message upside-down and completely failed to understand.

Grim though the attack on New York was, with its 2,800 dead, it was certainly no more grave than the recent American invasion of Iraq, which to date has transformed 3,500+ innocent Iraqi women and children to hamburger mince through the massed use of cluster munitions. Evidently America has learned nothing at all from the punitive strike of 9-11, and may need to be punished again in the future. This would not be very difficult to execute, with hundreds of heavy jets in American airspace still flying around with highly vulnerable flight directors.

For the present at least, the French in particular seem to be holding the whip hand when it comes to subtlety in the lethal exchanges between America and “Old Europe”. On Thursday 12 June 2003, French Concorde F-BVFA landed at Dulles Airport, Washington, as a gift from the French to the Udvar-Hazy Center of the Smithsonian Institution's National Air and Space Museum . In donating the aircraft to the Smithsonian, Air France Chairman Jean-Cyril Spinetta said the airline is confident "Concorde will be seen and admired by as many people as possible."

> At the surface level at least, the donation was an extremely generous gesture in the midst of seriously strained relations between America and France.

The Udvar-Hazy Center is named after Steven F. Udvar-Hazy, CEO of International Lease Finance Corporation, the world’s largest buyer of jetliners, and the No 1 Airbus customer.

Speaking at Le Bourget in 2001, Udvar-Hazy said, “ILFC believes the Airbus family of aircraft offers the best technology, performance, range, passenger comfort and cargo capabilities”… “This order solidifies our long relationship with Airbus, which began with a contract for three A320s in 1987. Today, our backlog with Airbus is 376 aircraft, which represents 60 percent of our total commercial jet backlog.”

Perhaps it was a Gallic sense of humor that led to the French Government donating Concorde F-BVFA to a museum wing specifically dedicated to the American who holds the record for Airbus purchases, and has thereby probably hastened the demise of Boeing Aircraft Corporation more than any other single man.

To ensure the French Concorde does not feel lonely in a hostile land, F-BVFA will be parked next door to the American NASA Space Shuttle “Enterprise”. In the nightime gloom after the museum lights are switched off and the curators go home, who knows what might happen then? Perhaps the ghosts of Captain Christian Marty and the crew of the Space Shuttle Columbia will stalk the silent halls, looking up at these two giant monuments to the futile savagery of man.

Update 16 June 2003

American Aircraft All Grounded This Week at 45th Paris Air Show

On Saturday, French President Jacques Chirac opened the 45th Paris Air Show at Le Bourget, then stood clapping his applause as the last of the Air France Concordes made her final landing on the runway in front of him, before taxiing around the airfield in a final lap of honor.

> Then President Chirac went on to admire the Airbus stand, where he warmly congratulated consortium members on their 300 aircraft deliveries for 2003. If President Chirac noticed the complete lack of Americans in the crowd, he was far too polite to mention it.

In what is being publicly touted as simple “payback” for Europe’s strident opposition to the U.S. invasion of Iraq, no American officer above the rank of colonel is allowed to attend the 45th Paris Air Show at Le Bourget this week, and no American military or civil aircraft will be allowed to participate in the air displays. Yes, you did read that correctly: NO air displays by any American aircraft.

Bearing in mind that the Paris Air Show is the unchallenged premier world forum for selling aircraft and other aerospace related items to more than 100 participating countries, there is nothing simple about this bizarre decision, which was certainly not made on the basis of payback. No politician or businessman on earth has ever let simple emotion or patriotism get in the way of multi-billion dollar aerospace sales. Business transactions announced during the last show in 2001 totaled a whopping € 63 billion.

> Reasonable analysis suggests the real reason for the self-inflicted and very damaging restrictions is more likely to be serious concern for the safety of America’s captains of industry, for senior American military officers, and for U.S. aircraft flying in a potentially hostile European environment. Exactly how hostile that environment might become, will be mentioned later.

The number of American aircraft on static display at the show has been drastically reduced, with a mere handful of military aircraft joined by one Boeing 737-700 and one Boeing 777-346.

Their minders are feeling the heat already, with a U.S. Air Force captain who gave his name only as Steve, being questioned by a visitor from Gabon who said the campaign in Iraq had depleted U.

S. prestige. Then a Pakistani visitor complained that the U.S. government had not delivered the military planes his country bought years ago.

The Europeans seem unconcerned by the dramatic American absence. While French Mirage 2000 and Rafale fighter planes roar overhead, carrying out dramatic corkscrew spins, and advanced Russian turboprops demonstrate their extraordinary speed, wealthy Arabs and Asians are discreetly lured into manufacturers tents for smoked salmon and vintage champagne. The Israelis are there, selling stolen American missile secrets to the Chinese as usual, and solid-gold pens are on hand to sign contracts that suddenly appear as if by magic.

QUOTE

It may be that they're doing it to show France what they think about its position in the Iraqi war, but I find it incomprehensible," said Dan Solon, an analyst at London-based consultancy Avmark International.

The Pentagon is shooting itself in the foot." Attending the world famous event ``isn't to schmooze the host," said Solon whether you like the French or not, if the commander and chief of, let's say, the Malaysian Air Force, happens to be at the show and you're a senior officer, you want to say to him, `We've got a great airplane flying and how do you like it?"'

Solon is not alone in his confusion, with many others asking very hard questions about this inexplicable behaviour, and also about the strange behaviour of the French when they suddenly grounded the Concorde fleet on 31 May 2003, a full five months before the agreed date in October when both Air France and British Airways were due to retire their national Concorde fleets simultaneously, then throw a huge party.

Security sources suggest that there was a real or perceived threat of a second Air France Concorde being deliberately brought down, before they could all be gracefully retired together, and the French Government took pre-emptive [and very sudden] action in order to eliminate the possibility. If this really was the case, a second dramatic Concorde crash might have been the public relations death knell for the Airbus A380 Super Jumbo, and possibly for the Airbus consortium as a whole. One Concorde crash was bad enough, but two would be catastrophic.

Giving limited credibility to this suggestion is the long list of very late Paris Air Show cancellations by a range of top American aerospace executives, all of whom intended to fly to the 45th Paris Air Show right up until a few days after Concorde was suddenly grounded. The late cancellation list includes the bosses of Lockheed Martin and Northrop Grumman, with the Boeing boss apparently having no plans to attend at all. Might these sudden changes in plans be directly or indirectly linked to the threat perceived by the French?

We may never get to the bottom of the matter, and in any event the mighty Concorde itself might not be completely dead, or at least not yet. British billionaire Sir Richard Branson, famous for taking on British Airways with his tiny Virgin Atlantic years ago, and winning the fight, intends to challenge the grounding of the British Concordes in October. Branson maintains that under the rules governing Concorde's initial construction, he can and should be allowed to continue operating the supersonic transatlantic service if British Airways no longer wishes to do so.

Concorde 4590 Cockpit Voice Recorder (CVR) Transcript

The method used to transcribe the recording consisted of faithfully reproducing, almost phonetically, what was heard, without interpretation or extrapolation. However, knowledge of procedures and technical terms currently in use is sometimes very helpful for the comprehension of certain words or parts of words.

This was why several aircrew who knew the voices of the crew, the background noise of a Concorde cockpit and the various alarms joined in with this work. In addition, filtering adapted to the flight segment allowing reduction of the parasite background noise was used to improve the intelligibility of the recording.

QUOTE

The beginning of the recording was on 25 July 2000 at 14 h 12 min 23 s. Item 17 on the checklist, "cockpit check" was under way. This was followed by the "pre-start-up" checklist, engine starting, the "post start-up", "taxi" and "pre-takeoff" check lists. Of the whole thirty minutes on the CVR, the following elements are of note.

Legend: Captain = Captain, FO = First Officer (Co-Pilot), FE = Flight Engineer (Eng)
V1 = Committed to takeoff, VR = Rotate off runway, V2 = Sustained Flight
Reheats = Afterburners

14 h 13 min 13 s, FE "so total fuel gauge I've got ninety-six four with ninety-six three for ninety-five on board".

14 h 13 min 46 s, FO "fire protection", FE "tested".

14 h 14 min 04 s, FO "ZFWZFCG", FE "so I've got ninety-one nine and fifty-two two".

14 h 43 min 48.2 s, FE "I've shut it down".

14 h 43 min 49.9 s, FO "the airspeed".

14 h 43 min 56.7 s, FO "the gear isn't retracting".

14 h 43 min 58.6 s, third fire alarm.

Between 14 h 43 min 59 s and 14 h 44 min 03 s, three GPWS warnings are heard and at the same the FO announces "the airspeed".

14 h 44 min 14.6 s, FO "Le Bourget Le Bourget" then a few seconds later “negative we're trying Le Bourget".

14 h 44 min 31.6 s, end of the recording.

Note: some words in the flight part of the recording, "stop" for example, were doubtful. These portions of the recording were sent to the CNRS linguistics laboratory in Aix-en-Provence. The work on signal filtering and phoneme analysis carried out by the researchers at the lab did not clear up the doubts.

So if it was just a piece of metal left on the runway then why would anyone with any sense get rid of the Concorde plane which had a thirty year no accident flight record? This is complete bunkum in order to cover up the Defense Industrial Security Command in Denver and its funders Boeing. Please take note that Continental Airlines is a U.S. Airline firm which makes this more the interesting.

A Paris court has said Continental Airlines was "criminally responsible" for the crash of a Concorde supersonic jet 10 years ago, and fined it 200,000 euros (£170,000).

It has also been ordered to pay 1m euros to the jet's operator Air France.

A Continental mechanic, John Taylor, was given a 15-month suspended prison sentence over the crash.

Continental has said it will appeal, saying the verdict is "absurd" and "only protects French interests".

Another airline operative, Stanley Ford, and three French officials were cleared.

The Concorde caught fire shortly after take-off from Charles de Gaulle airport in Paris in July 2000, killing 113 people.

The court ruled that the crash was caused by a piece of metal left on the runway after falling from a Continental jet. Investigators said this caused a tyre-burst in the Concorde, which in turn ruptured a fuel tank.

The judge in the case confirmed investigators' findings that titanium debris dropped by a Continental DC-10 onto the runway at Charles de Gaulle airport before the Concorde took off was to blame.

Mr Taylor should not have used titanium parts to make repairs on the DC-10 because the metal was known to be too dangerous for aeroplane tyres, and he should have used a softer metal, aluminium, instead, the court found.

Continental had disputed this interpretation, saying the airliner, operated by Air France, was already in flames before it hit the small piece of titanium.

"While we agree with the court's decision that Stanley Ford was innocent of the charges he faced and we share his relief that his decade-long nightmare is over, we strongly disagree with the court's verdict regarding Continental Airlines and John Taylor and will of course appeal this absurd finding," a UK-based Continental spokesman said in a statement.

"Portraying the metal strip as the cause of the accident, and Continental and one of its employees as the sole guilty parties, shows the determination of the French authorities to shift attention and blame away from Air France, which was government-owned at the time and operated and maintained the aircraft, as well as from the French authorities responsible for the Concorde's airworthiness and safety."
Compensation

Financial claims were not the trial's focus, but apportioning blame was, says the BBC's Christian Fraser in Paris.

However, the court ruled that Continental should pay 70% of any compensation claims to the families of victims. Aerospace group EADS was asked to pay the remaining 30%.

Following Monday's verdict, Air France, which paid out 100m euros in compensation, may decide to seek to reclaim some of that money from Continental.

There is a separate court case taking place over economic compensation for the crash.

Most of the passengers were German tourists heading to New York to join a luxury cruise to the Caribbean. Nine French crew members and four hotel workers also died.

Title: Monstrous Massacre in Fallujah

Brigadier General Mark Kimmitt must be tried for heinous war crimes!

QUOTE

The Lockheed AC-130 'Spectre' is America's most deadly punitive weapon system.

At least five times in the last week, U.S. Marine commanders have summoned Spectres overhead Fallujah, where each has indiscriminately pumped more than 4,000 rounds of high explosive ammo per minute into the defenseless civilian population below. Vietnam's Mai Lai atrocity was a mere walk in the park by comparison with this international outrage, which has left between 600 and 1,100 unarmed civilians dead, and more than 2,500 seriously injured.

At first glance it seems difficult to find any connection between Richard Clark, and the crazed U.S. Marines who are currently butchering hundreds of unarmed women and children in Fallujah, there is a connection, he is the man who invented the term 'al Qaeda' while serving on the National Security Council back in 1998, and the brutal Easter assault on Fallujah, a civilized city the size of Miami, is designed to make you believe that 'al Qaeda terrorists' have flooded into Iraq, where they are allegedly overwhelming poor members of the U.S. Marine Corps, who in turn are left with no other choice but to fight back.

As a senior member of the ruling Zionist Cabal in New York, Richard Clark's primary objective this year is to make you believe that his mythical 'al Qaeda terrorists' are also steadily flooding into America, where they are allegedly forming 'cells' in every city and town across the land. Clark is artfully achieving this objective by using the 9-11 Commission as a forum to attack Condoleezza Rice and others, for not taking warnings about 'al Qaeda' seriously in the years preceding the attack on New York.

This devious approach is yielding rich rewards for the Zionist Cabal, because a significant majority of Americans today loath George Bush, Condoleezza Rice, Dick Cheney and almost anyone else who had anything to do with the fake 'Weapons of Mass Destruction' invasion of Iraq. Because Richard Clark is telling you what you want to hear about the Bush Administration's obvious confusion over 9-11, you naturally want to believe him.

Clark is presenting a very tempting lure, but understand right now that it is also a deadly trap. Allow Clark credibility on the highly dubious question of muddled Republican Administration affairs, and you will also be obliged to give immense credibility to Richard Clark's homegrown 'al Qaeda', the Zionist falseflag ultimately designed to force ruthless Communist-style control on American citizens, and on the Americas in general.

We will return to Clark later in the report, but first we need to take a close look at the U. S. Marines' attack on the civilians of Fallujah, which shows the manner in which American military honor is being steadily and deliberately eroded by a small number of known Zionist senior officers.

> These officers have violated the code, deliberately turned U.S. Marines in Iraq into desensitized war criminals, and marked their service records accordingly.

War criminals have everything to lose, and in the future these dishonored U.S. Marines will obey illegal Zionist orders to attack 'selected targets' in Miami and other American cities, a situation that seemed impossible six short months ago. Forget all western media propaganda about Fallujah being a miniscule desert hotbed of religious fanatics. In reality, Fallujah is a large city the size of Miami, located deep inside Iraq, which in turn is the accepted birthplace of all western civilization.

Today Fallujah and the rest of Iraq is lawfully administered by the government of Saddam Hussein, which still has an accredited ambassador at the United Nations. Regardless of New York media 'spin', anyone else caught inside Iraq bearing arms but not in possession of a legitimate visa issued by the Hussein Government, is regarded in international law as an 'invader' or 'spy' who may be summarily executed by the Republican Guard, or by any other military authority designated by the sole legitimate Government of Iraq.

The mass attack on Fallujah was triggered when four heavily armed American mercenaries were caught driving through the center of the city, on their way to assassinate a civilian Iraqi target on the illegal orders of American "Vice Consul" L. Paul Bremer.

The good residents of Fallujah managed to stop the vehicles and beat the mercenaries to death with their bare hands, as would the good residents of Miami if a bunch of heavily-armed Japanese mercenaries suddenly decided to drive into town to execute a popular American mayor, on the illegal orders of some pumped-up Japanese "Vice Consul" appointed in Tokyo.

It is the reaction to this understandable incident that demonstrates the sheer barbarism and naivete of the American invaders. Arrogantly assuming their actions would not be noticed [or could not be countered] by the Republic Guard, a few thousand U.S. Marines with battle tanks and other armor approached the 300,000 residents of Fallujah from the east and the west, drawn from existing Marine bases in Ar Ramadi and Baghdad.

This was an inexcusably stupid tactical error, because as soon as the U.S. Marines closed on Fallujah and started shelling the unarmed women and children within, Republican Guard Special Forces units carried out lightning strikes on the weakened Marine bases in Ar Ramadi and Western Baghdad, destroying fuel dumps and killing 130 Americans in less than 12 hours.

> These facts were reported briefly by Sky News in London, before that media network was predictably silenced.

Though as a combat veteran I would prefer to blame what happened next on certifiable nutcases like George W. Bush or L. Paul Bremer, I cannot do so, for the simple reason that all illegal orders from this point onwards were issued directly by commissioned American military officers, headed locally by Brigadier General Mark Kimmitt.

In a chilling echo of Communist Joe Stalin's insane behavior, General Kimmitt used megaphones to order all women and children to vacate the city of Fallujah, and further ordered that all men remain behind. By his own verbal orders that day, Kimmitt publicly announced his intent to murder approximately 100,000 Iraqi men, as a 'reprisal' for daring to try and legally defend their own wives and children, in their own city, in their own country.

The men inside Fallujah armed only with AK47s and RPGs, are not imported 'al Qaeda terrorists' as the Zionist media in New York would have you believe, nor are they members of the Republican Guard. The Iraqi men who have been desperately trying to protect their families against almost impossible odds, are the direct equivalent of American National Guardsmen in Florida, tasked with the defense of cities like Miami in time of war.

> Naturally enough, the women and children of Fallujah chose to stay with their husbands and fathers for protection, though they did nervously send a few elderly grandparents to nearby towns.

Kimmitt's original plan was to use Abrams M1A1 battle tanks to 'punish' the people of Fallujah, but he was frustrated by a total lack of suitable fuel. With American tanker convoys ablaze in the east and west courtesy of Republican Guard strike teams, the incredibly thirsty Abrams tanks lined up on the outskirts of Fallujah were no more use to him than scrap iron.

Forced to switch to plan 'B', Kimmitt ordered Marine Cobra helicopter gunships to attack the town center with cannon fire and rockets. Amazingly, his orders were instantly obeyed. Every U.S. Marine commissioned and non-commissioned officer understands very clearly that targeting civilians is a war crime - period. There are no special exceptions to this rule, and absolutely no way any Marine can avoid the hangman's noose if later charged and convicted.

Those who smirk and claim these are not war crimes because war was never declared, are of course entitled to be hung as common murderers instead. Either way you look at it, when Marine Cobra gunships started the mass murder by opening fire on Fallujah city center, more than two hundred years of U.S. Marine Corps honor vanished instantly. In less than a minute, the once-proud American Marine Corps was transformed into the same despicable trash as Pol Pot's butchers in Cambodia.

After a brief but intense period of indiscriminate killing, Kimmitt did his Joe Stalin megaphone trick again, inviting the women and children of Fallujah to flee the town but leave their men behind. Once again they refused, leaving Kimmitt 'no other choice' but to summon giant Lockheed AC-130 Spectre gunships, which he glibly told the assembled media throng would use "pinpoint precision to kill enemy insurgents".

QUOTE

Vanessa Dobos is a gunner on a USAF AC-130 gunship. She has seen action in Iraq and Afghanistan. She likes long walks on the beach, men who aren't afraid to cry and puppies.

Her dislikes include feed tray stoppages, tracer flareout of her NVGs and premature fixed-wing strikes scattering her high-value targets.

Believe me people, a Spectre does not even understand the words pinpoint or precision, and this is why. In simple terms Spectre is a lopsided airborne battleship, with cannon of various calibers poking out of its left-hand side.

When the captain of the Spectre receives target coordinates, he flies the aircraft slightly offset to the right of the designated target, banks [leans] the Spectre to the left and hauls the cumbersome aircraft into a tightly banked left-hand spiral turn, while opening fire on the target with all of those cannon, in a withering old-fashioned broadside reminiscent of the Battle of Trafalgar.

Even if only two of its four available high-cyclic cannon are selected, Spectre is guaranteed to punch a high explosive shell into the ground every two square feet, decimating an area the same size as a football field with less than twenty seconds of continuous fire. Pinpoint precision plays no part at all in this process, which is designed to kill everyone and everything within the broad target zone.

When a single AC-130 Spectre fires a broadside, it makes an entire squadron of German Stuka dive bombers look like kiddy toys by comparison. Before he was eventually stopped, Kimmitt had summoned a minimum of five Spectres, all of which took turns to fire indiscriminately on the city center. Depending on where you get your information, these punitive strikes on an unarmed population killed between 600 and 1,100 civilians, while seriously injuring more than 2,500 others.

Because the ersatz 'Coalition Authority' in Baghdad has already admitted 600 dead in Fallujah, it seems more than likely that Arab media estimates of 1,000+ murdered will eventually be proved correct. The sheer numbing magnitude of this American war crime, makes Vietnam's Mai Lai look like a mere walk in the park. Though the New York media bleated that Kimmitt then magnanimously 'withdrew' to allow humanitarian aid to reach the city, nothing could be further from the truth.

A combination of three entirely unexpected factors forced his hand and left Kimmitt no choice. First was massive public outrage in Baghdad, which saw hundreds of Sunni and Shi'ite Muslims working side by side, loading rickety trucks with modest food and medical supplies for the besieged families inside Fallujah. Hundreds more people who did not own a truck or car, carried what little food they could spare on their backs, and walked the 40 miles to Fallujah.

Arab media outlets gave significant coverage to this startling event, but New York made sure that western media outlets did not relay the information to you. Following hot on the heels of this inexplicable and thus ominous direct Sunni-Shi'ite liaison, the Republican Guard destroyed a second convoy in Western Baghdad, taking a total of thirteen American prisoners including two soldiers.

Out of these thirteen American prisoners, you have only been shown the luckless Thomas Hamill, a tanker driver from Mississippi, but I can assure you the rest are very real. The Republican Guard has threatened to execute all of them if the U.S. Marines do not withdraw completely from Fallujah.

[See confirmation newsflash below dated 17 April 2004] Kimmitt [in liaison with Bremer] had originally intended to replace his Marines with 'tame' Iraqi soldiers once the major massacre was over, thereby allowing his new war criminals to melt away into the night, but once again Kimmitt was in for another very unpleasant surprise, his third in less than five days.

QUOTE

The 2nd Battalion of the newly trained Iraqi Army refused point-blank to go to Fallujah, telling American commanders, "We did not join the Iraqi Army to kill Iraqis!"

They would not budge, and eventually slammed their barracks gates shut to keep the Americans out. Since that point in time, Zionist American military officers have already passed a complete list of all U.S. Marines who participated in the Fallujah Massacre to New York, where suitably powerful people will be able to keep their names away from future War Crimes Tribunals, though they will certainly expect a few favors in return for this expensive protection.

Now then people, exactly what sort of favors could a bunch of crazed Zionists in New York possibly need from a fresh batch of U.S. Marine war criminals? It is this very question which brings us back to traitor Richard Clark. Clark is perhaps the highest-ranking Zionist mole in contemporary American history.

After holding very senior rank in the Reagan State Department, Richard Clark was quietly placed on the National Security Council in the Bush Senior White House, where he then remained in charge of 'counter terrorism' throughout the entire Clinton Presidency that followed. Is anyone starting to smell a rat yet?

The only reason Clark was 'allowed' to stay on in his extremely influential post during a two-term Democrat Presidency, was that he was considered far more useful to New York than Bill Clinton himself. In terms of long-term Zionist planning, Clark was an absolute gem.

Among other things, he controlled the flow of intelligence from the CIA and other Federal Agencies to the National Security Advisor and other members of the National Security Council, allowing him to lose snippets of intelligence which might hinder Zionist plans,

And at the same time seed the NSC record with forged 'intelligence' designed to achieve certain critical Zionist objectives, including the eastward expansion of the Jewish State to capture and hold the oilfields of Iraq. It was during the Clinton era that Clark seized the opportunity to invent the fictional 'al Qaeda', the tool so badly needed by the Zionists to frighten the hell out of the American people, and thus justify extraordinary excesses at home and abroad.

Shortly after the Central Bank in Nairobi was micro-nuked during August 1998, Clark convinced Clinton to attack Osama Bin Laden's training camp in Afghanistan with cruise missiles, an attack which went according to plan, with most of the Tomahawk missiles landing inside the red target circle roughly annotated 'al Qaeda' by the planners, meaning literally in Arabic 'The Base', i.e. the targeted 'base' used by Osama Bin Laden and his Muslim followers. For some reason the annotation fascinated Richard Clark.

Al Qaeda' sounded mysterious and catchy when expressed in English, so he adopted it as the name of the new fictional Muslim 'terror network', which in the years to follow would be used to justify increasingly savage attacks by both America and the Jewish State on Zionist targets of choice. Clark first used 'al Qaeda' at a meeting of the National Security Council in late September 1998, so you will find no mention of the name prior to that date.

Needless to say, Richard Clark retained his powerful position when George W. Bush nominally took over the White House, and the Zionist Lobby wasted no time using Clark to suggest an attack on Osama Bin Laden, the Taliban, and 'al Qaeda' in order to "control terror". The reality, of course, was that by early 2001 the Zionists had finalized plans to invade Iraq in order to steal its rich oil supplies, and needed a suitable high-profile media diversion to keep prying eyes away from advanced Iraqi invasion preparations in occupied Palestine.

QUOTE

Clark first suggested the attack on Afghanistan in March 2001, and by late May the same year details had been intentionally leaked to every major ally, and then accidentally leaked onwards to Russian and China.

user posted image

The Russians in particular were upset at the prospect of and American attack on Afghanistan, because, as most readers will recall, the Kremlin still held America responsible for its own defeat in that country during 1989.

In any event, Bush rebuffed the indirect Zionist approach through Richard Clark, because there was no obvious multinational corporate gain in attacking an already-shattered third world country. The tenacious Richard Clark was still in the White House when two large passenger jets were flown into the World Trade Center on the morning of 11 September 2001.

This momentous event stunned Clark, who for the first time in his thirty years as a Zionist mole, did not have a clue what was going on. Obviously the attackers were not 'al Qaeda', because as Richard Clarks knew only too well, this fictional organization had been personally created by him as a propaganda tool during late 1998.

Whoever the attacker were, they remained unknown. Unfortunately, as George Bush's counter-terrorism chief reporting directly to his National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice, Clark was the one man who should have known the identity of the attackers. His flustered and inadequate performance in the White House Basement left him wide open to criticism, which led in turn to Rice removing all of Clark's staff and demoting him, though because of his powerful Zionist sponsors in New York, she lacked the power to completely remove Clark from the White House.

As we all now know, the White House floundered around almost rudderless for weeks, before finally falling for the rather simplistic Clark-manufactured "Osama bin Laden did it" line. It is a matter of public record that the eventual 'reprisal' raid on Afghanistan did not take place until October 6, some twenty five long days, or 600 hours after impact on the World Trade Center.

QUOTE

Think about this rationally folks, if Russia had attacked America and America really knew who the attackers were, the response would have taken less than thirty minutes.

The staggering delay in response was caused by absolutely no-one in the White House or New York knowing where the attack had come from, and a response in the wrong direction could easily have led to Los Angeles or Chicago being destroyed next. But the American people were baying for revenge, and in the end Bush took the 'soft' option of slaughtering a few thousand Afghan women and children, assuming correctly that just about no-one really cared what happened to them.

In doing this, Bush played directly into the hands of Richard Clark and his Zionist bosses, who finally had themselves a full-blown Judeo-Christian crusade against Islam in full swing - the start point for terrorizing the entire Middle East, and eventually the Western Hemisphere under "Fortress Americas." But Clarke's days were numbered and he eventually left the National Security Council after quietly inserting a forged 'time capsule' in the NSC record.

Alleged to be an August 6, 2001 memo prepared for President Bush, the forgery claims that "Osama bin Laden told followers he wanted to retaliate in Washington for the 1998 missile strike against his base in Afghanistan', an operation that Clark personally convinced President Clinton to launch.

> During the recent media feeding frenzy over this forged document at the 9-11 Commission, not one American politician of either party has sought to use the FOIA to obtain the 'mirror' CIA and NSA documents for this extremely specific alleged electronic intelligence.

This is an understandable omission, because there are no such documents in existence, and their very absence would expose the forged time capsule for what it really is: a straight Zionist attempt to paper over the exact start point of its pre-meditated Judeo-Christian crusade, and a highly visible platform for Clark to use in scaring you about 'al Qaeda' terrorists in your own back yards.

The sudden rush to prominence for Clark and his new book published by "Freedom Press" [owned by Simon & Schuster, which in turn is owned by Hollywood monolith Viacom], in not accidental. For several months now the Zionist Cabal has known for certain that the "war" in Iraq is lost, and by default it has also known that Iraq's rich oil reserves will never be pumped through to Haifa in occupied Palestine.

The Jewish State itself is running out of cash, and New York can no longer hope to support such an expensive adventure in the medium to long term. Already as I write this report, Ariel Sharon is withdrawing all Jews from the Gaza Strip in what he claims is a 'gesture towards peace". It is no such thing. Sharon is fast running out of what used to be limitless amounts of American taxpayer funds, and is therefore being forced to consolidate his troops into a much smaller area.

Without pillaged Iraqi oil to sustain it, the Jewish State is dying, which in turn means that about six million Jews will shortly have to find new homes, when 200 million furious Muslims sweep them backwards into the Mediterranean. The only option left in the months and years to come is "Fortress Americas", which is linked at the bottom of this page for those who do not have the full details.

However, millions of Americans will not take kindly to being forcibly removed from their homes by a pack of armed religious crazies, who have spent the last few years butchering thousands of Palestinian women and children with visible delight.

Hence Richard Clark and his new 'al Qaeda' media scare campaign, designed to prepare you all for more stringent 'counter terrorism' laws, in turn designed to make your homes and families completely vulnerable to all designated 'federal officials', in a series of violent Zionist incursions that will put the siege of David Koresh at Waco into its correct perspective, as nothing more than a small-scale training exercise.

QUOTE

When I inserted "Miami" in the title of this report, it was not without reason.

Miami is on a short list of medium-sized American cities targeted for Phase One of Fortress Americas, which calls initially for local American gangs to be 'inoculated' with the fake al Qaeda 'virus', which of course will then require armed intervention by federal authorities, and lead to short term martial law imposed by New York.

Member of armed Miami street gangs ranging from the "10th Street Thugs" through the "Legion of Doom" to the "Vados Locos" will all suddenly find to their horror that they have become overnight lieutenants of 'al Qaeda', and they will then be hunted down by federal authorities and given the same considerate courtroom hearing as David Koresh.

You can probably guess what comes next. 'al Qaeda' terrorist in Miami obviously cannot exist without financial succor, and a degree of respectable community support. Fingers will be pointed, accusations made, and some of the finest properties in Miami with be confiscated as 'proceeds of crime', to be reallocated thereafter by the Zionist Cabal to some of those nice humanitarian refugees from the Jewish State.

Object to your property being requisitioned in this way, and you will probably die while resisting arrest. Whether or not the dishonored Marines from Fallujah will be used at this stage is not yet known, but I can think of at least one other way in which they can atone for their terrible behavior.

Back in the days of Vietnam, officers like Kimmitt who issued unlawful orders were 'fragged', i.e. one dark night someone or other rolled a live grenade into the offending officer's tent, thereby removing the problem permanently.

QUOTE

Just how hard would that be in Baghdad guys? You could even dress up as Mujahadeen, like the dude above with the Star of David tattoo who purports to be Hamas - MT, and pretend the Iraqis were responsible.

The problem of hundreds of Zionist lackeys in Washington D.C. is a bit more complex of course, but not entirely beyond U.S. Marine capabilities. Cobra helicopter gunships are clearly not up to the job in hand, but what about one of those nice Lockheed AC-130 Spectres? A single Spectre with full ammo bins could clear out all of the corrupt politicians on Capitol Hill with two brief twenty-second broadsides.

This seems to me a reasonably sacrifice in order to secure America's long-term freedom. Food for thought... "Micro-Nuclear War Rages Between Russia and America" On 30 January 2002 the author wrote and published "Operation Shekhinah", which accurately predicted the invasion of Iraq more than fourteen months before it actually happened.

Then on 20 December 2003, the published report "Whatshisname" accurately predicted that Muqtada al-Sadr's Shi'ite Mehdi Army would open a southern front in Iraq, four months before it actually happened. These two reports alone prove that Vialls Investigations' forward analysis of received intelligence, is 1000% more accurate than propaganda organs such as the New York Times and the Washington Post, on critical matters which directly concern ordinary Americ an and other citizens.

In order to truly understand how America arrived where she is today, and accurately comprehend why and how events like 9-11 take place, it is essential to examine Zionist behavior and hostile actions as far back as the Bolshevik Revolution of 1917, though mercifully most of the meaningful data starts around 1980, when Ronald Reagan came to power in America, and joined hands with Margaret Thatcher across the Atlantic in a blatant bid to undermine sovereign Russia and most of the Muslim nations in the Middle East.

It was these precipitous Zionist- driven events of the eighties that led to a 'quiet' micro-nuclear war between Russia and America. Starting in 1988, that quiet micro-nuclear war continues unabated today. This then is my next self-imposed assignment, though as usual it will take a lot of time and considerable funds to research and write accurately.

I would like to take this opportunity to publicly thank [though not name] those kind donors who have already provided me with free unlimited-bandwidth web sites, and sufficient funds to upgrade my computer equipment to the point where I can now 'grab' frames from Zionist media footage with three times the clarity that I could manage just a few months ago.

This is very important, because the nature of propaganda today, frequently makes it possible to expose deliberate New York deceptions, by posting embarrassing and compromising frames of their own television footage on my own web site! If at all possible,

I would like to expand these capabilities still further, with a view to ultimately being able to display short film clips in real time on the web pages, and provide brief audio takes of compromising media chatter sourced from decrypted satellite communications.

Because satellites orbit in international airspace there is of course no law to stop me capturing and decrypting their signals, though the equipment needed to do the job effectively is prohibitively expensive. Where I was looking at hundreds of dollars for web sites and frame grabbing equipment, I am now facing potential costs of thousands of dollars, without any concrete guarantee of success.

Nonetheless I think it is worth the effort to at least try to achieve these objectives, and therefore call on you to assist me if you can. My disability pension is just about sufficient to buy our daily bread, but it cannot hope to cover the massive costs involved here.

Newsflash 17 April 2004

American POWs in Iraq Confirmed on Television Pfc Keith Maupin, 20, of Batavia, Ohio. Center blow up proves this soldier has not been harmed by his Republican Guard captors Serving as confirmation of my accurate reporting on 14 April, Al Jazeera television has shown a video film from Iraq, proving that the Republican Guard did indeed capture two U.S. soldiers during a convoy attack outside Baghdad.

In a statement, the Republican Guard said that the American soldiers would be treated in accord with the Geneva Convention and would not be harmed. The Iraqi military spokesman also indicated that these men might later be exchanged for Iraqi nationals currently held in illegal detention by American invasion forces, though he did not disclose how many. A word of advice for the families of Pfc Keith Maupin and Sgt Elmer Krause who died of his injuries!

Try to ignore inevitable New York media propaganda about 'torture' and other abuses likely to be inflicted on the prisoners by their captors. I personally spent years in the Middle East under combat conditions, and can assure you that when Muslim captors say prisoners will not be harmed, they mean exactly that.

Maupin & Krause will be well fed and cared for. Now try comparing this proper treatment of prisoners, with the barbaric behavior of the American 'interrogators' at Camp Delta in Guantanamo Bay, who have been consistently torturing more than 600 illegal Muslim detainees for over two years. It is only at times like these that you discover who the real war criminals are.

General Custer 'Captures' Downtown Baghdad ... Uh Oh!

Will this be the Iraqi version of Little Bighorn?

Copyright Joe Vialls, 10 April 2003 and 11 April 2003, scroll down to red update

Desperate to win public approval for his illegal invasion of Iraq, Donald Rumsfeld has been “padding” his Pentagon briefings just a little bit. Well, not just a little bit – Rumsfeld could reasonably be accused of ridiculous exaggeration bordering on pure fantasy, but that would let the cat right out of the bag.

> As the 7th Cavalry of Little Bighorn fame rode into Baghdad aboard their dashing depleted-uranium-armored steeds, everybody was caught up in the excitement of the moment. Soldiers smiled at the media cameras and waved “Hi” to their Moms in America,

While dirt-poor Iraqis from Saddam City in the east predictably looted everything in sight. Then just to add a bit of spice, a spooked US Marine shot an elderly Iraqi man dead in his decrepit old car, in front of France 3’s cameras, for failing to stop at a traffic light when ordered to do so by an uninvited invader.

The American media spin surrounding the "capture" of Baghdad was so intense that most viewers were overwhelmed. Many were suspicious of such an unexpected and rapid victory, but felt unable to challenge the event because of a lack of military knowledge. Most knew that for three whole days they hadn’t seen a single video frame from any one of the 500-plus journalists “embedded” with the US military, but once again had no way of knowing exactly what this sudden draconian Pentagon censorship actually meant.

Basically the whole “capture” of Baghdad was and remains a contrived public relations scam. As the map below shows very well, the 7th Cavalry drove into the center of the city from the south-west on arterial roads which had mysteriously not been blockaded, then drove over river bridges which equally mysteriously had not been demolished in advance. Does anyone really believe the Iraqi military could not have carried out these simple tasks in advance if they had wanted to?

The US Marines did exactly the same thing from the east, driving over undamaged river bridges and along clear arterial roads until they also reached the center of the city. The whole thing looked very easy, and indeed was way too easy for any military man’s peace of mind.

With a population of five million, Baghdad is bigger than Chicago, and approximately the same size as Paris, with the two narrow road routes taken by the 7th Cavalry and the US Marines comprising less than one-percent of the City's total land area. Everything else you see on the map above is virgin territory untouched by cavalryman or marine alike, who have absolutely no idea what might be lurking in these truly vast areas.

One clue lies with the deadly American A10 “Tankbuster” that twisted and turned overhead Baghdad the other day, popping magnesium flares all over the place while spraying a ministry building with a hail of DU shells. This diversionary action neatly drew attention away from two 7th Cavalry M1A1 Abrams battle tanks, which quite deliberately shelled members of the media at Al Jazeera headquarters, and in the Palestine Hotel.

> Then the very aggressive though luckless A10 turned away to the southwest, where it was promptly blown out of the sky by a large Iraqi surface to air missile fired from the area of the University – just one of those dull gray suburb areas shown on the map above.

Viewing the Baghdad suburbs as a whole, there are probably a million houses which might [or might not] contain Republican Guards or regular soldiers, but the US military simply does not know whether or not this is the case. In order to find out, they must now go through the dreaded routine of house-to-house searches, which might or might not result in the [traditional] loss of about 60% of their soldiers.

Do not be fooled by the contrived media razzmatazz. The “Coalition of the Willing” has not taken Baghdad yet, and quite possibly may never do so, because America in particular is woefully short of men for the task. Forget all of the “Disney World” high-tech American weapons, which are useless in street or CQB [close quarters battle] scenarios.

To have any chance of winning a "house to house" war, you must have a minimum superiority of five belligerent troops for every suspected defender, and more if possible. At the present time, the total number of "combat able" coalition troops in Iraq and Kuwait is less than 110,000.

So how many Iraqis are left for these folk to fight? Put another way, now is the time to calculate the size of the mysterious “missing” Republican Guards divisions and the regular Iraqi Army. No need to take my word for the numbers here. In response to a direct media question at his briefing today,

Chairman of the Joint Chiefs General Myers admitted that the coalition still faces, “Ten divisions of the Iraqi Regular Army, and a Brigade of the Republican Guard.” In addition, Russian Military Intelligence assures us there are between 90,000 and 110,000 Iraqi troops behind the forward lines, i.e. between US forces in Baghdad and their home base in Kuwait.

Decoded, this means that General Myers knows and admits there are more than 200,000 Iraqi soldiers out there in front, Plus of course the 100,000 extra regulasrs and home guards behind the front lines, for a gross total of more than 300,000 active service Iraqi soldiers.

Because we know from military records that there were never ten divisions of regulars to the north of Baghdad in the first place, General Myers has in actuality admitted that five of the “missing” Republican Guards divisions have survived, in addition to five-plus divisions of Regular Iraqi Army. Exactly how this massive quantity of troops is deployed, in, around, or to the north, south, east and west of Baghdad, Myers simply has no idea.

Despite his knowledge [of massive Iraqi opposition in general], Myers still ordered the 7th Cavalry and the US

Marines to roar through to the center of Baghdad, in order to provide an increasingly desperate and unpopular Donald Rumsfeld with a public relations “victory” to boast about, and to wave in the face of Russia, France and Germany. None of these powers will believe it of course, but Rumsfeld might, for a few months at least, manage to keep his own job at the Pentagon.

Being sent into impossible situations is not new for the 7th Cavalry. The regiment has “been there, done that” before, when commanded by General George Armstrong Custer. In 1875, the American Government decided that all Indians on the Western Plains would have to settle on assigned reservations by January 31, 1876, in order to make way for immigrant gold miners.

> Failing to comply meant that violating Indians would be considered hostile, and the US Army would take action against them. So in a surprising parallel with Iraq today, the American invaders were determined to loot the Indian lands of natural resources.

On 25 June 1876 Custer discovered one of the largest Indian camps the Plains had ever seen, at Little Bighorn, about 7,000 in number and made up primarily of Sioux and Cheyenne Indians. Worried that the Indians might escape, Custer split his 7th Cavalry troops into three columns to encircle them.

Custer led roughly 210 men toward the camp, counting on his two other columns to encircle the Indian warriors and protect him. Instead, he found himself surrounded by well-armed Indians led by Crazy Horse, on top of what is nowadays called Custer Hill. Most people know the rest. Every one of his 210 men was killed, and he himself was finally discovered two days later, stripped naked and shot in the left temple and chest. Custer’s defeat rattled the entire nation.

Richard White, professor of history at Stanford University set the tone, "It's 1876, the 100th anniversary of the battle for independence. It's hugely symbolic and a major shock," he said, "It's impossible for Americans to imagine a warrior culture defeating a modern army."

If this brings to mind the possibility of Americans being unable to imagine a warrior Iraqi culture eventually defeating the Disney World hi-tech US Military, this will not be surprising. The problem is that this end result is quite possible, though not it you believe the impossible spin being put on events by a bunch of very desperate men in Washington, DC., who deliberately stood the 7th Cavalry and US Marines into clear and present danger to cover their own pitiful inadequacies.

In the days and weeks to come you will find a subtle change come over Baghdad and its surrounding towns and countryside. Gone will be the looting and exuberance, to be replaced by paranoia and real fear of the American invaders. Windows will be bricked up, and people will stay indoors not only to avoid looting by their own citizens, but also to avoid confrontation with armed mercenaries who have already demonstrated their willingness to shoot old men dead in rickety cars, for no real reason at all.

Then in all probability the Iraqi sniping will start again from the north, south, east and west, to be followed in turn by RPG attacks on the armored vehicles in downtown Baghdad. Whether or not members of the 7th Cavalry will be able to escape this second trap in their regimental history, remains to be seen.

" All we wanted was peace and to be left alone..."
Chief Crazy Horse

Update 11 April

Coalition's chosen "replacement" leader slaughtered in Najaf

Abdel Majid al-Khoei, a high-ranking Shi'ite cleric whose father had been a prominent ayatollah, returned home to Iraq last week from years of exile in London, preaching reconciliation as the country tries to rebuild. A staunch opponent of Saddam Hussein, al-Khoei was promptly stabbed to death by a mob in the holy shrine.

> British Prime Minister Tony Blair, who had met with al-Khoei several times both at Downing Street and at his London based foundation for exiled Iraqi Shi'ites, said he was appalled at al-Khoei's death and sent condolences to his family. "He was a religious leader who embodied hope and reconciliation and who was committed to building a better future for the people of Iraq," Blair said.

Evidently the Iraqis do not share the Bush-Blair "vision" of a "new post-Saddam reconstructed Iraq", and have demonstrated this in spectacular fashion. It is understood that the execution was conducted with traditional daggers, in a way that ensured al-Khoei died relatively slowly.

Remember here that al-Khoei was an exiled Shi'ite, the very same branch of Islam that the "Coalition of the Willing" was sure would "rise up against Saddam" but failed to do so. Imagine how gruesome the death will eventually be, for any puppet Sunni Muslims imported by Bush and Blair in the future.

Daggers perhaps, or maybe the women will be allowed to finish them off more slowly, as is their way. After all, these mothers, grandmothers and aunts have many dead and maimed children to avenge.Unsubstantiated rumor suggests that the women can keep a man alive for up to two weeks before finally allowing him to die. A charming vision for the traitors in London and New York to dwell on for a while.

CIA Launches "False-Flag" Attack on The Biggest Shopping Mall in Kuwait

Please wait while the film of a nuclear-tipped cruise missile [center] loads automatically
Very few people realize how "puny" a low-yield nuclear weapon can appear at the point of impact

QUOTE

Shortly after midnight during the night of 28/29 January 2003, a lone American B52H strategic bomber was flying at 40,000 feet over the Red Sea, on what was described as a "routine transit flight" between RAF Fairford in England, and Diego Garcia in the Indian Ocean.

Well, almost routine. As the aircraft passed abeam the Aswan Dam in Egypt, its bombardier threw a series of switches and checked a handful of status lights, then launched CALCM [Conventional Air Launched Cruise Missile] serial number 5420 from a pylon on the B52's wing.

Now under the power of its own internal jet engine, and already out of sight of the bomber crew, CALCM 5420 spread its retracted wings and commenced a steady descent towards its final transit altitude of 500 feet, starting a slow left-hand turn at the same time.

None of the bomber crew members knew where CALCM 5420 was headed, but this is considered quite normal in an age of push button warfare. All cruise missile guidance systems are programmed by targeting specialists, normally but not always working for the Pentagon, either by remote secure data transfer or locally with a computer floppy disc.

Unlike the usual "To Saddam With Love" or other crude remarks in English, this cruise missile had Arabic writing sprayed on its side at Fairford, with hints to the bomber crew that the target was "probably" one requested by US Special Operations teams located in Djibouti. The obvious inference was that CALCM 5420 was headed for somewhere in the Yemen, but the crew didn't really care.

Flying down the Red Sea was a lot less stressful than carpet bombing the outer edges of Baghdad, and just for a change they were not under the direct control of Central Command Headquarters in Qatar. Strategic bomber transfers outside the "Iraqi War Zone" are not the business of Central Command, so General Tommy Franks was, and would forever remain, ignorant of the covert "Strategic" launch of CALCM 5420.

Not quite so ignorant was the Saudi Arabian Air Defense radar north of Jeddah, which was monitoring the B52H flying down the Red Sea, and detected the smaller cruise missile as it turned left across Saudi sovereign territory.

It was easy enough to plot during its gradual descent from altitude, because unlike the smaller radar-opaque Tomahawk cruise missile, the CALCM was originally designed as a decoy intended to deliberately attract the attention of Russian radars during the Cold War.

Back then in the late fifties, the main risk was to the nuclear bomber itself was from surface to air missiles, so a system was devised to give the bomber a better chance on its way to a target deep inside Russia. The plan [mercifully never tried in real life] was to launch six of these decoys from each bomber, which would then spread out in a fan formation, hopefully presenting Russian air defense with seven bomber plots, only one of which would be real. But that was then, and now is now.

Saudi radar plotted 5420 as it crossed the sovereign border on a descending course [apparently] towards southern Iraq, finally losing the picture as the cruise missile settled into the ground clutter below the radar horizon. The launch of a single weapon from the Red Sea initially puzzled them, and then later alarmed them considerably when they discovered that the main cruise missile strike on Baghdad that night, did not take place until 0330 hours, i.e. several hours after CALCM 5420 was launched.

Although they did not find out until later that day, the Saudi radar operators were right to be alarmed. At 0145 hours local time, CALCM 5420 approached Kuwait City directly from the south, and exploded on a jetty fifteen yards offshore the Souq Sharq shopping mall — a multilevel shopping center with department stores, restaurants, theaters and Western-style shops. The massive shock wave and shards of missile debris shredded the southern side of Souq Sharq, easily the biggest shopping mall in Kuwait.

Initially identified by Central Command as an “Iraqi Silkworm or Seersucker anti ship cruise missile fired from the Al Faw peninsula”, the attack was immediately attributed to President Saddam Hussein of Iraq, the “Evil Tyrant” who was “obviously” trying to kill innocent Kuwaiti women and children in an unprotected shopping mall. Imagine the propaganda value to America if the missile had not fallen a little short, and had instead landed and detonated in the middle of Souq Sharq.

Those readers who are already mentally linking this “shopping mall” attack to the two later “market” attacks in the outer suburbs of Baghdad are probably right to do so. All we know for sure is that Central Command later blamed the two lethal strikes in Baghdad, which killed more than 60 civilians, on “Saddam Hussein’s anti-aircraft missiles which fell back down on the city”.

> We know this is pathetic propaganda because we also know that all surface to air missiles self destruct at altitude into thousands of small pieces of shrapnel, if they miss their designated airborne targets.

The strike on Kuwait initially had the Kuwaitis themselves confused, which is hardly surprising. Why would they expect their “ally” to attack their own women and children? In the words of Kuwaiti military spokesman Colonel Youssef al-Mullah, ‘‘It was from the family of Silkworm missiles which the Iraqi regime developed.” Enlarging on this theme, al-Mullah said the missile did not have an unconventional warhead, and there was writing in Arabic on one of its fragments. He said the type of missile can be launched from a mobile battery and “has the range of 90 km to 200 km”.

No, it does not. The maximum effective range of a Silkworm is 80 kilometers, and the distance from the only known launchers on the al Faw peninsula to Kuwait City is more than 120 kilometers. Furthermore, any attack from al Faw in the east would have resulted in an east-west impact, hurling the missile debris relatively harmlessly along the water and beach towards the west, rather than into Souq Sharq Mall on a proven south-north trajectory.

When he made his initial announcement during the middle of the night, and presumably because he was also slightly lost in the “fog of war”, Colonel al-Mullah had no way of knowing that daybreak would soon reveal the serial number and type of the weapon, and Saudi radar tracking information and timing [based on precise airspeed] would prove conclusively exactly where it was launched from.

Its serial number proves 5420 started out in life as an ALCM, and was the modified to carry a conventional warhead [CALCM] under classified contract number F34601-91-C-1xxx [last three digits deleted for national security reasons, and to block my extradition from Australia under the “Patriot Act”].

Slightly less than twenty four hours after American CALCM 5420 exploded on the jetty in front of Souq Sharq Mall in Kuwait, Saudi Arabia and Turkey were shocked into action and united together, to ban the over flight of their respective sovereign territories, by all missiles belonging to any member of the illegal “Coalition of the Willing”.

user posted image

The use of these “black op” tactics tells us much about the progress of the invasion [sorry, “The War of Liberation”] because they are normally only used as a last resort to bolster the public relations image of the losing side. Clearly Saudi Arabia and Turkey both know full well that the Coalition of the Willing is losing, and appreciate the terrible dangers that must therefore exist in the future for the Middle East, especially where missiles of this particular designation are concerned.

Megalomaniacs who are losing a war, frequently resort in the end to their most powerful weapons, which in the case of America versus Iraq means tactical low yield nuclear. Certainly the most effective way of delivering a low-yield W-54 or W-81 nuclear warhead or warheads to the center of Baghdad, would be the cold war version of the CALCM, known generically as the AGM-86.

Several dozen of these nightmare weapons still exist in the American arsenal, updated with state of the art GPS satellite guidance equipment. Though the better-known ship and air launched “Tomahawk” cruise missile has a maximum range of only 600 nautical miles, the nuclear AGM-86 was designed to fly all the way to Moscow from safe airspace, and has a “classified” maximum range of 1,500 nautical miles.

As Saudi Arabia and Turkey both know well, this means that a single B52H carrying up to six such weapons, could deliver the final nuclear knockout blows on Baghdad by launching a “standoff” strike from as far back as the central Mediterranean or Somalia. Thus the ban of their respective sovereign airspace will serve to stop any “accidental” nuclear strike on Saudi Arabia or Turkey, but might not save Baghdad if Bush, Blair and Howard [Australia] slide the final centimeter or so into complete insanity.

That time might be closer than we all think. About thirty minutes ago the news came in about a bunch of American GIs machine gunning a minibus in broad daylight on the outskirts of Najaf, an Iraqi city which contains the shrine of Imam Ali, one of the most important shrines in the world for Muslims, and in particular for Shi’ite Muslims. Though virtually unheard of in the west, this shrine is probably as important for Shi’ite Muslims as Canterbury Cathedral is for Anglican Christians.

QUOTE

Store this information very carefully, because it is the Iraqi Shi'ite Muslims who were encouraged by America to “rise up” against President Saddam Hussein back in 1991, and were then contemptuously thrown aside and abandoned by America when they failed.

Although the military statement from Central Command said thirteen women and children were in the minibus, the Washington Post journalist “embedded” on the spot with the 3rd Infantry, said fifteen unarmed people were in the vehicle and ten were killed, including two women, and five children who appeared to be younger than five years of age. One of the other wounded was a man not expected to live.

The Post journalist describes a 3rd Infantry officer watching the minivan through binoculars and ordering the soldiers by radio to fire a warning shot first, then shoot a 7.62 mm machine-gun round into the vehicle's radiator. When the vehicle kept coming, the captain ordered the soldiers to "stop him!" About a dozen shots of 25-mm cannon fire were heard from one or more of the platoon's Bradley fighting vehicles, the journalist said.

Well, yes, that works! Twelve rounds of high explosive 25-mm cannon fire is more than enough to bring down a very large batwing B2 Stealth Bomber. Where a small minibus full of children is concerned, the words "massive" and "overkill" immediately spring to mind. Apparently the officer then shouted over the radio at the platoon leader, "You just [expletive] killed a family because you didn't fire a warning shot soon enough!"

Believe me, it can and does get worse than this. The [few] survivors were taken to allied lines further south at Karbala, before, as the Washington Post accurately records, “US troops gave three survivors permission to return to the vehicle and recover the bodies of their loved ones”.

QUOTE

Time for a reality check here. Now let me get this right: Unarmed Iraqi survivors in Iraq need permission from the armed American murderers of their loved ones, before they can be permitted to recover their bodies for burial? George Orwell peddled some pretty crazy stuff in his time, but none of it came even close to being as crazy and obscene as this.

Evidently American soldiers are taught nothing at all about the cultures of the nations they attack. In the Arab-Muslim world the driver would not dare to stop his minibus full of women and children for an armed Muslim man, because the women and children are in his personal care. Therefore, under no circumstances whatever would he dare stop for a band of heavily armed foreign invaders, which is what these soldiers surrounding the Shi'ite holy shrine unquestionably are.

No doubt in the fullness of time the sick maniacs in Washington, London and Canberra will put their own "spin" on this event, probably claiming that the women and children inside the minibus were members of some fanatical "suicide squad" dispatched personally from Baghdad by the "Evil Tyrant" Saddam Hussein. And these same western maniacs may well still be repeating identical insane drivel when they are finally paraded in handcuffs at the International War Crimes Tribunal.

No matter which town you live in, or the name of your state or country, try to imagine how you would feel if a bunch of foreign mercenaries opened fire on your local school bus and killed most of the women and children inside. Then try to imagine exactly what you would eventually do to those foreign mercenaries in the fullness of time. In Anglican Christian terms, this atrocity is indeed the moral equivalent of shooting dead a school bus full of women and children, less that five miles away from Canterbury Cathedral in England. .

There is an old and very wise saying, which translated from the basic Arabic goes something like this: "Fool me once, shame on you. Fool me twice, shame on me." The entire Arab-Muslim world was fooled by the Americans and Israelis back in 1990. It will not happen again, and these latest public atrocities will serve not only to stiffen resolve across the Middle East, but also across the rest of the world.

Mistaravim is the name given to those counter-terrorism units of the Israel Defense Forces in which soldiers are specifically trained to "be an Arab" and go into the occupied territories to capture (or kill) a wanted terrorist.

The Beslan massacre began when a group of armed terrorists took more than 1,100 people, including 777 children hostage on September 1, 2004, at School Number One in the town of Beslan, North Ossetia, at least 334 hostages were killed, including 186 children, hundreds more were injured and many were reported missing. North Ossetia, Russia

The unique basketball hoop bombs inside the sealed gymnasium, which confirmed for ever that Beslan was a black psyop atrocity perpetrated by the west. Despite all western reporters being contained 100 yards behind the Russian Special Forces perimeter outside the sealed compound, and despite the terrorists within immediately confiscating all cellphones from the teachers and children,

The BBC magically described these specific unique booby traps live-to-air before Special Forces had even penetrated the inner cordon at Beslan. Western media reporters could not possibly have known about these extremely unusual booby traps, unless they themselves were an integral part of the black psychological operation.

On 24 August 2004, when two Russian Tupolev commercial airliners were blown out of the sky within four minutes of each other, the New York media vengefully suggested that this occurrence was "Russia's 9-11". It was artfully pointed out to Americans that both airliners had departed from the same Moscow airport, thereby reducing the possibility of two coincidental accidents to zero.

Volga-AviaExpress Flight 1303

The first to crash was Volga-AviaExpress Flight 1303, a Tu-134 aircraft, registered RA-65080, which had been in service since 1977. The plane was flying from Moscow to Volgograd. It left Domodedovo International Airport at 22:30. Communication with the plane was lost at 22:56 while it was flying over Tula Oblast, 180 km south-east of Moscow. The remains of the aircraft were found on the ground several hours later. Witnesses on the ground said that they saw a strong explosion on the plane before it crashed.. 34 passengers and 9 crew members were on board the plane. All of them died in the crash.

Siberia Airlines Flight 1047

Just minutes after the first crash, Siberia Airlines Flight 1047, which had left Domodedovo International Airport at 21:35, disappeared from the radar screens and crashed. The Tu-154 aircraft, registered RA-85556, which had been in service since 1982, was flying from Moscow to Sochi. According to an unnamed government source of the Russian news agency Interfax, the plane had broadcast a hijack warning, while flying over Rostov Oblast at 22:59.

The plane disappeared from radar screens shortly after that and crashed. 38 passengers and 8 crew members were on board the plane, and there were no survivors after the crash. The debris of the aircraft was found on the morning of August 25, 2004 9 km from village Glubokoye, Rostov Oblast in Kamensk-Shakhtinsky Raion. Wikipedia

Thirty six hours later, the same Zionist controlled media started insisting that a pair of mysterious

'Black Widow' Muslim terrorists from Chechnya had detonated hexogen bomb belts in the rear toilets of each aircraft, as revenge for Russian military operations in their home province.

Apparently possessing a remarkable level of inside knowledge, the New York media swiftly expanded on this extravagant theme, assuring us all that the synchronized downing of the two Tupolevs was simply a rerun of the Moscow Theatre atrocity, which started on 23 October 2002 and resulted in the deaths of 128 hostages, allegedly at the hands of other 'Black Widow' Muslim terrorists from Chechnya.

This subtle media manipulation served to reinforce and re-ignite the carefully manufactured and nurtured Judeo-Christian illusion that all Muslims kill innocent women and children, though nothing could normally be further from the truth, and in the case of the two Tupolev airliners was an outright lie.

Although the Jewish Talmud [the most barbaric and obscene 'holy' book ever published] does advocate violent punishment, rape, debasement and death for all non-Jews, the Muslim Koran strictly prohibits any and all such measures against non-combatants, regardless of their religion or nationality, with terrifying eternal punishments for those Muslims who dare violate women and children, and thus who in turn dare to violate Islamic law.

Rest assured there is absolutely no ambiguity or latitude in the Muslim Koran. Revenge under Islamic law must be directly proportional and target only the original attackers, which in the case of all real Chechen 'Black Widows' means targeting only adult members of the Russian armed services. Moscow theatres, civilian airliners, and schools full of children are strictly off limits.

Despite New York claims to the contrary, there were no Chechen 'Black Widows' on either Tupolev jet, both of which were subjected to the normal stringent security checks prior to takeoff. Unnoticed in the west, official Russian Ministry statements revealed that neither aircraft captain had time to send a verbal or electronic warning of hijack, mechanical failure, or any other malfunction. Equally damning, Russian scientific investigation confirmed that both aircraft black boxes abruptly stopped recording at cruising altitude.

Aircraft fuselages are designed to be tremendously strong, and although the blast and shrapnel from a hexogen bomb belt detonated in the toilet would probably be sufficient to punch small holes in the airliner's outer skin, there is absolutely no way that the small charge could blow the tail off, for example, nor could it sever the wiring looms connecting the cockpit and emergency batteries to the radios and black box recorders.

The only possible way of instantly cutting radio communications and black box recordings would be a massive and catastrophic explosive event on board each aircraft, caused by large charges pre-positioned in direct contact with the aircraft fuselage itself, in the manner of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie in 1988.

In turn, these charges would have to be detonated by simple radio remote control from the ground, to ensure the synchronicity of events needed by New York to drive home the "Russia's 9-11" message at the media level.

> Fortunately for all analysts, New York jumped the gun and fired the media at you before the scenario was complete. Now think about this people, think about it very hard.

The World Trade Center 9-11 event certainly involved two exploding American commercial airliners, but it also involved the murder of large numbers of unarmed civilians trapped inside the WTC buildings with no chance of escape. Two weeks later, after the downing of the twin Tupolevs and the mass murder of women and children trapped in the school at Beslan in North Ossetia, the "Russia's 9-11" analogy would become valid and reasonable.

Unfortunately for the Zionist Cabal, foreknowledge and the premature use of this "Russia's 9-11" tag proved beyond doubt that Wall Street ordered the obscene mass murder in Beslan School, just as it has ordered the attack on the Moscow Theatre and the downing of the two Tupolev airliners.

We will return to the sequence of events at Beslan School a little later, but first we need to examine the motive, because every black psyop ever mounted has had a motive. Though many Americans are in denial on this subject nowadays, the sole motive for all of these events was, and will always remain, the strategic and tactical control of eastern hemisphere crude oil supplies, without which the New Zion in America will surely wither and die.

Though the "Peak Oil" scam currently being peddled by Mike Ruppert and others has absolutely no validity in global terms, it does make sense if viewed as deliberate Wall Street propaganda. The world as a whole has massive oil reserves on tap, with more continuing to flow from up from the earth's mantle, However American oil reserves cannot at present meet American demand, due primarily to a lack of investment in new domestic oil drilling and production infrastructure. Thus when Ruppert and others claim "The world is running out of oil", the accurate underlying truth of the matter is that "America alone is running out of oil".

> The same holds true for the parallel propaganda claim that "World oil production had peaked, and can no longer keep pace with global energy requirements".

In reality world oil production as a whole has not peaked, but the world as a whole is no longer prepared to provide America with one out of every two gallons of gasoline it refines every day of every year, especially not on the strength of worthless Federal Reserve promissory notes. Therefore this particular piece of 'Peak Oil' propaganda can be interpreted as meaning, "The world is no longer prepared to keep pace with, or provide, America's excessive energy requirements."

What you cannot afford to buy you must therefore steal, and Wall Street has long had plans in place to do exactly that, as the map above shows very well. First there was Caspian crude, then Yukos crude, then Iraqi crude ready to be stolen and shipped from the eastern hemisphere into the tanks of the giant Zionist War Machine called America,

One by one each of these massive assets fell by the wayside, as Russia exerted massive political and military pressure in the region. Where once there were three, suddenly by January 2004 there were none.

The fuel gauge of the Zionist War Machine, so heavily dependent on oil for its planned global conquest, started downwards on its hectic slide towards the "empty" mark. So 'Peak Oil' is really about stampeding the American people into believing that the end of the oil world is nigh, that soon they will have to pay $5 or $6 a gallon for gasoline, and that air conditioning will only be available to the mega-rich.

In turn, this is intended to panic American parents into willingly sacrificing more sons and daughters on the Zionist Altar in the blistering hot sands of the Middle East. If the New Zion must fall, your sons and daughters will be forced to fall first, while the key Zionist players slip quietly away to relative safety in Australia. Naturally enough the Zionist Cabal had other contingency plans, but all were feeble or even desperate by comparison with its earlier prime choices.

The most prominent of these contingency plans was to re-route plundered Caspian crude oil through Georgia, home of Eduard Shevardnadze, who in company with Mikhail Gorbachev sold out the old Soviet Union. In simple terms, Shevardnadze and Gorbachev betrayed their own country and sold it to the Zionist Cabal in exchange for two large sacks of shekels and a pair of gold American Express cards, a fact well known throughout Russia today.

With Georgian President Eduard Shevardnadze in its pocket, Wall Street quietly started preparations for this contingency back in early 2002, when American Special Forces and Israeli Mistaravim [Jewish civilian special forces & dirty tricks specialists] were imported into Georgia, ostensibly to "train" Georgia's armed forces in "anti-terrorist" techniques.

The reality was quite different of course, with the prime role of both groups being that of securing a route across Georgian sovereign territory for the Caspian pipeline, from Baku in Azerbaijan to the port of Sap'sa on the Black Sea.

> Further to the north in Moscow, aware of the cozy relationship between traitor Shevardnadze and Wall Street, President Vladimir Putin eyed developments and made discreet preparations to block this final route once and for all.

Responding directly to requests for assistance from the independent state of South Ossetia early in 2004, Putin moved in police an military instructors, plus wheeled and tracked vehicles to support them. All of a sudden the big bad Ruskies were within artillery range of the only possible pipeline route through Georgia, making threatening noises about the illegal presence of American and Jewish Special Forces.

This was clearly a step too far for the beleaguered Zionist Cabal in New York, whose members simply could not understand why Vladimir Putin, a sworn nationalist, would not take the bait of an unlimited gold American Express card, or even a giant numbered bank account in Switzerland brimming over with shekels. This active Karate black belt seemed impervious to standard Wall Street blackmail, could not be sexually compromised, and refused to become a bit player in the planned Zionist New World Order.

Eventually Wall Street decided that the only way to bring Putin to heel was to destabilize North and South Ossetia, using techniques only too familiar to those Arabs unfortunate enough to live in the Gaza Strip. It was time for some heavy-duty child butchering, a specialty of the Jewish Mistaravim, whose members originally cut their teeth in the Palestinian refugee schools and camps of the Lebanon.

At 9 a.m. on September 1, 2004, Beslan school in southern Russia was seized by a group of unknown terrorists. Shots were exchanged with local police and death toll reports ranged from two to eight. Russian Special Forces secured he perimeter and, despite continual goading by western media, decided to sit it out.

> This was logical and correct tactical behavior, meaning that any subsequent deaths would be attributed directly to the terrorists within, rather than to Russian Special Forces. All mobile phones were confiscated by the terrorists and a single land line was used for communications, meaning that no one outside the compound could possibly know what was happening inside.

Fifty-two hours later at 1 p.m. on September 3, paramedics were lured into the outer school compound by the terrorists to "retrieve bodies of dead hostages that have been lying in front of the building for two days". Explosions were heard immediately after their entry, and then the impossible happened.

At 1.05 p.m., from outside the Special Forces exclusion zone, BBC reporters told us all live to air that the terrorists within had "detonated bombs located in the school basketball hoops, killing several emergency service workers [the paramedics]". At that precise stage in the proceedings the only way that the English media voice [allegedly from the BBC] could have known about basketball hoop bombs, was if he was an integral part of the terrorist team.

Remember here that even Russian Special Forces did not know about these bombs until 50 minutes later, when they were finally coerced into storming the school gymnasium. And as the Russian Special Forces unit stormed the building, 19 of its members were killed by shots in the back, thereby opening up a gap in the perimeter through which many of the terrorists escaped. It was remarkably accurate shooting from the rear, at high elevation and long range.

On September 8, five days after the initial attack, startled viewers in the west were suddenly shown broadcast quality video footage from inside the gymnasium during the siege itself. It was pure shock and awe footage, psychologically reinforcing the deliberately manufactured belief that Muslims in general are 'evil terrorists who attack unarmed women and children'.

No, they are not. This artistic broadcast-quality psychological creation was first put to air by Moscow Television in Russia, but only after it had been delivered there from Georgia, by scheduled airline via London. Within hours of the children being butchered, and his Special Forces shot in the back, Vladimir Putin arrived in Beslan to personally review the situation.

After speaking to his military and police commanders, Putin visited the hospital where many of the greviously injured children had been taken. The look on Putin's face as he left the bedside of one dying child was terrible to behold. For an instant the veil was lifted, showing ice cold eyes alive with fury at what had been done to the young and innocent in the sacred name of One World Order progress. Rest assured that America and Israel will pay a terrible price for this obscene atrocity, and the time will be soon.

Joe Says: Zionists Micro Nuke the Australian Embassy in Indonesia

As with the Beslan report above, my analysis of the micro nuke outside the Australian Embassy in Jakarta, Indonesia, has been delayed by the need to acquire accurate intelligence and high resolution photographs. When the Jakarta report is ready for publishing about six days from now, it will include crystal-clear high resolutiion photographs of the actual bomb detonation, its massive crater, blast vectors, and resultant mushroom cloud.

Responding to an obvious need to prove once and for all time that car and truck surface bombs cannot make craters, the report will also include high resolution photographs of Special Forces 1,000# ANFO charges detonated on the back of light trucks, which is more than twice the feeble Potassium Chlorate charge weight that the Australian Federal Police has claimed was used outside the Australian Embassy.

As you will see, when these 1,000# ANFO [Ammonium Nitrate Fuel Oil] truck bombs explode, the shock waves obey the law of phsics by taking the line of least resistance, radiating outwards and upwards while leaving a clear unblemished air gap below the chassis of both light trucks. These photographs in particular are worth grabbing and preserving for posterity.

> JV: Back in 1996 when I destroyed the "official" story about policewoman Yvonne Fletcher's murder outside the Libyan Embassy in London, a strange thing happened. After fourteen long years of accusing the Libyans of her ruthless killing, members of the mainstream media suddenly changed their minds.

According to unnamed "MI5 sources", Yvonne's murder was actually orchestrated and executed by renegade members of MI5 and the British SAS, based at Hereford in England. Seemingly, out of nowhere, those personnel tasked with protecting British national security and bravely rescuing hostages from the Iranian Embassy in the face of impossible odds, were charged with changing sides and murdering an unarmed policewoman on the streets of London!

The reason for this sudden media panic by the lobbies, was probably the knowledge that I had proved a direct written connection between the CIA and 8 St James Square, the building from which the fatal shot was fired. Worse perhaps, I had also proved a direct written connection between the same building and powerful Israeli interests headed by one Frank Maier.

QUOTE

The latter was unable to clarify details about his movements the day Yvonne Fletcher was murdered, because only a few months after I destroyed the official story in 1996, He was unfortunately incinerated on a mountainside outside Dubrovnik, when a USAF CT43A carrying Secretary Ron Brown and others exploded in a fireball.

Rumor has it the plane was decoyed by a false NDB beacon sited on the mountain, then shot down by a pair of short range Russian made SAM7 heat seekers. But hey, only fools listen to rumors…

Last month, once again seemingly out of nowhere, someone panicked in Australia and floated an almost identical rumor about the mass murder at Port Arthur. Unnamed “ASIO sources” apparently claimed that the mass murder was orchestrated and executed by renegade members of ASIO and the Australian SAS, based at Swanbourne in Western Australia. What an extraordinary coincidence! The modus operandi is identical of course, indicating a common origin for both rumors.

It is time to get this all into perspective.

Certainly the number one shooter at Port Arthur was incredibly highly qualified, and demonstrated specialist skills seen before only in Beirut and the Palestinian Occupied Territories. Unfortunately for the lobby dream weavers, the British and Australian SAS Regiments have never operated in Beirut or the Occupied Territories, nor does either proud regiment have any record of shooting unarmed women and children.

QUOTE

Let us be realistic and limit the candidates to those with motive, method and opportunity, plus the skills and equipment required for the job. Killing large numbers of unarmed men, women and children at close range requires shooters who have done this kind of work before, perhaps so many times they have become completely desensitized to the stress that normal people would suffer in such a situation.

Beyond this, at least one of the shooters must be a world class marksman in counter terrorist techniques, capable of the speed and accuracy needed in the Broad Arrow Café, where the first nineteen moving targets were killed by single shots to the head, fired from the shooter’s right hip.

Weapon selection and familiarity is of critical importance. As any competition marksman will confirm, the weapon must become an extension of the shooter himself, with both operating together like a single well-oiled machine. At Port Arthur the weapon of choice was a cut-down version of the Colt AR15, known technically as the CAR15.

This is not the weapon of choice for the British or Australian SAS, nor the weapon of choice for the American Delta Force or SEALs. However, it is the weapon of choice for a single ruthless organization in the Middle East, well-versed in its normal use of killing unarmed Palestinian men, women and children at close range in the Occupied Territories.

Ladies and Gentlemen, allow me to introduce you to the “Mistaravim”, a civilian Israeli Special Forces unit officially formed in 1987, incorporating into its ranks some former members of the IDF who saw service in Beirut during the earlier part of the decade. Technically, the Mistaravim is comprised of “Special Forces Counter Terrorist Undercover Units” (SF CT/U), designed to infiltrate designated areas and eliminate the opposition quickly and efficiently.

This they can and frequently do, with at least three current members thought to possess the speed and accuracy needed for the mass murder at Port Arthur. Unsurprisingly perhaps, some of its members took their holidays down in Australia during 1996, guess where? Not that this provides 100% proof of guilt, you understand...

Perhaps most interesting is this organization’s complete familiarity with the exact weapon used at Port Arthur and its proven ability and willingness to use the CAR15 against unarmed men, women and children, literally hundreds of times in Palestine. For case-hardened members of the Mistaravim, probably the most desensitized mass murderers on the face of the earth, killing another 35 worthless Goyim at Port Arthur would not be at all emotional or traumatic.

QUOTE

The Mistaravim’s weapon of choice is enlightening, especially as the sawn-off CAR15 is all but unknown to Australians. They needed weapons possessing an enhanced concealment feature, indicating handguns and Sub Machine Guns (SMG). However handguns and SMG llack the firepower and accuracy of assault rifles, especially in emergency scenarios. So the Israeli undercover units searched for a potent firepower assault rifle with a compact frame.

The undercover units lacked the required financial resources to procure new weapons, so they came out with a shoe-string budget idea - to create a "home made" Colt Commandos by chopping down some of the CAR15 barrels in service from the original 14.5 inch length to a shorter sub 10 inch barrel length. Eventually, a new weapon emerged and entered the SF CT undercover units’ arsenal - the extreme short barreled home made Colt sawn-off CAR15.

From the moment of its first introduction in 1987, the sawn off CAR15 was an immediate success within the SF CT undercover community. Not so much for its inherent concealment tactical advantage, but rather because it was a huge status symbol, especially since in 1992 the 14.5 CAR15 become the standard issue weapon in all infantry oriented units, including both SF and regular. So carrying a sawn off CAR15 not only means you are a SF operator, but also means that you are a member of one of the more prestigious CT undercover units.

The sawn off CAR15 was such a success that many high ranking IDF officers adopted it, although they didn't have any actual need for the shorter barrel. Operationally, the sawn-off CAR15 is used in various urban CT application scenarios, both covert and overt. In order to improve the long-range accuracy of the sawn-off CAR15, most were equipped with a custom- made modified muzzle compensator (very similar to the one fitted one the Galil Sniper Rifle).

This compensator replaced the original M16 series flash hider. The sawn-off CAR15 stock was drilled with additional 1-2 holes. The additional holes are known in Israel as Terror Stock, and allow a better firing position when utilizing the Israeli Close Quarters Battle (CQB) entry technique, i.e. stock in center chest rather than in shoulder.

The sawn-off CAR15 weights 1.85 kg, is about 64 cm in length with the stock retracted and is about 72 cm with the stock fully extended. Note that the exact length depends on the actual length of the specific sawn off CAR15 barrel, which vary from one sample to another. The figures given are relevant for a 9 inch long barrel, which is the average length of the sawn-off Mistaravim barrels. Although more modern weapons are available, sawn-off CAR15s are still in active duty in several SF CT undercover units, due mainly to their high status.

End of firearm history lesson, which should be enough for even the most ardent gun nut, but in practical terms at Port Arthur during 1996 the weapon had two other huge advantages. First, it can be stowed in a "Prince" sports bag of the kind found in the Broad Arrow Cafe after the murders, which is too short to hold a full-length Colt Commando CAR15. Remember here the Mistaravim's prime requirement of "enhanced concealment" for tactical scenarios.

The container used to transport the weapon into the Broad Arrow Cafe was unquestionably the Prince sports bag, conveniently left on a cafe table after the mass murder. At 64-65 cm overall length with its stock fully folded, the sawn-off Mistaravim CAR15 and magazines fitted inside the 74 cm-long Prince sports bag easily, but the standard "decoy" Colt Commando later found badly damaged at Seascape could not have fitted at all.

> Like all other standard CAR15s, the weapon found at Seascape has a barrel length of 14.5 inches, resulting in a minimum overall length of 78 centimetres with its stock fully folded - a full four centimetres longer than the Prince sports bag itself!

This is critical forensic information, because it proves once and for all time that the damaged weapon found many hours later in the same Seascape building as Martin Bryant, could not under any circumstances have been the same weapon as the CAR15 used in the Broad Arrow Cafe for the mass murder.

The second huge advantage of the Mistaravim sawn-off CAR15, is that its shortened barrel generates a massive blast from the muzzle each time it fires. Well above 160 decibels (pain threshold is only 140 decibels), the CAR15's muzzle blast is on a par with a stun grenade, and has the same effect in a confined space like the Broad Arrow Café. Thus for several seconds after the first round was discharged, the spatial orientation of everyone inside the Café was destroyed, making it completely impossible for anyone to attempt to defend themselves and their families.

No-one made the much publicized statement “No. Not here!” because after the first three shots, when the statement was allegedly made, everyone in the Café was stone deaf, with at least two survivors suffering burst eardrums. Apart from the shooter, who was unquestionably wearing ear and nasal protection, the occupants of the Café were dazed and incoherent, their central nervous systems completely stunned. It was to be at least fifteen minutes, in some cases more than a week, before most would be able to hear properly again.

> So much for the Mistaravim and Port Arthur, and back to those willing to spread unsubstantiated rumors about the institutions tasked to protect them, viz. MI5, ASIO, and the British and Australian Special Air Service Regiments.

Perhaps you all missed the courage of the latter-named rescuing hostages from an embassy in the face of massed Skorpion firepower; operating alone on the East Timor border, and dying in Blackhawk crashes while merely practicing their skills in defending your respective nations? It is true they were only doing the jobs they were paid to do, but would you be up to it personally?

In time of war, a small core of these men will go on missions you have probably never heard of, because until recently the information was highly classified. In the northern hemisphere at least, special forces troopers are those responsible for placing nuclear demolition munitions behind enemy lines, destroying key installations and stalling an invasion of your country, perhaps for years. None have illusions about the missions. If required to go, they will do so in the certain knowledge that few if any will survive.

Do not misunderstand me here. Australia is supposedly a country of free speech, and I feel sure members of the Australian SAS are far too highly disciplined (and far too busy) to wander around Victoria and Queensland looking for people who have besmirched their good regimental name. This may not however be the case where certain supporters are concerned.

As an example of this, several years ago a British media-owned publishing house printed a book called Operation Nemesis, allegedly written by a former member of the British SAS with detailed knowledge of operations in Northern Ireland. Blood-curdling it was too, with active members of the Special Air Service accused of shooting dozens of innocent Irishmen through the back of the head, before burying them in a mass grave deep in the woods. It was an absolutely riveting read, but it was all untrue.

To cut a very long story short, some months later the true identity of the writer became known, and it was no great surprise to find he was a former Army corporal (a cook or something similar from memory), who had never been near the SAS barracks, much less a member of the Regiment. Rumor has it that shortly after this exposure, the retired corporal's head started bouncing off very hard solid stone walls in London. So often in fact, that he almost had a nervous breakdown. But hey, as I wrote earlier, only fools listen to rumors...

> In any event, for as long as there are fifth columnists among us willing to recirculate unsubstantiated and blatant propaganda, it is very easy to “divide and rule” countries like Britain and Australia. The best known method is to turn citizens against the police and military, thereby automatically directing suspicion at any officer tasked with law and order, either here and overseas.

As a dual British/Australian citizen with a military background, I am appalled at the number of people apparently willing to believe that their own armed forces would be prepared to murder 35 Australian men, women and children in cold blood.

Do not be sucked in by disinformation ploys. You all have high intelligence, and do not need to read what others or I might write for guidance. “Lateral thinking” is a puffed up new-age expression designed to pamper pompous academics, but it has no meaning in real life. What really matters is knowing how to think, rather than allowing the media to decide what you should think about. We can all do this, but it does require practice.

Interested? Try this: Record the television evening news on your VCR but do not watch it. When the program is over, play back the tape and watch it with the volume OFF. Without watching the anchorman’s face (to avoid accidental lip-reading), decide what you think each news item is about from the video alone, and make a few notes. Now rewind the tape and replay it with the volume ON. You will probably be amazed at the difference between your own interpretation of the video, and what the anchorman is trying to make you believe!

On the subject of Port Arthur and Martin Bryant there will always be massed media deception, and lobby manipulation. Just try to remember that the central issue is getting Martin Bryant a trial (which he has never had), rather than allowing others to deflect attention away from this prime requirement. Be encouraged rather than discouraged by the recent attempt on ASIO and the Australian Special Air Service, because it proves the lobbies, and others behind the mass murder, are slowly losing their nerve. For the present, be satisfied with that.

Anyone who has ever studied the Alfred P. Murrah building in Oklahoma, will notice very obvious similarities with the Taba Hilton Hotel in Egypt. A hypersonic blast wave has neatly removed the entire face of the building, and four days later on 11 October 2004 the ABC reported, "Israeli and Egyptian rescue workers ended their mission at the Taba Hilton bombing after they failed to recover the bodies."

With oil prices currently bouncing around above an unprecedented US $50.00 per barrel, it is becoming increasingly obvious to most Americans that the illegal invasion of Iraq is primarily to blame for this disaster. Contemptuously brushing aside blatant disinformation; including Peak Oil and China ´s suddenly increased petroleum needs, many are now peering behind the veil and realizing that none of these new factors existed before Wall Street ordered the wanton sacrifice of U.S. troops, during and after the catastrophic invasion of Iraq.

If the people of Iraq had been left alone to go about their own sovereign business unhindered by the war criminals in the Western Hemisphere, two millions barrels of Iraqi oil would still be flowing every day, and global oil prices would today be hovering around US$24.00 to US$26.00 per barrel. With the Iraq oil distribution pipeline grid now in flaming ruins, the rest of the oil producing world is being asked to take up the slack to provide for America´s ever-increasing oil gluttony, and to cover up Wall Street ´s obvious direct negligence and guilt.

Technically speaking the rest of the world could take up the slack, if everyone including Russia and Iran pulled together, thereby pumping enough oil to enable the Zionist Cabal in New York to refuel its flagging American imperial war machine, so America could attack Iran, and possibly Russia as well.

user posted image

Now ask yourself, if you were an Iranian or a Russian, would you rush to increase your oil pumping rates to maximum in order to assist the Western ´New World Order´ Faction A, in driving Abrams tanks across your own sovereign borders, in order to abuse and murder your own unarmed wives and children?

Oh, you would not do so? Good! Welcome back to the real world… There are a few fringe dwellers on the Internet who frantically claim that Russian President Vladimir Putin is really an integral part of a mysterious global "Illuminati" pact, hypothetically owned and controlled by Wall Street´s Faction A, and is simply waiting for a secret signal (or handshake) from Manhattan to suddenly flood North America with ultra-cheap crude oil.

Sadly perhaps, these ´Illuminati´ fringe dwellers are completely deluded. During 2003 America, Britain and Australia effectively declared World War III on the entire Eastern Hemisphere, which just happens to be home to Russia and Iran, which are members of NWO Faction C, who in alliance with Western NWO NESARA Faction B, are teamed up temporarily, in order to Destroy Bush, and all of NWO Faction A.

> QUOTE

> As I write this report, it is a fact that both Russia and Iran have increased ´back door´ crude oil deliveries to Eastern Hemisphere allies; China and North Korea in local currencies, while at the same time decreasing oil output to the Western Hemisphere via the Rotterdam Spot Market in U.S. dollars.

This Russian chess strategy is artificially enhancing the already critical oil shortage in America, and driving oil prices literally through the roof. In theory at least, if this position is maintained for more than six months, America will suffer total economic collapse, thereby neutralizing the current Zionist military threat to the rest of the world.

It has been an open secret for many years that American could not sustain it´s ever-increasing usage of crude oil unless an essentially ´free´ oil source could be found. And naturally enough, if America could not find a way of becoming self-sustaining in crude oil (either domestic or stolen), then the parasitic Jewish State in Palestine would go to the wall at exactly the same time.

The Jewish State survives almost exclusively on obscenely generous handouts from largely unwitting and mostly deluded decieved Christian American taxpayers, meaning disaster for America; would produce instant automatic disaster for the Jewish State as well, by extension. It was for this precise purpose that the Zionist Cabal planned Operation Shekhinah, which I exposed on 30 January 2002 as a detailed plan to steal Iraq´s oil reserves and thus prevent this very disaster.

For readers not familiar with this critical precursor to "Operation Iraqi Freedom", Remember that many operations including ´Shekhinah´ require specialist equipment, and sometimes specialist assistance from countries outside either America or the Jewish State, meaning that a discreet and apparently neutral country has to be used when coordinating the various operational components.

Until the early eighties, Beirut served this purpose admirably, literally crawling with spooks from America and the Jewish State, gleefully putting their heads together and planning all kinds of mischief against the Muslim nations of the Middle East. It was here for example that the Mossad managed to turn Abu Abbass into Abu Nidal, thus creating a veritable shock wave of proxy Muslim terrorist attacks across the world.

When it comes to black ops and media deception, the Jews have very few equals. Beirut would probably have remained the city of choice were it not for the terrible perversions of Yisraeli ´Defense Minister´ Ariel Sharon, who enjoyed nothing more than gang-raping defenseless Lebanese women and young boys, before putting them to death in the most gruesome of ways with their families watching, then murdering the survivors.

> This hellish situation would probably have continued forever, were it not for the timely intervention of the Hizbollah, a new counter-insurgency army formed and funded by Syria and Iran, specifically to drive the Yisraeli terrorists out of Lebanese sovereign territory.

By mid-1985 the Hizbollah gathered enough strength to drive the new self-appointed and clinically insane "King of the Jews" Ariel Sharon and his butchers, out of Beirut completely. Ideally what the Yisraeli terrorists needed for the continued coordination of external black operations, was a low profile sleepy backwater in a nearby subservient nation, where guests could be brought in for meetings without making very obvious visits to the Jewish State itself.

Eventually they selected the Red Sea Egyptian resort of Taba, theoretically under the control of obsequious Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, who in turn was already on the payroll of the American CIA. Taba itself is only a few miles from the Israeli port of Eilat, making it easy to slip foreign visitors in and out of the Jewish State, without any need for telltale visa stamps in their passports.

In reality, although much of the planning and coordination for oil related operations Shekhinah, and Iraqi Freedom, took place in the luxury hotels of Taba, there was rarely any need to cross the nearby border into the Jewish State.

Young boys and girls, depending on personal preference, were flown in from Cairo to be sexually abused at leisure for a few shekels, and the sunsets at the beach were especially alluring. Though the Russian KGB was obviously aware of Taba´s primary role as a covert operations center, it stayed discreetly in the background, occasionally sending in a "tourist" or two to check the lie of the land, and keep track of interesting visitors.

It seems likely that the Taba Hilton would be intact today, if the Mossad and CIA had been content to meddle in Iraq alone, because Russia knew that the Zionists were already soundly defeated there, as had been the intent from the moment they were lured across the starting line in Kuwait.

Unfortunately Wall Street is not noted for a high level of common sense, or sanity, and so they went on to order the mass murder at Beslan School in North Ossetia Russia, in order to create sufficient confusion in Chechnya, to allow their Georgian lackeys to start stealing Caspian crude oil.

The black look on Putin´s face when he left a hospital full of maimed Russian children in Beslan, should have been enough to warn the Zionists away from any similar action in the future, but once again, and in total insane desperation, they escalated the madness instead. Just one week after this foul and mind numbing atrocity in Beslan, during which 19 members of the Russian Special Forces were also shot in the back from extreme range, by CIA/Mossad funded snipers.

Yisraelim front man Colin Powell berated President Putin for "rolling back democracy," and then had the stiff brass neck to "instruct" the Russian President, to negotiate a political solution with the poor oppressed Chechen rebels. Obviously, American enforced double standard rules of "no negotiation" in the fictional "War on Terror," did not apply to sovereign Russia.

In less than a week, the Yisraelim front man; Powell, was joined in his accusations by more than a hundred members of the Zionist New World Order Council on Foreign Relations - from Václav Havel and Richard Holbrooke, to Glenys Kinnock and William Kristol - who echoed menacingly in writing, that President Putin was "exploiting the Beslan massacre to undermine democracy in Russia", and "adopting a threatening attitude towards Russia´s neighbors".

Even this would not have been sufficient cause, to provoke Putin into detonating a micro nuclear weapon in the basement of the Taba Hilton, because Vladimir Putin is a very cool customer, who knows for certain, that Russia can easily keep Caspian crude away from the clutches of the Zionist Cabal indefinitely. But as usual; New York panicked and next ordered that Russia´s internal oil industry Yukos, should be undermined, and if necessary destroyed, from within.

The bumbling Zionist plan involved inviting a cadre of Yukos Oil dissidents, who could be bought and controlled by Wall Street, down to Taba for a holiday, during which the imminent demise of Russia´s domestic oil industry, could be comfortably discussed in the discreet luxury of a Taba Hilton conference room.

Oh, really? By my estimate the conspirators from America, the Jewish State and the Russian traitors, had been seated for slightly over 28 minutes, when there was a terrible nuclear wail from the basement below, and the entire wing of the Taba Hilton, that they were conspiringly gathered in, was projected vertically upwards at close to the speed of light.

There are 16 bodies completely missing, having been vaporized instantly including four former senior treasonous Russian Yukos executives, who were there to sell Russia out to Western NWO Faction, fearing that their covert headquarters had been hit by a missile or missiles fired from a launch vehicle in the Red Sea, the Jewish State immediately scrambled every available F15 and F16 ground attack aircraft, sending them all southwards at the speed of sound, however there was nothing to be found.

Then as a cat teases and torments his prey prior to the kill, less than 12 hours ago, Vladimir Putin dangled a big black carrot in front of the Zionist's oil starved faces, by calmly announcing that he intends to sell the core Russian Yukos production asset "Yugansneftegaz," sometime during November, for around US$10.4 billion,

A real steal for a giant oil company, that German investment bank Dresdner Kleinwort Wasserstein recently valued at US$18.5 billion, the message thus seems to be that Vladimir Putin can be bribed by the New World Order Faction, leaders for a handsome price, which I sincerely hope Wall Street is gullible, and foolish enough to pay to Putin.

You see, big though Yugansneftegaz unquestionably is, it does not control the export pipelines from Russia. Oops! foiled again by the Russian Grand Chess Master, checkmating his enemy rival competitors; of Western "Illuminati" NWO Faction!

> In the mid-seventies America faced a new and escalating crisis, with US commercial jets being hijacked for geopolitical reasons. Determined to gain the upper hand in this new form of aerial warfare, two American multinationals collaborated with the Defense Advanced [Research] Projects Agency (DARPA) on a project designed to facilitate the remote recovery of hijacked American aircraft.

Pentagon Strike
Boeing 757 x 1
About 230,000 lbs

United Flight 175, South Tower

World Trade Center Strike
Boeing 767 x 2
About 420,000 lbs each

Brilliant both in concept and operation, "Home Run" [not its real code name] allowed specialist ground controllers to listen in to cockpit conversations on the target aircraft, then take absolute control of its computerized flight control system by remote means. From that point onwards, regardless of the wishes of the hijackers or flight deck crew, the hijacked aircraft could be recovered and landed automatically at an airport of choice, with no more difficulty than flying a radio-controlled model plane.

> QUOTE
> The engineers had no idea that almost thirty years after its initial design, Home Run's top secret computer codes would be broken, and the system used to facilitate direct ground control of the four aircraft used in the high profile attacks on New York and Washington on 11th September 2001.

Before moving on to the New York and Washington attacks, we first need to look at the ways in which an aircraft is normally controlled by its pilot, because without this basic knowledge, Home Run would make no sense. In order to control an aircraft in three-dimensional space, the pilot uses the control yoke (joystick) in front of him, rudder pedals under his feet, and a bank of engine throttles located at his side.

Without engine thrust the aircraft would not fly at all, so the throttles are largely self explanatory: For more speed or altitude increase throttle, for less speed or altitude decrease throttle. In order to raise or lower the nose of the aircraft, the pilot pulls or pushes on the control yoke, which in turn raises or lowers the elevators on the horizontal tailplane.

Back in the early days of flight, the control yoke and rudder pedals were connected to the various flight control surfaces by thin cables, meaning the pilot had direct physical control over every movement the aircraft made. This was no great problem for an average man flying a small biplane, but as aircraft grew ever bigger, heavier and faster over the years, the loadings on the control yoke and rudder pedals became huge, certainly well beyond the ability of a single pilot to handle unaided.

By the late fifties we were well into the age of hydraulics, where just like the power steering on your automobile, hydraulic rams were placed in line between the pilot's control cables and each individual control surface. Now when the pilot moved the control yoke, the cables activated sensors, which in turn activated one or more hydraulic rams, which in turn moved one or more control surfaces. For the first time since Bleriot and the Wright brothers, pilots were of necessity being steadily distanced from direct control of their own aircraft.

> When the multinationals and DARPA finally came on the scene in the mid seventies, aircraft systems were even more advanced, with computers controlling onboard autopilots, which in turn were capable of controlling all of the onboard hydraulics.

In combination these multiple different functions were now known as the "Flight Control System" or FCS, in turn integrated with sophisticated avionics capable of automatically landing the aircraft in zero visibility conditions. In summary, by the mid-seventies most of the large jets were capable of effectively navigating hundreds of miles and then making automatic landings at a selected airport in zero-zero fog conditions. All of this could be accomplished unaided, but in theory at least, still under the watchful eyes of the flight deck crews.

In order to make Home Run truly effective, it had to be completely integrated with all onboard systems, and this could only be accomplished with a new aircraft design, several of which were on the drawing boards at that time. Under cover of extreme secrecy, the multinationals and DARPA went ahead on this basis and built "back doors" into the new computer designs.

There were two very obvious hard requirements at this stage, the first a primary control channel for use in taking over the flight control system and flying the aircraft back to an airfield of choice, and secondly a covert audio channel for monitoring flight deck conversations. Once the primary channel was activated, all aircraft functions came under direct ground control, permanently removing the hijackers and pilots from the control loop.

Remember here, this was not a system designed to "undermine" the authority of the flight crews, but was put in place as a "doomsday" device in the event the hijackers started to shoot passengers or crew members, possibly including the pilots. Using the perfectly reasonable assumption that hijackers only carry a limited number of bullets, and many aircraft nowadays carry in excess of 300 passengers, Home Run could be used to fly all of the survivors to a friendly airport for a safe auto landing. So the system started out in life for the very best of reasons, but finally fell prey to security leaks, and eventually to compromised computer codes.

QUOTE

In light of recent high-profile CIA and FBI spying trials, these leaks and compromised codes should come as no great surprise to anyone.

Activating the primary Home Run channel proved to be easy. Most readers will have heard of a "transponder", prominent in most news reports immediately following the attacks on New York and Washington. Technically a transponder is a combined radio transmitter and receiver which operates automatically, in this case relaying data between the four aircraft and air traffic control on the ground.

The signals sent provide a unique "identity" for each aircraft, essential in crowded airspace to avoid mid-air collisions, and equally essential for Home Run controllers trying to lock onto the correct aircraft. Once it has located the correct aircraft, Home Run "piggy backs" a data transmission onto the transponder channel and takes direct control from the ground.

This explains why none of the aircraft sent a special "I have been hijacked" transponder code, despite multiple activation points on all four aircraft. Because the transponder frequency had already been piggy backed by Home Run , transmission of the special hijack code was rendered impossible. This was the first hard proof that the target aircraft had been hijacked electronically from the ground, rather than by [FBI-inspired] motley crews of Arabs toting penknives.

The Home Run listening device on the flight deck utilizes the cockpit microphones that normally feed the Cockpit Voice Recorder (CVR), one of two black boxes armored to withstand heavy impact and thereby later give investigators significant clues to why the aircraft crashed. However, once hooked into Home Run , the CVRs are bypassed and voice transmissions are no longer recorded on the 30-minute endless loop recording tape.

If Home Run is active for more than thirty minutes, there will therefore be no audible data on the Cockpit Voice Recorders. To date, crash investigators have recovered the CVRs from the Pentagon and Pittsburg aircraft, and publicly confirmed that both are completely blank. The only possible reason for this, is data capture by Home Run , providing the final hard proof that the attack aircraft were hijacked electronically from the ground, rather than by "Arab terrorists".

> Many readers might by now be indignant; convinced this is incorrect or misleading information because of "those telephone calls from the hijacked aircraft".

Which telephone calls exactly? There are no records of any such calls, and the emotional claptrap the media fed you in the aftermath of the attack was in all cases third-person. We had the media's invisible "contact" at an airline who "said" a hostess called to report a hijacking, and we had a priest (?) who "said" he received a call from a man asking him in turn to call his wife and tell her he loved her.

Presumably this man would have had his wife's name filed in his cellphone, and faced with imminent death would have called her direct. The FAA helped out by claiming that it had "overheard" a heated argument from a cockpit where the radio transmit switch had been left in the "on" position. When push came to shove, the FAA was forced to retract, and admit that the mythical argument was not on the tapes at all.

Whether more information will be forthcoming about Home Run is unknown, but nowadays there are large numbers of people apart from the author privy to the basic data. As long ago as the early nineties, a major European flag carrier [Lufthansa] acquired the information and was seriously alarmed that one of its own aircraft might be "rescued" by the Americans without its authority. Accordingly, this flag carrier completely stripped the American flight control computers out of its entire fleet, and replaced them with a home grown version.

These aircraft are now effectively impregnable to penetration by Home Run , but that is more than can be said for the American aircraft fleet. A casual count indicates around 600 aircraft in the USA and elsewhere are still vulnerable and could be used in further attacks at any time, which might help explain why America has lately been bombing the Afghans primarily with bags of wheat.

> For the first time in US history, American officials appear to be genuinely fearful of future reprisals, and justifiably so with 600 giant bombs parked on the wrong side of their missile defence shield.

It is a "Catch 22" situation. In order to make all of the aircraft safe, the flight control systems would have to be stripped out and replaced, at a cost of billions of dollars the airlines cannot afford because they are going broke. Nor is there enough time. The most innovative anti-hijacking tool in the American arsenal, has now become the biggest known threat to American national security.

For the purpose of public reassurance I would like to publish a complete list of aircraft which cannot be affected by Home Run, but I cannot do so for legal reasons. Any aircraft manufacturer not on the list might feel inclined to sue me for defamation and I can't afford that. However, there is nothing to stop me publishing my personal choice of aircraft for a flight from, say, Atlanta to Singapore via JFK, Frankfurt, and Kuala Lumpur.

From Atlanta to JFK I would probably travel on a Boeing 737, and connect with a Boeing 777 for the onward flight to Frankfurt. At Frankfurt I would probably board an Airbus A340 for Kuala Lumpur, and finish the journey to Singapore on a DC9 or a Fokker 100. Naturally I might be unlucky enough to pick an aircraft with an intoxicated pilot, or an unrelated mechanical problem, but apart from those minor risks I'd feel pretty safe

Update 15 October 2001

After this page had been hit on by more than 10,000 curious visitors, the current issue of "Business Week" (22Oct) decided to publish an unusual letter, suggesting that the events of the 11th of September would have ended rather differently if there was a capability for Ground Tower Control to "take over the controls of a hijacked plane" (issue still available at any US newsagent).

Remember, the American Federal Government kept Reagan National airport in downtown Washington, DC shut, despite the fact that none of the "hijacked" planes came from there. However, if it were possible to "take over the controls" of a plane, then it would take less than a minute for planes close to DCA airport to be diverted to a target anywhere in the capital. There were just two aircraft types involved on the 11th of September.

Eventually, after much reluctance, the government has now opened up Reagan National airport again, but ONLY for planes with less than 156 seats. Now what kind of planes previously operating happily out of Reagan National will this new "seating" restriction exclude? Hint: Among a few others, the Boeing 757 and 767.

Cynics might be tempted to conclude that, as usual, "important" politicians and bureaucrats are being provided with discreet special protection from Home Run, while everyday Americans are left to take their chances as best they can, and run the continual risk of being shot down by one of their own F16 fighters. Ignorance may be bliss for some folk, but not for those who have studied this page and realized the implications.

Suddenly, more than five weeks after the attack and for no apparent reason, the most powerful newspaper in the western world published a major article "reinforcing" the myth that physical hijackers were responsible for the attacks on 11 September. No hard facts of course, no corroboration at all, just the usual pathetic series of media "sources", all of them far too "secret" to reveal.

Within hours of this newspaper going to press, television reporters across the entire western world repeated the fiction to their own viewing publics. From London in England to Sydney in Australia, everone woke to this new "proof" that Arabs were the real culprits. Never mind public safety, please believe what we, your trusted and experienced news peddlers, are telling you. To read the propaganda, click here.

During the past few days I have received many emails asking for a written explanation of who was behind the attacks on 11 September, and why. As an investigator I can prove how the attack was carried out, but I cannot prove why or by whom. Of all the work I have seen on the Internet, the closest to the truth is probably this inspired report called "Orient Express" written by journalist Israel Shamir. Former German Minister Von Buelow Already Knew About Remote Control!

> In his interview with the German daily "Tagesspiegel" on January 13th, former German Secretary of Defence Andreas Von Buelow made the following statement:-

"There is also the theory of one British flight engineer: according to this, the steering of the planes was perhaps taken out of the pilots' hands, from outside. The Americans had developed a method in the 1970s, whereby they could rescue hijacked planes by intervening into the computer piloting [automatic pilot system]. This theory says, this technique was abused in this case..."

Not quite so much a theory as might first appear. When I released the above report about "Home Run" remote control in October 2001, I mentioned that one European flag carrier was aware of the technology, though at that precise point in time I thought it prudent not to name the actual airline:-

"As long ago as the early nineties, a major European flag carrier acquired the information and was seriously alarmed that one of its own aircraft might be "rescued" by the Americans without its authority. Accordingly, this flag carrier completely stripped the American flight control computers out of its entire fleet, and replaced them with a home grown version.

The European flag carrier which completely stripped the American flight computers out of its aircraft was Lufthansa, the German national airline. Bearing in mind his former posts as Secretary of Defence and Minister of Science and Technology, Herr Von Buelow would have known all about this mammoth but secretive task.

How very clever (and discreet) of Von Buelow to sort of "drop the information" into the middle of an interview about the 9/11 attacks!

In response to some of our readers who have questioned our premise that it was Rabbi Dov Zakheim who 'called for' the Pearl Harbor type of incident, we here at Conspiracy News Net acknowledge that the PNAC document was written by the likes of William Kristol and Donald Kagan, and therefore as the real brains behind the agenda they are the ones calling for it in a literal sense. However, we do stand by our assertion that the Rabbi called for it as well, insofar that he signed his name onto this document. If he signed it he agrees with it and therefore he is calling for it.

Some of you have argued that we are singling out Rabbi Zakheim because he is Jewish, implying that we are pushing some sort of twisted anti-semetic agenda while noting that he is not the only one who signed the PNAC document and therefore wondering why our article is about him and not the others.

We do not mean to imply that the Rabbi acted alone, our article simply points out that Rabbi Zakheim had access to things like structural integrity, blueprints and any number of important facets of information about the WTC through his work with TRIDATA CORPORATION in the investgation of the bombing of the WTC in 1993. That he had access to REMOTE CONTROL Technology through his work at System Planning Corporation (SPC). That he had access to BOEING AIRCRAFT through a lease deal HE BROKERED while working at the Pentagon.

Finally that he was part of a group of politically radical Straussian Neo-Conservatives, who, through their association with PNAC, called for restructuring of the Middle East, noting that a Pearl Harbor type of event MAY BE NEEDED to foster the frame of mind required for the American public to accept such a radical foreign policy agenda.

In light of all this information we here at Conspiracy News Net stand by our statement that Mr. Zakheim not only called for the slamming of the WTC Towers on 9-11, but he activily took part in their demolition by providing the logistics necessary for such an attack to occur.

Otto Jewell lay strapped to the spotless white operating table while special operations technicians checked the electrodes on his scalp, and adjusted the two high-resolution lenses mounted directly above his head, designed to reflect images from the visual input projector at the foot of the operating table directly onto the retina of each eye.

QUOTE

On each side of Otto's head, two extra low frequency generators built into special headphones pulsed slowly and smoothly, enveloping both hemispheres of his brain with high-intensity electromagnetic fields.

Off to one side of the room was located the ELF generator control console, and a sophisticated electroencephalograph (EEG) linked to four green computer screens, each displaying one of Otto's four brain frequency groups: Alpha, Beta, Theta and Delta.

As the generators pulsed slowly, the delta screen showed a brilliant green trace while the other three remained blank, apart from an occasional brief green 'spike' on the alpha screen.

Directly beneath the four green screens a larger colour screen was on standby, ready to repeat all data relayed to the retina of Otto's eyes by the visual input projector, to the left of the computer bank stood a standard medical array, monitoring Otto's vital signs including respiration, pulse and skin conductivity. All was well in The Terrorist Factory: Otto was sleeping like a baby and programming could continue as soon as the staff were ready.

CIA controller Julia Long nodded to the others and walked out of the climate controlled operating room into the blazing hot Moroccan sunshine. Although it was still early in April 1984, the sun beat down remorselessly and Julia thought again how unfair it was that the 'special access' facility had to be sited in the middle of Morocco, a country she personally found far too backward for her tastes.

Unfortunately there was little choice, because the US Congress had banned experiments on human targets back in 1973, at which point Special Operations had secretly moved the facility to Beirut in the Lebanon. She smiled bitterly. Beirut had been wonderful, and ideally sited until the Russian military had blown more than two hundred US marines apart with a pair of special truck bombs.

Beirut was also an ideal launching point for her more normal 'clients': Arabs, including Palestinian refugees with a military background, programmed to believe they were operating under the direct orders of the PLO as they bombed their way across Europe, creating mayhem and fanning blind hatred against the nations of the' Middle East.

Most of the patriotic PLO terrorists were killed during their missions of course, and those who survived could not provide their interrogators with any information at all, even under intense torture. US techniques in manufacturing electro-hypnotic dual personalities had been developed over a thirty year period and were the very best, totally resistant to expert probing by anyone up to and including the Russian KGB.

It never occurred to Julia Long that what she was doing was wrong. To her, the end justified the means entirely when spreading the doctrine of CIA 'democracy' across the globe. If a few dozen or a few hundred people had to die in front of television cameras in order to manipulate public opinion, then so be it. Julia was in the business of deliberately generating public anger by staging horrific, obscene operations which shocked the public via the television screen.

After seeing bloodied, mangled bodies attributed to the PLO, Shining Path or whichever group was selected by the CIA as the "culprit" for the atrocity of the day, the public was happy to cheer on the US bombers which then proceeded to blow the 'terrorists' and their wives and children off the face of the Earth.

> The fact no one would have died at all without the intervention of her small deadly Special Operations group was of no concern. For Julia Long, the world was run by CIA covert operations, and nothing else was of any consequence.

As Julia sat in the hot sunshine smoking a cigarette, she thought briefly of Otto. It was nearly ten years since one of the facility's clients had been subjected to such an intense programme although the rationale was inescapable: as an Englishman, Otto had to be word perfect in every way, in the event he was captured and interrogated during the special mission planned for him in the West End of London.

It was one thing interrogating an Arab who was 'obviously' PLO; quite another interrogating an Englishman with a high-profile professional oil background. British Intelligence would pull out all the stops and try especially hard to break Otto if he were taken alive during or after the mission. A little grimly, Julia cast a sidelong glance at the smoky Atlas Mountains in the background as she crushed the cigarette under her boot.

She would allow no mistakes with Otto: Not one. As she opened the door of the operating room, cool air controlled at exactly 68 degrees Fahrenheit swept over her. Taking her seat at the control console and donning a set of headphones, Julia turned with long familiarity and deftly moved two sliding controls. Immediately the green trace on the delta screen started to diminish and the alpha screen came alive slowly with a full-length trace instead of the intermittent spikes.

As Otto started to show signs of stirring, Julia flicked a switch across to the "binaural" position and the electromagnetic fields were thrown out of synchronisation, flooding Otto's left and right brain hemispheres with fractionally different frequencies. The effect on Otto was to force his brain to try and 'match' the continually shifting frequencies.

> QUOTE

> Unable to do so, his brain became entrained by the alternating beat. In less than ten seconds, Otto was in a full-blown electromagnetic hypnotic trance, with high technology at its disposal, Special Operations had not used "You are feeling sleepy..." hypnotic techniques for years,
> Though a large team of tame, well funded academics was held in reserve to assure the gullible public that hypnosis was "quite safe" and "could not be used to make a person act against his own personal moral code".

Recalling the tame academics, Julia smiled a slow, sardonic smile. All Special Operations had to do was point a professor at the public, and his hurriedly composed excuses were instantly accepted without question by media and citizens alike.

Julia swung around on her chair and spoke briefly to the team psychiatrist by the operating table: "I need maximum pupil dilation five minutes from now." With a mute nod, the heavy-set bearded psychiatrist turned to the drip leading into Otto's left forearm and waited as the drug slowly flowed into his vein.

The powerful hypnotic drug rapidly reinforced Otto's trance state, while a "cocktail" derived from Curare limited the movement of his eyelids. Nodding with satisfaction, the psychiatrist slowly started to administer atropine.

As the atropine started to take effect, the pupils of Otto's eyes grew steadily larger despite the intense overhead lighting and the eye's natural inclination to shut out light under such circumstances. The visual input projector now had direct and unrestricted access to the retina of each of Otto's eyes.

> Julia spoke clearly into a special boom microphone positioned less than an inch away from her lips.. Okay, Otto, I am going to take you back to 1970 when you were flying over Oman. Do you remember the mission we talked about before, when your helicopter was covering the fighter -bombers attacking the fort occupied by Yemeni terrorists?"
>
> "Yes," Otto replied tonelessly without moving a muscle.
> "Right. You are there again in the cockpit just before the fighters start their attack run. Everything is so real, Otto, so very real. Start flying the mission from there. Remember Otto, remember everything - the sight, the sound, the smells and the vibration of the helicopter."

Otto looked around at the jagged edges of the mountains below the helicopter and then back up. at the horizon, before spotting the two Hawker Hunter ground-attack fighters moving in fast over the desert, sunlight' flashing from their plexiglass cockpit canopies as they turned to line up fbr the attack run.
Swiftly but smoothly,

Otto climbed out of the helicopter's left hand pilot seat and made his way back to the starboard door. With one deft movement he swung the heavy machine-gun mount outwards and locked it in place.

Still watching the Hunters out of the corner of his eye, he fed the leading end of a 200-round belt of glittering brass shells into the machine-gun breech. Every third shell was a red-tipped tracer round, designed to aid accuracy when firing at ground targets. Cocking the weapon, Otto started searching the ground below for signs of movement at the rear of the fort as the Hunter fighters levelled their wings, flipping out their belly air-brakes to reduce speed to 450 miles per hour.

While he watched, Otto checked the clip of his Browning 9-mm automatic pistol, then patted the pocket of his flying suit to check his two "special" 9-mm rounds were safe. If the helicopter was hit by ground fire and brought down in the mountains, the crew's handling by the Chinese-trained Yemeni terrorists was pre-ordained. Without ceremony their testicles would be slashed off with a carved dagger, then sewn into their mouths while they stiff lived.

If an airman panicked on the ground and emptied the clip of his Browning too fast, the two "'special" rounds were there with which to blow his own brains out, if he had enough time. Two rounds, not one, because the first might misfire.

QUOTE

A small stream of humans was already leaving the rear door of the fort as the first Hunter fired its salvo of high explosive rockets towards the front walls. With soundless flashes and clouds of smoke, the rockets burst slightly to the left of the fort with only three hitting the main structure.

Cursing over his radio, the leader pulled out of his attack dive while his number two fired a-second salvo straight into the fort itself. Otto's helicopter plummeted down towards the dark valleys like a falcon, as both Hunters swooped again to strafe what was left of the fort with their four 30-millimetre cannons.

Below Otto's helicopter the terrorists leaving the fort had seen his approach, and three stopped briefly to fire ragged bursts of automatic fire from their Chinese-made AK47 assault rifles. Otto swivelled the heavy machine-gun, allowed for aim-off and lightly tapped the trigger twice, firing two rapid three-round bursts to sight the weapon. The two red tracers smashed into the rock face slightly in front of the terrorists 500 yards away in the valley.

Shifting the machine-gun fractionally, Otto fired three five round bursts in rapid succession. As the machine-gun shuddered violently in the helicopter, all three terrorists were knocked spinning backwards against the rock face. Ignoring the empty shell cases and black belt links being ejected into the helicopter slipstream.

Otto continued firing carefully spaced five round bursts, until interrupted by Julia Long:

"Otto, Otto, report your current activity!"

"Air-to-ground suppressive fire."

"Good, Otto, very good! Listen carefully to my voice, listen carefully to my voice. I am relaying a new assignment to you from headquarters. You have been requested on an exchange programme with Special Operations in Morocco. The security classification is Cosmic International and you are promoted to the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Open your eyes wide Otto, open your eyes wide. You are still flying on operations. I repeat, you are still flying on operations..."

With the flick of a switch Julia Long turned a the projector at the foot of the operating table, the beam of which was promptly split and relayed directly to the retina of Otto's eyes by the accurate high- resolution lenses above his head. As new images started flickering from the projector, his detailed memories of the mountains of Oman started to shimmer and slowly dissolve, to be replaced by similar scenery passing more quickly.

When Julia increased the alpha field to maximum and decreased delta to minimum, Otto watched transfixed as his Northrop F5 fighter-bomber swooped low over the Western Sahara, firing a burst of 20-millimetre cannon shells at two vehicles trying to escape behind a large sand dune. As the first vehicle exploded, Otto kicked off deflection and fired another burst at the second. With black flecks of soot from the cannon speckling his windshield, Otto pulled back viciously on the controls and slammed the twin throttles through the afterburner gate. For an instant in time, he looked down at the devastation below as green tracer shells weaved lazily around the wings of the F5.

> The radio crackled in his headphones: "Good run, colonel, good run! Now get the bell out of there and return to base." Still strapped to the operating, table, Otto watched obediently as he and his aircraft broke off the action and returned to base.
> The runway threshold rushed towards him, and with a very real screech from its tyres the F5 settled gracefully on the tarmac, slowly decelerating and then turning at the runway intersection to head towards the dispersal area and the waiting ground crew.
>
> A post-mission flood of adrenaline rushed through Ono, and Julia swiftly adjusted the alpha and delta fields to compensate for his rapidly increasing pulse rate and skin conductivity. After stabilising his vital signs, Julia Long turned . and spoke once more into her sensitive boom microphone.

"We will now conduct your debriefing, colonel The mission was a complete success. Listen carefully so my voice, listen carefully to my voice. You are tired from your mission and will be allowed to sleep. When you wake again, you will have forgotten all life events after the age of 27 years. I repeat, when you wake you will have forgotten all life events after the age of 27 years.

All you will remember, I repeat, all you will remember is that you are a lieutenant colonel on exchange duties with Special Operations, at a classified base in Morocco for multi-role training required for your mission. Congratulations, colonel! Enjoy your sleep."

As Julia moved her controls, the green trace on the delta wave screen slowly increased at exactly the same rate as the alpha trace decreased. Within minutes Otto lay passively unconscious, his sleep disturbed only by intermittent green spikes on the alpha screen.

Once more Julia turned to the psychiatrist waiting next to the operating table: "Put him out for about eight hours please, then have the technicians take him to his room. Put a discreet guard outside, but don't worry; when Otto wakes again he will believe he really is a 27-year-old lieutenant colonel. He will remember nothing about his life beyond that point."

Under his bushy eyebrows, the psychiatrist's eyes glittered slightly as he prepared the powerful tranquiliser and watched Julia Long as she strolled out of the room. Though in her forties, Julia was a very attractive woman capable of turning many male heads.

> As Julia sat down at a table in the officers' mess and slowly stirred her cup of hot coffee, she thought back over the chain of events that had finally resulted in Otto being delivered to the 'special facility' in Morocco. Julia smiled a. wan smile.

It was perhaps the height of irony that another Englishman, John Dwyer, had brought Otto to the attention of a refired American CIA operative in Salt Lake City, Utah. For years Dwyer had worked as a sub-contractor for the CIA's African desk, and thought Otto's qualifications might be of use to his masters at Central Intelligence.

After leaving the RAF in the early 'seventies, Otto had moved into the specialised field of oilfield drilling operations. He seemed to have a natural aptitude for that profession, because by 1980 he was operating as the top engineering troubleshooter for an American multinational corporation he had joined only three years earlier. At the time Dwyer called his retired CIA contact, Earl Haggard, Otto was troubleshooting some oil wells in the Rocky Mountains, due east of Salt Lake City.

Discreet CIA enquiries revealed Otto spent much of his. spare time at a rifle range near his home, so an 'accidental' meeting was arranged. Earl Haggard, a veteran of the notorious Phoenix psychological operation in Laos, turned up at the range and casually befriended Otto. As the weeks rolled by, Earl became convinced Otto Jewell could be of great use to the Agency.

As a top troubleshooter in the oilfield service industry, Otto had immediate and unquestioned access to almost any country in the world. His strong military background was also in his favour, as were his demonstrated lethal skills as a marksman with pistols, rifles and automatic weapons.

The question of how or where Otto might best be used by the CIA was not Earl's concern however, so after sending a long, detailed assessment of Ottos potential to Langley Headquarters in Virginia, he returned to his favourite golf course and forgot all about the Englishman.

CIA headquarters in Langley showed immediate interest. It was not every day that an Englishman with Otto's qualifications was brought to the attention of its intelligence analysts, one of whom noted Otto had spent much time in Middle Eastern countries, before carefully circling the single, word `LIBYA' with a bold stroke of his red pen. Otto's background pointed to his obvious use on covert missions under the aegis of Special Operations.

> Within a week, Otto Jewell's file was hand-carried by special courier to a small low-key CIA facility located in New Orleans, Louisiana,. where it was placed in the "in" tray of one Gordon Nobel. From that point forward, only paper files would be kept on Otto: computers were far too vulnerable to researchers leaning on the CIA under the Freedom of Information Act.
> Julia Long moved uneasily on her chair in the officers' mess as she thought about. Nobel, the man legend said coordinated the assassination of President John F. Kennedy in Dallas. Nobel was an animal, a known CIA heavy who took considerable pleasure in breaking limbs and, where necessary, shooting people through the back of the head with a heavy-calibre pistol.

Most people in Special Operations were afraid of him and literally jumped to obey his every command. Julia was no exception and had all but sat rigidly to attention when he called her during 1983.

"Julia, hi!" The voice was deceptively soft when Gordon Nobel spoke on the secure international landline from New Orleans to Morocco. "Listen, I have a new client for you: an oilman with a good, solid military background. Initially we intend to use him on a tripartite drilling operation in West Bengal, then we'll get around to his special mission a little later."

"Fine, Gordon, where is he now?"

"We are going to hire hire him as project engineer for a drilling operation near Calcutta. It's an interesting job. The Russians are helping the Indians to drill a deep oil and gas well in the Ganges delta, and our man is going in there to help them drill it with an advanced American fluid system. Or at least he thinks he's going to help them. The whole thing is basically a cover for the special mission he'll go on later, but he doesn't know that."

Gordon continued: "We think it's a hell. of a deal. We can really screw those Russian and Indian Commie bastards at the same time!" Julia Long listened nervously to the cold soft voice hissing on the, scrambled secure landline, then suddenly started when she realised Nobel had stopped speaking: "Fine, Gordon, fine. What do you want from my end?"

"Take your time, Julia. Have a couple of weeks' holiday, then fly to Dakar in Bangladesh. We'll arrange diplomatic cover for you and attach you to the local US aid team; From there you can go in and out of Calcutta as a diplomatic commuter. Your contact will be Louis McCaul at our local Calcutta consulate. He's in deep cover and there are no known documented links ,between him and the CIA or Special Operations.

Louis will arrange for your special equipment to be carried in the diplomatic mail bag.

"The name of your new client is Otto Jewell and he'll be staying at the Oberoi Grand Hotel. We've bought a couple of the hotel staff, so access to Otto's room will not be a problem. Louis will arrange all that. Okay so far?"

Julia thought for a few seconds. "Okay, Gordon. What do you want me to do with this Otto Jewell? In other words, what mission are we preparing him for exactly? I want to get the procedures right."
"On this mission we operate 'need to know', Julia. All you need to know at this stage is that you spend the first month or so observing Otto from a distance.

Watch his behaviour patterns carefully. We'll be doing our bit by screwing the Commies at his rig, so Otto will be under plenty of stress trying to figure out what in hell is going on. When you get word from me, I want you to start building a shallow 'decoy' hypnotic level - not too easy to break, but not too hard either."

QUOTE

"Have your Marine technicians rough him up under hypnosis and threaten his children - you know, the usual things. Make it as nasty as you can Julia, because if he's taken alive on the real mission early next year, that is all, I repeat, all that any interrogator is going to sweat out of him: the decoy level you develop in Calcutta. You'll get more orders later."

Coming back to her senses, Julia Long finished her cup of coffee in the officers' mess, then strolled through the searing noonday Moroccan heat towards her room. Though the conversation had taken place nearly nine months before, the memory of Nobel's voice still had the capacity to make her feel afraid. Lying down on her bed, Julia fell into a deep sleep.

And as she slept, she dreamed a dream. Suddenly Julia Long was back amid the chaos and noise of Calcutta, setting up her equipment in Otto's palatial room at the five-star Oberoi Grand Hotel.

http://web.archive.org/web/20030406205050/...mknemesis2.html

Julia Long and two Marine Special Operations technicians stood in the centre of room 352 at the Oberoi Grand Hotel in Calcutta, while obsequious hotel executive Ribnu Chattergee waited anxiously for approval. The room had been redesigned exactly to the new specification and Chattergee was eager to leave. The Yanks paid well but they were an odd bunch.

QUOTE

The woman in particular made Chattergee's skin crawl. As if reading his thoughts, Julia turned on her heel and faced him: "You may go. Tell reception that rooms 350 and 354 are also reserved for our use. No one is to enter them without my personal approval."

As Chattergee scuttled gratefully through the door, Julia Long turned to the senior Marine technician: "Okay, Hank, unpack the gear and let's get started. The first ELF generator goes in the air conditioning duct to the left of the bed, and the second inside the wooden cabinet to the right.

Then parasite-wire both to the hotel mains power and we'll calibrate to make sure we can entrain Otto's brain while he's lying in bed or sitting watching TV. We already have direct control of his television video input connector from room 350. Come on, hurry it up."

Hank looked up from the padded aluminium case he was carefully unpacking on the floor: "Yes Maam. How much time do we have before Otto gets back from. the drilling ng site?"

Don't worry about him, Hank. That man has so much work to do I doubt we'll see him back here for two days at least. Gerald Smith from New Orleans has sabotaged the fluid system but Otto won't know what the hell is happening until it's too late to do anything about it. The drilling rig will disintegrate when the underground pressures get out of control. Langley wants that to happen real fast.

God knows how much oil and gas is down there, but Langley doesn't want the Russians or Indian Commies to reach 20,000 feet at all. If they can't reach the oil and gas, the Russians and Indians won' t challenge US supremacy in the Bay of Bengal. Remember Libya gentlemen, remember Libya! Look what happened there when Qadhafi found all that oil after he took control in 1969. Now the Arab sonofabitch thinks he can ignore US orders. We won't make the same mistake twice."

Julia leaned down and picked up the first of the two small but powerful extra-low-frequency generators. Both were disguised as normal electrical junction boxes that would attract no special attention if they were discovered by mistake. Holding one in her left hand, Julia Long walked towards the bed...

Thousands of stars twinkled brightly in the jet-black night sky as Otto's ancient Austin limousine bounced along a rutted dirt track thirty miles to the south-east of Calcutta. The rusty springs groaned with agony as the Austin negotiated a sharp comer, before turning onto a raised gravel causeway that ran as straight as an arrow across the shadowed rice paddies.

QUOTE

Far away in the distance Otto could see a tiny tree of lights that grew larger as his geriatric limousine bounced in and out of the potholes. Slowly but surely the tree took shape until the stark outline of a huge drilling derrick was painted against the backdrop of the night sky.

Reaching up to a height of more than one hundred and fifty feet, it looked exactly what it was: the most powerful land drilling rig on the subcontinent, capable of soaking up the thousands of horsepower needed to drill more than four miles straight down into the bowels of the Earth.

Owned by the Indian Oil and Natural Gas Commission, the rig had already drilled to 12,400 feet, and it was Otto's job to switch over from the simple Indian drilling fluid to the imported high-performance American system, designed to handle the tough drilling and extreme underground pressures expected between 13,000 and 20,000 feet: a task the American system could handle with consummate ease. Under normal circumstances it was one of the best systems in the world, and easily the most expensive.

The luminous hands on Otto's black-faced chronometer showed I I pm as his limousine swept onto the rig site, throwing a cloud of dust up in the air as the driver screeched to an abrupt halt alongside the limousine of Otto's Russian opposite number, Mr Osimin. As Otto got out and walked across to his small caravan to get changed, he could feel the ground vibrating slightly to the beat of the V12 rig diesels, growling softly as they ticked over slowly at the base of the drilling derrick. The big rig was capable of generating enough power to light a small town.

Entering the caravan, Otto was surprised to find his American relief Gerald Smith immaculately dressed and holding a bag in his hand. Smith was not due to leave Calcutta until the next morning, a fact Otto reminded him of with considerable force. Gerald seemed quite unconcerned at the pointed rebuke and said he had a plane to catch. Assuring Otto the high-performance fluid system had been mixed to perfection and was ready for immediate changeover, Gerald strode to the waiting limousine and departed immediately for Calcutta's Dum Dum airport.

Unfortunately Gerald Smith had 'forgotten' to hand the office key to Otto, who was now faced with the complex task of changing systems at the dead of night without being able to check the fluid himself, because the test equipment was locked in the office. It was annoying of course, but no more than that. Otto had not anticipated his American relief might deliberately sabotage the drilling fluid system.

Changing from one sort of fluid system to another is basically simple. When a rig is drilling, the fluid is pumped down the inside of the hollow drill pipe to the bottom of the well. where it squirts out through three jet nozzles in the drill bit, before coming back to surface in the space between the outside of the drill pipe and the walls of the hole. ce back at surface it flows through conditioning tanks then back down the inside of the drill pipe again. Just like a car's cooling system, the drilling fluid system works in closed

Just as a car owner periodically flushes out his cooling system to replace it with fresh fluid, Otto was about to do the same thing to the 60,000 gallons of drilling fluid, with one important difference: the pressure at the bottom of the Indian well was more than seven thousand pounds to the square inch. It was a delicate and very dangerous operation, requiring a high level of expertise,

Both old and new fluid systems were already weighted with suspended heavy mineral particles to overbalance the underground pressure. One tiny mistake with fluid weights and the pressure would force its way up through the weighted fluid, instantly hurling more than a quarter-million pounds of steel drill pipes out of the well with the velocity of a Saturn V rocket leaving its launch pad. It had happened all too often before, causing the deaths of many crew members unable to avoid the flying steel or escape the explosive gas cloud.

Otto swiftly ordered the two huge fluid pumps lined-up on the spare tanks holding the new American fluid system, then arranged for a dump gate to be opened at the side of the rig through which the old fluid would be bled to waste. The four mighty V12 diesels started bellowing as power was fed to the fluid pumps and changeover to the high performance fluid began.

Thirty minutes later, the new fluid completed its trip down through the drill pipe and back up to surface - then everything started to go wrong. Instead of stabilising at the right thickness designed to hold the heavy mineral particles in perfect suspension, the high performance fluid inexplicably started thinning.

Osimin was as worried as Otto. The routine changeover had turned into an instant major emergency. Without support from the fluid for the heavy weighting mineral particles, only the pressure of the pumps continually moving the fluid round the system was effectively suspending them. If for any reason the pumps failed, the mineral particles would slowly sink to the bottom of the hole, well below a known high-pressure gas zone at 11,000 feet, which would rapidly unload up the well bore with awesome speed.

> A live high-pressure gas blowout was being prevented only by the two huge fluid pumps, each the size of a small truck, and they could not keep working forever. Rapidly clearing all non-essential personnel from the rig danger zone, Otto and Osimin retained only a small core of experienced drillers to handle the emergency.

Shouting at the top of his voice, Otto rapidly outlined the only possible way of saving the rig and local village from destruction until they broke into the office to find out what had been mixed into the fluid system by 'mistake'. The others looked suitably grim, but what other course of action could they take? Otto Jewell did indeed 'have much to do' and would be unlikely to return to the Oberoi Grand Hotel for at least a week, if ever...

Julia Long sat on the couch in room 352 at the hotel and relaxed with a glass of iced lime juice while looking carefully for tell-tale signs of her Special Operations 'modifications'. There were none at all. Both ELF generators were carefully concealed, and were calibrated so that each would deliver an equal-strength electromagnetic field to each hemisphere of Otto's brain as he lay in bed or sat watching TV. The resulting effect was similar to conventional stereo, though these powerful ELF generators emitted no audible sound.

The ELF generators sent out fields only in the range of human brain activity, at frequencies between 0.1 and 25 cycles per second. By varying the output of the generators, Julia would be able to introduce a 'binaural split' where the electromagnetic fields from each ELF stereo channel sent fractionally different signals to each hemisphere, entraining Otto's brain with an electromagnetic beat frequency and rendering him powerless to resist conditioning.

Julia would only use extra low frequency 2.5 to 1.2 cycle Delta fields on Otto initially, as the programme called for a shallow hypnotic trance to be supplemented by drugs. Once he was under basic control the team would be able to enter the room at any time, without Otto's knowledge, to physically condition him, after which the Delta field pattern would continue to be used every night to stabilise his sleeping pattern. A little later Alpha fields would be introduced,. forcing Otto into a relaxed, alert state while subliminal data was fed to him via the television.

Julia Long glanced across at the innocent-looking 22" Sony TV in its carved wooden cabinet. It was a state-of-the-art Trinitron model with a revolutionary tube providing far better resolution than other models. Resolution was very important, because this particular television would be displaying two entirely different pictures to Otto at the same time: the first clearly visible to his conscious brain, with the second perceived only by his subconscious.

As with initial hypnotic induction and post-hypnotic suggestion, Special Operations was way ahead of the academics. Most visual- subliminal techniques used by academic researchers and the media were based on simple 1/50th-second flashing messages woven into the standard television frames. Subliminal because they were too fast for the brain to to see consciously, but far too crude for Special Operations requirements.

QUOTE

Special Operations used fast, efficient full-frame colour input that was also completely undetectable. In room 350 Julia Long had a series of VHS videotapes that would be used to interrupt the normal video films fed to Otto via the in-house hotel video system.

They looked the same simply because they had the same film content as those shown in the hotel TV guide. Unfortunately for Otto, each of Julia's tapes had been subjected to a special editing process where ultra low-light images had been overlaid on the magnetic tape. Too dim to be detected by the conscious brain or by sophisticated ultraviolet analysis, every one of the thousands of images would be readily absorbed by Otto's subconscious.

The Alpha fields from the ELF generators would force Otto to remain alert but completely relaxed. Experiments had proved full relaxation to be a critical requirement: a single stressful distraction lasting a millisecond could stop the subconscious 'seeing' any subliminal input at all.

As Julia Long finished her iced lime juice and walked out of room 352, she smirked to herself. Though dozens of earnest authors had warned of techniques such as these, the mainstream media had trashed every single one.

Fortunately for Special Operations, it was beyond the capability of Joe public to believe that he or she could be influenced in this way, much less be brought under total control within minutes. In fact, the ELF fields were quite capable of killing unwitting victims by remote control, as Special Operations had proved on numerous occasions in the past.

There were politicians and scientists out there who persistently refused to heed discreet intelligence warnings about their behaviour, which in turn led to them being found dead in hotel rooms after apparently indulging in bizarre sexual, rituals or drinking themselves to death.

Too much of the same thing tended to draw attention, so the routine was occasionally varied with a few being programmed to take spectacular flying leaps from tall suspension bridges, drive into buildings at high speed, or hook themselves up to the electrical mains circuit. Most were messy, and all were fatal.

With normal targets the procedure was easy enough. When the ELF fields entrained the human brain with a binaural beat, it was standard procedure to ensure the target's breathing was brought under control. If starting in high Beta, slower Delta fields were steadily introduced to decrease the rate of respiration prior to full electro-hypnotic induction.

In order to kill a target, the silent ELF generators were turned up to full power in binaural mode. Completely at the mercy of the Special Operations controller, the target's physiology would be manipulated until systolic and diastolic blood pressures became identical, at which point the heart ceased to function and the target died.

There was one drawback: powerful ELF fields always increased the level of serumtriglycerides in the target, which could prove embarrassing at postmortem, It was a simple matter to splash alcohol into the mouth of the target after death, then throw a bottle of booze on his bed or into his car. Basic stuff indeed, but it was more than enough to fool most pathologists...

Otto Jewell stood in the office reading the chemical log, his lips compressed into a thin tight line. It was unbelievable! Gerald Smith had mixed ten times too much SA-81, a chemical used to thin the drilling fluid and coat the particles of heavy minerals used to control the underground pressures. Otto now knew the nature of the beast, and it was frightening.

> The only way to cure the problem would be to add vast extra quantities of inert mineral particles until the massive chemical overdose was neutralised.

Rapidly running some tests, Otto found he would need to add 2,500 x 100 lb sacks of the powdered mineral before the fluid would recover. It had never been done before and Otto wasn't even sure the pumps would hold out under the colossal load. It would stretch them to the limits and beyond. But what could possibly be worse than waiting for the inevitable blowout?

It was crunch time, no doubt about that. Otto had a hurried conference with Osimin and the drillers, who rapidly agreed to give it a try. There was nothing else to do. Volunteer labourers were positioned at the hoppers to mix the sacks of minerals, while Otto and Osimin walked up the steps to the control panel on the rig drilling floor.

Someone had to operate the pump controls, a job far too dangerous to delegate to the juniors. If the well blew out there would be scant chance of survival for those on the elevated rig floor, only feet from the mouth of the well.

With an apologetic grin in Osimin's direction, Otto inched the pump controls forward almost to the stops. Clouds of black smoke poured out of the diesel exhaust stacks as the generators complied with the demand for an almost impossible increase in power.

By the time 1,000 sacks had been mixed, the turbocharged diesels were screaming at full standard power and the pumps were under enormous strain. Poker-faced, Otto and Osimin stood on the rig floor and gripped the hand rails as the entire derrick shuddered with convulsions.

Tentatively, Otto placed one hand gently on the pump controls again, looking longingly at the last half inch of emergency power available, but unwilling to commit the Russian rig's diesels to almost certain destruction. Osimin brushed Otto's hand out of the way and forced both controls the extra distance.

Another tense three hours passed more slowly than the mind could imagine, with the diesels well across the 'never exceed' red lines on their rev counters. The turbochargers were going wild and spinning in the exhaust manifolds at over 25,000 rpm, their banshee wail making conversation impossible.

The big pumps were labouring under a shattering load and there were still another 800 sacks to mix. The giant rig was vibrating so violently that Otto and Osimin's teeth started chattering uncontrollably.

Then suddenly, without warning, the pressure dropped and the fluid returning to surface could be seen thickening rapidly. It had worked - really worked! Osimin was grinning and shouting in Russian while Otto shouted in English. Neither could understand the other but the message was clear enough.

The rig was safe, the bloody rig was safe! Word swiftly spread to the crews outside the danger area, who came rushing back with grins all over their faces. Leaving the staff to clean up and get ready to drill, Osimin and Otto climbed wearily into their respect-geriatric limousines and headed towards Calcutta.

Otto strode purposefully up to the front desk at the Oberoi and asked for the key to room 326. Swiftly intervening, lobby manager Chaudri selected the key to room 352 instead, telling Otto that as a favoured long-term guest, hotel management had decided to move him to a much nicer room at no extra charge. "Come," Chaudri said winningly, "Let me show you."

QUOTE

Leading the way into room 352, Chaudri pointed to the new white towels in the bathroom, and the brand new fridge. Then Chaudri turned with a flourish and opened the twin doors of what looked like a cocktail cabinet, revealing the Sony Trinitron television set. Otto Jewell was suitably impressed.

After Chaudri left, Ono looked around him The room was exceptionally quiet with thick pile carpets and heavy window drapes muffling all sound. The air conditioning ran with an almost silent low-pitched hum, unlike the unit in room 326. There was a marked similarity between room 352 and a soundproof recording studio.

After supper in the hotel coffee shop, Otto returned to room 352, showered and then climbed wearily into bed. Within minutes he drifted off into what seemed to be a natural, dreamless sleep. It was no such thing. Immediately Otto lay down, Julia Long in room 350 switched on the highly-directional ELF generators, selected Delta band and flooded both hemispheres of Otto's brain with a powerful 2.5 cycle electromagnetic field.

Switching to binaural, Julia adjusted the power setting and slowly started to decrease the Delta field frequency. Otto's respiration followed the silent beat, and in less than 60 seconds his brain was entrained at the optimum somnambulistic hypnotic induction frequency of 1.2 cycles. Julia listened carefully to Otto's breathing, faithfully relayed to her by the 'pinhole' audio bug drilled into the separating wall between the two rooms.

"Okay, you two," Julia turned to her Marine technicians. "Use the pass key and start the programme. Be sure to cough before you approach the bed so I can turn the fields off. We don't want to knock you out as well, now do we?"

It was a rhetorical question. The Marines had learned long ago that Julia was not given to idle backchat, so they quickly made their way from room 350 to room 352, Hank switching on a small battery- powered generator in his pocket, connected by concealed wires to an insulated pad stuck to the palm of his right hand.

As they approached the foot of Otto's bed Hank coughed discreetly and one second later unclenched his right hand, placing it flat on the exposed skin of Otto's arm. Faster than a striking cobra, the -powerful zapper discharged a five-microsecond pulse which temporarily paralysed Otto's central nervous system, simultaneously destroying his spatial and time orientation.

Not wasting a second, Hank's colleague wrapped a tourniquet around Otto's arm, exposed a vein and swiftly injected sodium pentathol. The two Marines were fast. From point of entry the entire sequence was complete in twelve seconds. Both had done the same job many times before.

Minutes later, Julia slipped through the door carrying an aluminium briefcase from which she withdrew a special pair of headphones that the Marines placed over Otto's head. The briefcase contained a miniature version of the laboratory equipment, designed to generate powerful electromagnetic fields in the immediate vicinity of Otto's brain, without endangering the Special Operations team.

So it was that Julia Long started to build a 'decoy' hypnotic level into Otto Jewell. In short sessions over two weeks he was trained to revert to a hypnotic trance only if given two complex trigger-words. Most evenings as Otto watched television he was unwittingly bombarded with subliminal films designed to enhance American 'patriotism', desensitise him to violence and force him to respond immediately to orders presented at subliminal level.

His handling by the Marine technicians was savage: Otto was beaten under electro-hypnosis and the Marines warned him that if he failed to carry out their orders, his two young children would be sexually abused and killed. Slowly but surely, without his knowledge or consent, Otto was forcibly recruited as a lifelong member of American Special Operations.

Once past the basic stage of induction, Julia Long left Otto in the care of her two Marine technicians, but continued to fly in occasionally from Morocco and Dakar to check on progress. On one of her flying visits during March 1984, Julia received a courier message to meet Louis McCaul at the US Consulate on Ho Chi Minh Street in Calcutta. With little ceremony, Louis ushered her into the bug-proof 'hard-room' in the Consulate basement:

"We received a coded Cosmic International message by diplomatic courier. Take your time decoding it Julia, then I'll destroy the original and your translation."

Julia sat down at the table and decoded Ithe message swiftly using a one-time-only pad. All Cosmic International messages were considered so sensitive they were never transmitted by electronic means; not even on the most secure cypher machines. The coded message she held in her hand had arrived that morning, carried personally by a first secretary from the US Embassy in New Delhi. Julia finished decoding and looked at her neat but short translation. Gordon Nobel was economical with words:

> "Your client required Moroccan facility latest 0600 hrs 10 April 1984. Operational designator Mike Alpha Delta 3. Get American Express to fix his route. You return independently. Ends."

Julia gave the original, her translation and the used one time only decoding coupon to Louis McCaul, who promptly-sealed them inside a small container. pressed a switch. In an instant the papers were incinerated in a flash of sear ing heat. Evidently, Mike Alpha Delta 3 was going operational.

As she walked slowly back towards the Oberoi Grand Hotel, Julia wondered about the extreme level of security. In the past it had meant only one thing: a high profile close-in assassination of a political target. No matter what, the forthcoming mission had to be very dangerous for Mike-Alpha-Delta-3.

Standard assassinations were normally carried out by American 'patriots' or hired assassins for a fee ranging from $50,000 to $500,000 depending on the difficulty of the shot and the overall importance of the target, the latter factor also reflecting the added level of risk to the assassin from the political target's bodyguards.

But there came a point where no matter how patriotic or greedy the assassin, the risk of death or capture was so high that all refused the contract. Killing a politician from 500 yards with a rifle, then spending the $500,000 fee in the Caribbean was fair game for most patriotic mercenaries, but shooting a high-profile political target at less than 100 yards was attractive to no-one. There was little point having $500,000 in a Swiss bank if you were lying six feet underground, unable to spend it.

This was when Julia's Special Operations group was normally called in. A conditioned assassin was trained to believe he could not faill his mission; that he was invincible. Because of the exaggerated self-confidence built in by electro-hypnotic techniques, a conditioned assassin was the only choice for close-in work.

> As she sat smoking a cigarette in the opulent foyer of the Grand Hotel, Julia nodded her head thoughtfully. Otto had obviously been selected for a high-profile close-in assassination, but who was it that had to die, and where exactly?

Based on the Special Operations adage "in Cairo use an Egyptian, and in Tel Aviv an Israeli", everything pointed to English- man 'Mike-Alpha-Delta-3' being used in London or another British city. Then as a waiter showed her to a dinner table in the Oberoi Grand's Polynesian restaurant, she shrugged off the problem. In less than three weeks' time, Julia would learn the truth in Morocco.

Part 3 - Death in Saint James

http://web.archive.org/web/20040721084417/...mknemesis3.html

The sun crept above the black outline of the Atlas mountains in the east, gradually bathing the air base with soft diffused light. Dew sparkled on the neat line of Northrop F5 aircraft, most painted in desert camouflage and bearing the bright red and green roundels of the Moroccan Air Force.

> Only two aircraft were different. Painted grey with subdued American markings, both were advanced "Tiger" versions of the F5: the first a two seat F5F, and the second a single- seat F5E.

Permanently based at Alconbury in England, the Tigers were part of the crack American "Aggressor" squadron, normally used to train NATO Air Force pilots in combat techniques with dissimilar aircraft. Supersonic and highly rnanoeuvrable, the F5 Tiger had similar performance characteristics to the Russian MiG-21 Interceptor.

Because of its unusual role of 'surprising' NATO forces in mock attacks, only the Aggressor squadron had easy access to airspace over nearly all European countries, making it invaluable for covert special operations activities.

Julia Long watched from a distance as Otto Jewell finished his pre-flight checks on the two-seat Tiger. Satisfied, Otto climbed into the front cockpit and strapped himself in, completely ignoring the air force captain in the seat behind him.

With a faint whine that slowly turned to a roar, both Tigers started engines and edged their way out of the line of parked aircraft, turning on the taxiway towards the active runway. Julia lit a cigarette and watched as the two fighters waddled along, weighed down with drop-tanks under their bellies and wings. There was a long flight ahead and both Tigers were carrying maximum fuel.

Juddering slightly under braking, both aircraft lined up side by side on the runway threshold and went to one-hundred-per-cent cold thrust. As the leader dropped his white-gloved hand, both released their brakes in unison and selected afterburners. Julia heard the muffled thunder as the afterburners lit, sending the two fighters hurtling down the runway.

Julia Long stood motionless, watching the bright pink glow from the afterburners fade slowly as the Tigers climbed away from her to the north. Only then, at exactly 5.48 am Greenwich Mean Time on the morning of 16th April 1984, did she finally turn and walk slowly back into the officers' mess

The conditioning had gone well. In less than a week, Otto had been transformed from a 41-year-old oilman into a 27-year-old member of the RAF, and then converted into a patriotic 27-year-old member of US Special Operations - all life events beyond that age being ruthlessly suppressed by electromagnetically-induced, drug-reinforced, post-hypnotic suggestion.

> There was no question of Otto Jewell being a "zombie", however. He was a fully-conscious human being with a chronological age of 41 years, but with the memory and reaction times of a 27 year old. Julia Long considered the new Otto a marked improvement over the old.
> Where before conditioning Otto had been slightly hesitant, he was now supremely confident. As with all terrorists manufactured by special operations, Otto believed he was invincible and that nothing could go wrong with his mission.

Where in India Otto had been overweight, he was now trim enough to slide easily into a Northrop Tiger. The intense stress induced by sustained exposure to ELF electromagnetic fields and visual input, burned off weight faster than the most drastic diet ever devised by the medical fraternity. In all., Otto had shed nearly 30 pounds, virtually without moving a muscle. With his hair now dyed jet-black to match his perception of himself as a 27-year-old, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 was indeed a new man.

After finishing her breakfast, Julia left the officers' mess and walked slowly back to her room to pack her bags. Her orders were clear: once Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 was on his way, her task was to return to Calcutta and wait until the twenty-first of the month. If his mission was successful, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 .would arrive back -in India that day and Julia would start the process of deleting all traces of his operational memory.

Once more using ELF electromagnetic fields, she would selectively erase each and every aspect of his mission until all that was left would be a 41- year-old oilman called Otto, slightly disorientated and very tired, but completely unaware of his activities during the preceding two weeks. Otto would believe the entire period had been spent on oilfield duties in Calcutta.

If the mission went badly wrong and Otto were taken alive or killed by the British police or intelligence services, special operations would take swift action to cover up all traces of any involvement. Dead or alive, Otto's 'real' life history would be discreetly leaked on the American news wires.

Back in 1980, Otto had spent an entirely innocent month in Libya's Sarir oilfields sorting out problems for oil company AGECO, but that was not the story the world media would be provided with. Instead, the discreet leak on the American news wires would state that intelligence sources confirmed Otto had attended a Libyan "terrorist training camp" near the Chad border in 1980, and that he had flown to and from Libya on British Caledonian Airways out of Gatwick.

With the media pack baying at its doors, British Caledonian would confirm Otto's outward and inward flights and the story would be set in stone. For ever afterwards, Otto Jewell would be known to the public only as a hired mercenary on the payroll of none other than Colonel Muammar Al Qadhafi of Libya.

There was no chance of Otto breaking down under interrogation. If captured alive, he had been programmed to revert to his normal age of 41 years immediately. The severe shock of finding himself under police interrogation in London when he should have been in Calcutta, might be enough to induce a heart attack.

QUOTE

> Even if Otto survived the shock and was subjected to forensic hypnosis and drug-assisted interrogation using sodium pentathol, the worst that could happen would be the discovery of the 'decoy' hypnotic level carefully developed in Calcutta.
> The relatively shallow decoy hypnotic level revolved around drilling operations, and had absolutely nothing to do with missions in the West End of London. Special operations had covered every angle.

Julia finished packing and phoned for an airman to take her bags to the waiting Gulfstrearn II executive jet. It was time to be on her way, and she was looking forward to a long bath and a five-star meal at the Oberoi Grand Hotel. After the airman loaded her bags, Julia Long sat back comfortably in a VIP seat, then reached across to the cocktail cabinet and poured herself a stiff drink.

She sipped it slowly as the Gulfstream roared off the runway, turning to the north-east on the first stage of a dog-leg course that would take the aircraft to its first refuelling stop at Cairo, while allowing it to stay well clear of Algerian and then Libyan airspace over the Gulf of Sidra.

Leaning back in her seat, Julia opened her MKMAD folder and extracted Otto's slim file. MKMAD was a notorious 'special access' sub-project originally run under a different acronym in parallel with Artichoke, a mind-control project from the 'fifties long believed extinct by senators and congressmen alike. Julia smiled with amusemenL Politicians were told only what they needed to know.

Gordon Nobel had been adamant that Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 be conditioned with scrupulous attention to detail. There was a good chance of his surviving the London operation and being used again later. Special operations' accelerated-leaniing visual input was arranged in modules, each covering a single subject.

It was critical that Otto have at least a basic knowledge of each subject in case a 'flashback' occurred. That way he would tend to associate any sudden memory recovery with earlier real-life events. After hours of questioning under hypnosis, Nobel ordered the two 'maritime' modules excluded, because Otto had no prior knowledge at all of diving or seaborne operations.

Visual input in Morocco had started with Otto's brain activity under constant scrutiny as the accelerated learning process began. The procedure started quite slowly, but as the Alpha fields and direct visual-input projection forcibly punched new neural pathways through his brain, a strange thing happened: Otto's brain 'learned how to learn'.

> His Critical Flicker Fusion frequency, a measure of the brain's ability to discriminate between massed data inputs, increased dramatically while his reaction times halved.

Julia watched her big colour monitor and listened to her head- phones with interest as the first module, an operational conversion to the Northrop F5, was slowly fed to Otto. By the time the last module on rifles and ballistics was run on day four, Julia could no longer do so. The screen was a blur, and the noise in her headphones a continual high-pitched shriek.

Otto seemed unperturbed as he lay motionless on the white operating table, immobilized eyelids open and pupils dilated while his brain absorbed new data at the equivalent of ten sheets of close-typed A4 paper per second.

Indoctrination was more critical. As each day passed, Otto was reinforced in the belief that he was a patriotic member of US Special Operations: a proud lieutenant colonel in a covert force formed from the outset to rid the world of communists and terrorists by whatever means necessary.

Time and time again he was reminded that a small number of innocent people had to die, but that their deaths were necessary to protect true democracy for the world as a whole. Nobel worried continually about this single aspect of Otto's personality: as an Englishman from a family proud of its three hundred years' military service to Crown and country, Otto had an extremely high sense of honor.

He adhered to a strict code of conduct where women and children were regarded as non- combatants, and where the Geneva Convention demanded prisoners be treated with dignity. Such outmoded principles were counter- productive to special operations work, so Gordon Nobel ordered Julia to break Otto completely.

Slowly but surely, the obscene special operations doctrine took hold under the intense pressure of electromagnetic stimulation and visual input. Quite suddenly early on day three, Julia sensed a breakthrough: she had broken the jelly-mold of Otto's basic personality into a thousand different pieces, and set about rebuilding it to special operations specifications.

> Such was the awesome power of the techniques used, that by the morning of day four the job was complete.

Otto would now ignore his hereditary honor and training, and kill on command without a shred of remorse. Indeed, Otto would shoot an American president without question, but only if US Special Operations ordered him to do so. On that fateful day in April 1984, Julia Long permanently destroyed a part of Otto's soul.

Only rarely had there been direct physical training. On day two, Otto had flown in an F5F with the air force captain in the rear seat for safety purposes. There had been no hesitation and Otto flew the complete mission profile without incident, handing over control to the captain for the landing. On the afternoon of day four, Otto was taken to Tangier for a rest break; then on the morning of day five was sent south-east towards the Atlas mountains for shooting practice.

His honor totally erased by US Special Operations techniques, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 cocked his Browning automatic rifle and shot an unarmed Berber tribesman through the shoulder as ordered. Subsequent examination showed the shot to be within one half-inch of the specified target.

The Berber was left where he fell. Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 had hit him with a high-velocity fragmentation bullet traveling at over three thousand feet per second, the shrapnel slicing sideways and downwards through the Berber's rib cage and turning his vital organs into a bloody pulp. The rest of day five was taken up with the verbal Cosmic International mission briefing.

During the afternoon of day six, two Tigers flew out across the Dutch coast just south of Zandvoort, ducking down swiftly until their wings almost brushed the white crested waves, as they raced across the North Sea just below the speed of sound on their last leg from Morocco. The disembodied voice of the air force captain came through the intercom: "Start a ,rate one turn to the right and reduce speed to 350 knots, "

Without taking his eyes off the horizon, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 automatically moved the controls gently to the right and eased back on the throttles. More than a mile away, the second Tiger conformed without a word being spoken. Both fighters were maintaining strict radio silence.

"Steady on that heading!" Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 centralized the controls and flipped the air brakes out. As the brakes extended below each wing root, both Tigers lost speed and continued flying on the new heading of 310 degrees. Two specks appeared from the west and rapidly grew in size until they became visible as two Tigers, which promptly broke formation and flew alongside the first pair. The disembodied voice spoke again: "I have control, colonel."

"You have control, captain." Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 removed his hands from the controls and looked out of the cockpit with interest. The two Tigers were identical to their own. So identical that the other F5F two seater carried exactly the same serial numbers as Mike-Alpha-Delta-3's fighter.

As he watched, the F5F that had just flown out from Alconbury closed up with the single-seat F5E from Morocco, and the pair turned back towards Europe. Still maintaining strict radio silence, the two-seater from Morocco closed up with the Alconbury leader and both fighters slowly banked around and headed towards the English coastline.

QUOTE

It was a trick special operations had used many times before, in order to fly sensitive personnel or light equipment into many different countries. In all, there were 33 different countries flying one version or other of the 2,500 Northrop F5s, and they all looked the same at a distance.

Because Mike-Alpha-Delta-3's Tiger was now apparently one of a pair that left Alconbury less than an hour earlier on a low-level North Sea interception and was returning without visiting foreign soil, there would be no nosey customs or immigration officials to ask awkward questions.

Entry into the target country was the most dangerous part of any special operations mission using an operative who was not a native American. Good though intelligence was, it was incapable of ensuring that the operative was not wanted by any of his home government agencies for a possibly trifling crime or offence.

As an entire operation could be wrecked for the sake of a thousand dollars' worth of unpaid parking tickets, covert entry was considered essential. Departure was far less important. If he survived the mission, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 would fly out of Terminal 2 at London Airport Heathrow on 20th April.

Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 watched the coast of the Wash flash past as both fighters climbed and declared their presence to West Drayton Control Centre. After approach to Alconbury was granted, they curved round neatly at 2,500 feet over Peterborough, slowly descending towards Alconbury from the north-west.

Now in line astern, both lowered their flaps and wheels and turned towards the runway. The white flarepath strobes flashed a welcome, and ten seconds later there was a discreet squeak as the Tiger's main wheels contacted the runway. Late in the afternoon on 16th April, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 finally arrived in England.

From that point forward, only Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 and one other man in London would know the full mission details. Different personnel had been used to position the various pieces of equipment needed the following day: the usual intelligence system of using 'cut-outs' every inch of the way.

Changing into a sports jacket and trousers, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 picked up a waxed cotton Barbour coat and put it on. There was a chill in the air, and the coat would attract no attention in the country, or in London. The Barbour coat was very common, which suited his purpose very well. Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 had to stay invisible to intelligence service surveillance by fading into the background.

QUOTE

He was politely ushered into an unmarked blue Ford saloon by its owner, who then drove towards the base's main gate.

Alconbury had not been selected as the home of the Aggressor squadron by accident. The airfield lay alongside the main Al(M) trunk road which ran from London to Scotland and was continually crowded with heavy traffic, making covert entry into England a dream.

As the blue Ford joined the stream of vehicles heading south to London, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 was within 15 miles of a large, familiar house in a village just outside Peterborough. The house belonged to John Dwyer, the man who first gave Otto's name to his CIA contact in Salt Lake City. Though Otto had visited the house many times, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 failed to make the connection.

Otto had first met Dwyer in 1981 when he was 38 years old. Now, as the 27-year-old Mike-Alpha-Delta-3, he was not due to meet John Dwyer or see his house for another eleven years. Making the connection would have been finpossible.

Though the driver of the Ford saloon was an air force major, he had no idea what his passenger's mission was. All the major had been told was that the colonel had to be delivered to a street in Watford, where he would be collected by another driver for the rest of his journey. Neither man said much as the Ford drove steadily south, the major carefully staying below the legal speed limit.

At Watford, the colonel transferred to another car, the second of four used as cut-outs before he arrived at his final destination. After the fourth car dropped him, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 slowly walked the last half-mile to a small private club tucked away in a narrow West End street.

Knocking discreetly, he waited patiently until the door was opened by an elderly retainer who immediately led him upstairs and ushered him into a room. His Samsonite suitcase lay on the bed and a box stood on the table by the window. After confirming his new guest would like to dine at 8 pm, the elderly retainer left the room, closing the door quietly behind him.

Unknown to members of the public, the club was really a fully- serviced 'safe house'. With a small bar, a dining room and less than a dozen bedrooms, it had provided discreet but very expensive cover for a lot of highly-questionable visitors over the years.

After opening his suitcase and taking out a clean shirt and underwear for the morning, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 turned to the box and checked the contents before removing a bunch of keys and two other items. Unrolling a large garish plastic courier bag, he placed the box inside and sealed the bag before placing it back on the table.

The address was clearly visible: "Enserch Corporation, 8 St James Square" - in reality, the discreet address of a Howard Hughes subsidiary. Next, he unfolded a large plain black plastic wallet and placed the courier bag inside. Then Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 walked downstairs for dinner in the deserted dining room, before returning to his room to get a good night's rest. It had been a long trip from Morocco, and sleep came swiftly.

After waking at 7 am the next morning, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 had a long, hot bath and dressed carefully. Locking his suitcase, he turned towards the door carrying the large black plastic wallet. When the mission was complete, he would return to the discreet club to lay low for three days.

>
> The chaos following his mission would not fool the British police or intelligence services for more than a few hours, after which they would turn London upside down in a frantic attempt to find the operative responsible.
>
> With a little luck, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 would be in his room watching television until the fuss died down. Only then would he travel across London and catch the shuttle from Heathrow to Brussels on the, first leg of his complex flight schedule back to Calcutta.

Walking downstairs, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 entered the dining room and ate a large breakfast of bacon and eggs before settling down to read the London morning newspapers.

Later, he rose casually, donned the Barbour coat and picked up the large black plastic wallet. Leaving the club, he turned left and walked casually for three blocks. As expected, a black Honda CX-500 courier motorcycle stood waiting next to the kerb. Unlocking a side pannier with his keys, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 took the courier bag out of its plastic wallet and dropped both items into the pannier.

> Next, he opened the large pillion box and removed a full face crash helmet before mounting the Honda and switching on the two way courier radio.

Mike-Alpha-Delta-3's helmet headphones came alive as he drove down the street. Unlike hundreds of real couriers riding black Honda CX-500 motorcycles around London that day, he listened only to the operational frequencies of the Metropolitan Police Force.

The Honda attracted no attention as it weaved through the usual traffic jams in Piccadilly before turning into Jermyn Street, slowing to walking pace as it entered Duke of York.

Ahead of him, Mike-Alpha- Delta-3 could see crowd-control barriers with hooded demonstrators moving around behind them. Just before turning into a service alley-way, he read the slogan on one of the demonstrator's large placards: "DOWN WITH GADDAFFI'.

Special operations was on the ball, but someone should have checked the spelling. Posing as a bunch of dissident Libyan intellectuals, the hired demonstrators could reasonably be expected to know the correct name of Libya's leader Qadhafi, not Gaddafi.

Turning and dismounting, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 removed the courier bag and strode purposefully to the back door of No. 8 St James Square. Unlocking the door with his own key, he stepped inside and closed the door behind him. Walking through the dark sombre building, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 took the stairs to the upper floor, being careful not to touch the polished wooden banisters.

Entering a front room and listening to the chanting from the square below, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 removed the box from the courier bag, and quickly fitted sonic ear-protectors before donning a black balaclava and pulling on a pair of thin surgical rubber gloves.

His face masked against accidental detection, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 turned and moved slowly to the polished wooden table in the centre of the room, looking down with professional interest at the automatic assault rifle pre-positioned on the table for his use. Standing perfectly still, he watched the minute hand slowly advance around his black- faced precision chronometer.

Exactly at the prearranged time, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 picked up the specially-shortened Heckler & Koch assault rifle from the table. The Heckler & Koch was fitted with a Juno muzzle-brake on its stub barrel to muffle the direction of the shots, and a short range parallax- corrected telescopic sight. He'd been briefed that the flush ammo magazine forward of the HK's trigger-guard held only five high- velocity fragmentation rounds, but they were enough. Mike-Alpha- Delta-3 had been ordered to shoot for maximum media effect, and needed only three.

Carefully placing his left foot up on the low table and cocking the Heckler & Koch with his left hand, he wound his left arm firmly through the sling to steady the weapon, then pressed the fire selector down to semi-automatic with his right thumb. Next, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 rested the weapon alongside his left knee and oft up the slack on the sling to reduce recoil effect.

Because he was a long way back from the window to avoid detection there was only a limited field of fire, but he knew the killing-zone by heart. Looking through the scope and studying the area, Mike-Alpha- Delta-3 moved the weapon slightly until he could see the exact killing-zone, and a small part of the inner pavement and central gardens in Saint

James Square.

> Breathing slowly and steadily, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 waited for the two quick flashes of light that would tell him the selected target was just about to enter the killing-zone. It was not up to Mike-Alpha- Delta-3 to pick random targets: that job was reserved for his special operations controller.

A helmeted man in a blue uniform walked straight through the cross-hairs of his telescopic sight, but Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 ignored him. Then there were two brief flashes of brilliant white light in the upper left quadrant of the scope, and his finger automatically took up the first pressure on the Heckler & Koch's trigger. One second later, a slim, blond woman walked slowly into the cross-hairs of the telescopic sight.

Mike-Alpha-Delta-3's eyes showed no emotion, his strict code of conduct completely destroyed by covert conditioning: The target had to die to protect true democracy for the world as a whole. His trigger-finger a blur, Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 fired three aimed shots so fast, the muzzle blasts blended into a single cacophony of sound that echoed round the square.

The first bullet hit the woman in the stomach and she doubled over, her hat flying into the gutter, while the second and third bullets exploded on the inner pavement, hurling shrapnel into the small crowd of demonstrators.

Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 placed his weapon back on the table and watched briefly as a television cameraman rushed in to film the woman rolling on the ground in agony. She was already dying as Mike-Alpha-Delta-3 turned swiftly away from the table and removed his balaclava. Then, as he walked downstairs and closed the back door of 8 St James Square softly behind him, the carefully precalculated media hype started in earnest:

> "This is an urgent news flash. Minutes ago, shots rang out from the Libyan Peoples Bureau at No. 5 St James Square..."
> And so it was that Julia Long achieved her objective of creating intense public anger by staging an obscene mission that shocked the British public. As the news flashed round the country, millions were outraged by the slaughter in St James Square, their perception of the Libyans forcibly distorted for all time?

Less than 24 months later, US F-111 bombers took off from British bases and headed south to destroy the "terrorists" responsible, and their wives and children. With the British media pack in full cry, the American bombers launched a premeditated attack on the civilian populations of Tripoli and Benghazi in Libya, and special operations scored a small personal bonus - a token sacrifice for true democracy for the world as a whole.

Colonel Al Qadhafi's fifteen month old daughter Hannah was murdered by a monstrous 2,000 pound laser bomb, guided unerringly to its tiny target by an American F- 111 bomber.

Listening to the news on the radio, Julia Long nodded approvingly as she lit a cigarette, before turning triumphantly to her two Marine Special Operations technicians. "That should teach the terrorist sonofabitch a lesson, huh?"

During early 1996, part of the pathology report on WPC Yvonne Fletcher was made public for the first time. The report revealed she was hit in the shoulder by a single high velocity fragmentation bullet, the shrapnel slicing sideways and downwards through Policewoman Fletcher's rib cage and turning her vital organs into a bloody pulp.

The Strategic Brains Behind 9/11: Part One, by Joe Vialls, 25 January 2003

Who controls the past controls the future, who controls the present controls the past!

> QUOTE
> The events of 11 September 2001 have become a national obsession in America, but no one has ever worked out who the real perpetrators were.

No serious analyst believes for a split second that Osama Bin Laden organized or directed this precision operation from a cave in the mountains of darkest Afghanistan, but beyond that obvious reality, most American analysts are incapable of objective analysis for a number of different reasons. If Americans really want to know who attacked New York two years ago, different analytical techniques must be applied.

Twenty years ago a leading professor of forensic psychology smiled and told me, "You are absolutely incapable of objective thought," and then sat back casually cracking his knuckles waiting for a reaction. The reaction was not long in coming. I was outraged! Probably turning bright pink with carefully suppressed fury, I pointed out forcefully that objectivity lies at the very core of military analysis, and he was therefore talking absolute rubbish.

> The Professor remained unperturbed, quietly explaining that every analysis performed by every human on earth is performed within his or her own brain.

Each and every step of any analysis is made internally by the individual concerned, rendering the analysis entirely subjective, i.e. the resulting analysis, even if correct, is merely an informed personal opinion. At the very best, he said, we can be as objective as possible within the severe constraints of personal subjectivity. And herein, I suspect, lies the main problem for Americans where 9/11 is concerned.

America is a very young country in terms of political and diplomatic evolution, and American tourists overseas frequently display a degree of naivete about international affairs that at times is quite touching. In short, Americans want to be liked by everyone, and fail to see the warning signs when free bottles of Coca-Cola and free Big Macs are not enough to pacify the natives, in what is increasingly seen as the new American Empire. With only about 300 years of history behind them, most Americans are babes in the wood.

> This We're all buddies international American mind set, seems to have blinded most Americans who have attempted to rationalize those huge Boeing attack aircraft flying with dazzling precision across the New York skyline two years ago.

As previously stated, very few are buying the official rubbish about incompetent ab-initio Muslim Cessna pilots suddenly developing the extreme level of skill required to hurl 400,000# airliners around the sky like toys, but the blame has not yet at any stage [so far as I know] been apportioned to any nation external to America herself, perhaps with the sole exception of Israel.

Unwilling or psychologically unable to consider the possibility that America was attacked by one or more of her perceived buddy nations overseas [perhaps those with Coca-Cola and Big Macs], many Americans have turned in one of two decidedly different directions. The first group fervently maintain that, The Jews did it to gain control of America, while the second group points instead at the U.S. Military establishment, which also wants to gain control of America. Both groups are heavily armed with anecdotal hearsay, but neither has even the smallest piece of hard scientific evidence to back its extraordinary

Ask yourself, would the Jews engineer a situation in which the very heart of their global financial empire was imploded into its own basement, setting them back for years in their operational plans to invade and annex Middle East oil reserves? No, they would not. The problem here lies in the wish fulfillment of those who have themselves been harmed in some way by Jews [mainly Jewish bankers I imagine], and who desperately wish or need to see the Jews expelled from America for good. There is an old adage that says, If wishes were horses, beggars would ride, but wishes alone cannot force responsibility for 9/11 on the Jews, when all the hard evidence points in other directions.

Pinning the blame for 9/11 on the U.S. Military is mostly the preserve of leftists and peaceniks, who traditionally view the military [of which I was once a member] as oppressive right-wing thugs, whose sole covert objective is to imprison all free thinking liberals in giant concentration camps surrounded by razor wire, dotted with machine gun towers. Believe me, nothing could be further from the truth. There is not a military man I have ever met who would willingly act as jailer for a million [or even ten] hippies with filthy matted hair and flowery dresses.

> Such realities are unlikely to impress the more obsessive personalities in America, but it is now time to move on to a proper investigation of 9/11, in which we must examine not just the attack itself, but more importantly the reactions of American politicians and officials immediately after the aircraft impacted the World Trade Center towers.

This is of critical importance. If there was direct collusion between [say] the U.S. political establishment and the Jews, or between the U.S. political establishment and the U.S. Military in planning the event, then the political reaction at media level immediately after the attack, would be self-assured and highly polished.

In other words, just like any other political or military scenario, the public political reaction would have been carefully rehearsed in advance. Under these exact circumstances, the American political establishment would have smoothly continued to drive the global agenda during and after the attack. But that was not the case, was it? American politicians, military leaders and Jewish bankers were all running around with the self-assurance of gut-shot buffalo. At midnight on 9/10 the American Establishment was driving the global agenda, but by midnight on 9/11 the American Establishment was itself being driven by a new global agenda not of its own making. It was a new agenda that America did not understand then, and still does not understand now.

It was at this precise juncture that things started to go seriously wrong for Americans, and the real trails of evidence were unwittingly obscured. America's political and other leaders, facing for the first time in their lives a situation beyond their comprehension or control, instinctively started to lie in order to cover up, though none were really sure exactly what it was they were supposed to be lying about. Intrinsically, this lying should not come as a surprise to anyone of course.

It has been claimed that most politicians learn to lie so successfully at Mommy's breast, that by the age of two months, the best of them can convince Mommy they are suckling from the right nipple, when in fact they are suckling from the left.

> Then, less than three hours after impact, a handful of voices [can you remember exactly which voices?] started to murmur, Osama! Osama! Osama Bin Laden!, which irreversibly led American politicians and officials gently, lie by lie, into a deadly one-way trap.

Although only days before, the American Administration, in particular Dick Cheney, had promised the Jewish lobbies that it would bomb Baghdad to weaken the Republican Guard in the run up to Israel's planned invasion of Southern Iraq during October 2001, it was prevented from doing so. Instead, the Administration was obliged to bomb Afghanistan instead of Iraq, which rather neatly returned the CIA's lost trillion dollar heroin trade to its rightful owners, but achieved little else.

By this stage American political lying had become obsessive-compulsive, with dozens of new lies designed to cover cracks in the official story, slowly merging together to form a network of crazy paving that made absolutely no sense at all. Politicians and media alike were shrill in their lies about impossible telephone calls from the hijacked aircraft, leading to justifiable suspicion on the part of the public that the American government must have been directly involved in the atrocity. Not so, but in a desperate attempt to pretend they were still in control of at least a small part of the global agenda, certain American politicians were determined to cement the hijacker myth in the minds of ordinary people.

Towards early November the entire facade was splintering under the strain, with not a single hijacker's body in sight, and even more embarrassingly, several alleged hijackers turning up alive in Saudi Arabia and elsewhere. In order to sustain its hijacker lie, now critical because it had been used as an excuse to murder thousands of Afghans, the American Administration needed a real hijacker that everyone could see, touch, and hopefully hate.

For this purpose it introduced the alleged 20th hijacker who missed his airplane, Zacarias Moussaoui. But no one was even remotely interested in him. Zacarias was surly, not addicted to public confessions, and, put bluntly, simply would not cooperate in the PR exercise. A decision was made, Tel Aviv was asked to assist [yes, The Jews were really involved in this bit!] and a real potential hijacker was arranged, though the exercise was set up in such a way that the aircraft could not be destroyed. This hijacker was to be captured alive, and forced to serve life in a U.S. Prison, as a perpetual subliminal reminder to all Americans that hijackerson American airliners really do exist, the target selected was an Englishman by the name of Richard Reid.

Richard Reid is important to Part One of this report, because in a few days time he is to be dragged in front of a judge, who will arrange for corrupt film evidence of an exploding airliner not even related to his case, to be added to his criminal records. The date of Reid's sentencing hearing is 30 January, which gives any and all Americans reading this report ample time to demonstrate outside the court, though I doubt many will. There is always the omnipotent Office of Homeland Security to worry about nowadays.

In order to do Reid any justice at all, we must now delve back through history to examine the birth of Virtual Terrorism For The Masses, which might seem to get a bit complicated in places, though it is not really so. What you should bear in mind from the outset is that the civilian technical agencies mentioned in this report [DARPA and DERA], have formal and informal links with very similar civilian agencies in at least seven other sovereign nations to my certain knowledge, and quite possibly more. Their funding is normally derived from government [frequently out of the secret vote], and from independent corporations. They are secret and secretive at one and the same time, and their combined agenda is currently unknown.

Boeing 747-121 Clipper Maid Of The Seas at Frankfurt Germany, August 1988.

During December 1988, Pan American Flight 103 exploded exactly on cue overhead a radio beacon in the English Lake District, thereby ushering in a new age of electronic trickery. The giant Boeing 747's colossal forward momentum ensured that hundreds of bodies and bodies parts were liberally scattered across large swathes of Scotland.

Shock! Horror! The media obediently relayed the gory scenes of Lockerbie's bloody carnage electronically into our living rooms, and we all failed to recognize the precision process as a new and highly potent form of massed social engineering.

No one was surprised when the highly secretive British Defence Evaluation and Research Agency [DERA] was tasked with investigating Lockerbie, because barely anyone had ever heard of the obscure agency. Accordingly, no one noticed when its expert scientific investigators failed to detect the dozens of different pieces of convincing hard evidence, right under their very noses at the crime scene.

The Agency's credentials were not in doubt. DERA was and still is Europe's leading authority on remote controlled aircraft, and on the remote radio demolition of aircraft for simulation purposes. Obviously the reality of the remote detonation of Pan Am 103, triggered automatically as the aircraft passed overhead the radio beacon at Deans Cross, would not have escaped its expert attention. Nor would the obvious reality of a large explosive cutting charge placed hard up against the ribs and stringers inside the outer skin of the forward port fuselage, scientifically designed from the outset to ensure rapid aircraft disintegration.

The DERA experts would in fact have noticed and recorded these various points, were it not for the fact that all such truth had been placed completely out of bounds by DERA's civilian masters, who from the outset had their own very special agenda to follow. Personnel at the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency thus had two choices. They could keep their mouths shut and quietly follow the special agenda, or run the very real risk of suffering the same sorts of unfortunate fatal accidents that befell so many Marconi scientists during the eighties.

QUOTE

Prudence won the day, and DERA officials finally concluded publicly that Pam Am 103 was blown out of the sky by a mere toy of a bomb. Allegedly consisting of a mere 350 grams of Semtex explosive packed inside a plastic radio-cassette, the bomb was allegedly then packed in turn inside soft baby clothes in a Samsonite suitcase by two Libyan Terrorists.

These so-called terrorist experts, the only men in living history to allegedly wrap high explosive in soft shock absorbent wool, then allegedly loaded the mythical shock absorbent bomb into the center of the Boeing 747's forward baggage hold. Certain members of DERA were extremely unhappy about this impossible analysis, but at least the Libyans would never be in a position to challenge their forged evidence, or so it seemed at the time.

However, by the mid-nineties the Libyans were openly talking about a trial in a neutral country, and the civilians who controlled DERA know that their convenient forged evidence would not stand up by itself in an open court. Obviously a convincing theatrical charade had to be arranged for the courtroom to help things along, and more importantly to keep the judge and jury's attention away from reality.

So the DERA officials was ordered to film the dramatic explosion of a wide-body passenger airplane. There was cold logic in this approach, because a spectacular filmed explosion frequently can [and at the Lockerbie Trial finally did] overwhelm hundreds of pages of boring and blatantly inaccurate written evidence.

Eastern Air Lines More: Lockheed L-1011-385-1 TriStar 1 N329EA (cn 193A-1085) After Eastern this 1011 was reg'd D-AERC and N329SN.

During mid-1995, an American defense contractor masquerading as a vendor of washing machines, in tandem with a discreet commercial bank, quietly acquired Lockheed L-1011 Tristar D-AERC, placed it on the American register as N329SN, but never flew it under that registration. Instead, the Tristar was sent directly to a top-secret DERA testing ground in southeast England, where it was carefully rigged with explosives, and then destroyed by remote control in front of high-speed color cameras.

Because the secret sting operation was designed specifically to convince the judges at any future Lockerbie trial, the 10 KILOGRAM [22 pounds] C4 explosive charge was carefully positioned in the forward lower baggage hold of the Tristar, supposedly mimicking the explosion on Pan Am 103. It did rather more than this, and actually blew the nose of the aircraft right off! The fact that this awesome DERA explosive charge was 28.5 times the weight and power of the diminutive Toshiba bomb, alleged to have been planted on board Pan Am 103 in swaddling clothes by the Libyan Terrorists, was never disclosed to any judge, jury, or to the public.

The spectacular color film footage resulting from this appalling social engineering scam, was then discreetly passed across the Atlantic to the civilian American Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency [DARPA], whose task it was to indirectly feed the material back across the Atlantic through selected media personnel, to the Scottish Lockerbie court as fresh evidence in the case. It was considered that any direct British approach to the court would look too obvious, and therefore be deemed suspicious.

> In the end, despite several determined attempts, the deliberately misleading Tristar film footage was not allowed by the Scottish Lockerbie Court, and DERA was obliged to also blow up Boeing 747 registration F-BPVE. But this time around at Bruntingsthorpe there would be independent witnesses to the flawed event, which would prove very embarrassing. More about the Boeing blast later on in this series.

As if to prove that both agencies were locking themselves into the deception business for the long haul, DARPA and DERA each filed away copies of the spectacular Tristar explosion that had been recorded on color film during 1995, against the time when it would be needed to cover a future covert operation. That time is now, and the dramatic footage of Tristar D-AERC being blown to pieces in 1995, will now be shown as new footage at the forthcoming sentencing hearing of Shoe Bomber Richard Reid, scheduled to take place in a few days time, on 30 January 2003.

As always the prosecution is lying to the American public, claiming this aircraft was Destroyed during 2002 by US Marines, to demonstrate the level of damage to American Airlines Flight 63 if he [Reid] had succeeded in lighting his explosive shoes. No, it was not. As you can see on the photos, the black target marker grid on the forward lower fuselage of D-AERC, matches precisely the alleged position of the Libyan Terrorist bomb on Pan Am 103, proving beyond doubt this is the 1995 scam footage prepared in England.

So why is it so important to show the film at Richard Reid's sentencing hearing? After all, we know Richard Reid was sitting halfway back along the passenger cabin of American Airlines Flight 63, making this artificially-boosted Tristar explosion completely irrelevant, so why run it in court at all? The answer is illusion, and as we now know, it is illusion alone that has played the principal role in all events involving, surrounding, and following the primary attack on 11 September 2001.

The Hypnotic Foot Grenade.. The Strange Case of the Loaded Shoe

In Part Two we will examine exactly how Richard Reid was lured into becoming the ultimate hijacker patsy to cover the immense lie that was and remains nine-eleven, and dissect the reasons why, by mid 2001, a coalition of countries reluctantly but firmly decided they could no longer allow America, itself firmly in the death grip of the Zionist lobby, to dominate the rest of the world any longer.

> Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, the ancient Greek philosopher Socrates taught his students that the pursuit of truth can only begin once they start to question and analyze every belief that they ever held dear. If a certain belief passes the tests of evidence, deduction, and logic, it should be kept. If it doesn't, the belief should not only be discarded, but the thinker must also then question why he was led to believe the erroneous information in the first place.

Not surprisingly, this type of teaching didn't sit well with the ruling elite of Greece. Many political leaders throughout history have always sought to mislead the thinking of the masses. Socrates was tried for "subversion" and for "corrupting the youth". He was then forced to take his own life by drinking poison.

It's never easy being an independent thinker! Today, our ruling government/media complex doesn't kill people for pursuing the truth about the world (at least not yet!) They simply label them as "extremists" or "paranoid", destroying careers and reputations in the process. For many, that's a fate even worse than drinking poison hemlock!

Every news story you are about to review in this comprehensive research paper is true and easily verifiable. This investigation represents 10 months of careful study, research, analysis, source verification and logical deduction. Every event and quote presented here is 100% accurate. There are over 190 detailed footnotes which I encourage, no, urge, readers to explore and verify for themselves.

The Internet version of this paper will allow users to obtain instant verification for each and every footnote by clicking on the footnotes/links. Others can obtain easy verification by entering the key search words, provided at the end of the paper, into the Yahoo or Google.com search engines.

These footnote searches will take you directly to the news sites of many well known established media organizations throughout the world as well as opening up doors to a world of knowledge and information that has been concealed from you. With just a little common sense and a few clicks of a mouse, Google and Yahoo now enable anyone with an ounce of curiosity to become a Sherlock Holmes.

This is no opinion piece. Rather it is a collection of buried, but undeniable facts, events, and quotes which, when assembled in one place, will state their own conclusions. In putting together this research in a logical and sequential format, great care was taken to confirm and double confirm every piece of information. Any and all questionable data which could not be independently verified to this author’s satisfaction was discarded.

Taken individually, each story, quote and event may not amount to a full case. But when taken collectively, this mountain of facts should hammer home the truth to even the most skeptical reader. There are of course those who have fallen under the hypnotic spell of the TV talking-heads and "experts" whom they worship as authority figures.

Unaccustomed to thinking for themselves, no amount of truth can sway them from their preconceived prejudices. They will even deny that which they see with their own eyes. They are victims of a psychological affliction known as "the lemming effect". Lemmings are small rodents who have been known to follow each other as they charge to their deaths into raging rivers or off of cliffs.

Lemminghood is an innate psychological phenomenon, present in most mammals and observable in common people as well the most sophisticated and educated elites. Lemminghood is not an intellectual phenomenon - it is psychological. As such, no socio-economic class is immune to its strangulating effect. A grant- seeking university scientist can be a lemming just as much as a fashion obsessed teen-age girl.

> One blindly follows the latest trendy theory while the other blindly follows the latest trendy clothing style. What's the difference? Neither can resist the force of nature.

The power to fit in with one's social peers can be irresistible. To a human lemming, the logic behind an opinion doesn't count as much as the power and popularity behind an opinion. Man, like lemming, behaves collectively. And it could be no other way. Naturally, the individual must be equipped with this trait. Otherwise, the smallest steps toward civilization could never have been made.

Lemminghood is a survival trait, an inborn instinct in the majority of people. However, as with all natural phenomena, this tendency can be manipulated and used for harmful purposes.

It is this lemming effect which enables entire segments of a society to lose their sense of judgment all at the same time. This research paper will likely be wasted on many lemmings. For lemmings, denial is a basic psychological defense mechanism used to not only shield themselves from unpleasant realities, but also to reassure themselves that they will still fit within the acceptable range of opinion held by their peer group.

Lemmings are absolutely terrified at the thought of being labeled as an "extremist" or a "conspiracy theorist". At all costs, their beliefs must always be on the "right" side of the issue and conform within the boundaries of their lemming peers. Lemmings simply cannot bear the burden of responsibility, or the discomfort, which comes with thinking independently.

They'll resist any efforts to change their misguided beliefs with all their mental energy. We can try to open their closed minds and free them from their self-imposed blindness, but it’s not easy fighting the force of human nature. The chains of ideological conformity have too strong of a grip, and breaking them is a difficult task.

> QUOTE

> With the limited resources at our disposal, it is next to impossible to compete with the media lemming-masters. Nevertheless, some of us must make the meager attempt, and thus lay the foundation upon which the truth might one day rise again.

There are those among us who do have the courage and intellectual capacity to break free of the shackles of lemminghood and accept the truth when it is presented in a clear and logical sequence. To those open minded and independent thinkers I wish to state clearly and unequivocally.

I intend to set forth in this paper an overwhelming body of evidence which should forever destroy the notion that a Saudi Arabian caveman and his band of half-trained, nerdy Arab flight school attendees, orchestrated the most sophisticated terror operation in world history.

The idea is utterly laughable. And yet, due to the blithering barrage of bullshit dished out by the government/media complex, "patriotic" Americans have accepted this ridiculous fairy tale with a religious conviction. As a public service to my fellow Americans, I have published the results of my research in the hopes of liberating as many people as I can from the oppressive yoke of media brainwashing and state sponsored lies.

Do you have what it takes to break free? If so, read on!

The Dancing Israelis

> Like most Americans, I was gripped by senses of profound shock, horror, revulsion, sadness, and rage as I watched the horror of September 11, 2001 unfolding live on my television screen.

Watching the mass murder of thousands of innocent people live on television was the most upsetting experience of my life. How could any person of sound moral character not be enraged at witnessing this horrific act of barbarism?

To read about some faraway, long-ago genocide in a newspaper or a book is distressing enough. But to actually witness the mass murders of what was, at first, believed to have been tens of thousands of innocent people is truly heart stopping and traumatic. I barely slept for two nights afterwards and suffered nightmares. Polling data would later reveal that 65% of Americans actually shed tears on 9-11.1

But not all of the eye-witnesses to the 9-11 slaughter were so saddened. On September 11, five Israeli army veterans were arrested by the FBI after several witnesses saw them "dancing", "high-fiving", and "celebrating" as they took pictures of the World Trade Center disaster from across the river in New Jersey.

Steven Gordon was the lawyer who volunteered to represent the five Israelis, he was asked by a Hebrew newspaper why the five men were being detained by the FBI. Here's what Gordon told Yediot America:

> "On the day of the disaster, three of the five boys went up on the roof of the building where the company office is located," said Gordon. "I'm not sure if they saw the twin towers collapse, but, in any event, they photographed the ruins right afterwards. One of the neighbors who saw them called the police and claimed they were posing, dancing and laughing, against the background of the burning towers….

"Anyhow, the three left the roof, took an Urban truck, and drove to a parking lot, located about a five-minute drive from the offices. They parked, stood on the roof of the truck to get a better view of the destroyed towers and took photographs.

A woman who was in the building above the lot testified that she saw them smiling and exchanging high-fives. She and another neighbor called the police and reported on Middle-Eastern looking people dancing on the truck. They copied and reported the license plates. 2

When the photos were developed, they revealed that the dancing Israelis were smiling in the foreground of the New York massacre. 3 According to ABC's 20/20 attempted whitewash of the incident, in addition to their outrageous and highly suspicious behavior, the five also had in their possession the following items; box-cutters, European passports, and $4700 cash hidden in a sock. 4

Why were these Israeli agents so happy about the horrible massacre that was unfolding right before their very eyes? What evil spirit could possess people who are supposed to be America's "allies", and who receive billions of dollars in financial and military aid from US taxpayers each year , to publicly rejoice as innocent people including many American Jews, were burning to death and jumping out of 110 story buildings?

> Could it be that these happy Israeli army veterans were in some way linked to this monstrous attack? That's what officials close to the investigation initially told The Bergen Record newspaper of New Jersey. 5

As incredible, as ridiculous, and as "paranoid" as that belief may appear to you at this point, the fact is that certain elements within the Israeli government, and Zionist movement in general, have a long history of attacking the USA and framing Arabs in order to gain support from the US.

Before we begin to piece together what really transpired on 9-11, it is absolutely critical that we first review some historical precedents regarding Israel's and International Zionism's treacherous history of manipulating America, and other nations for their own selfish purposes.

Without a basic understanding of this history, it would be impossible to understand the truth as it is today. So put aside your preconceived notions, your psychological defense mechanisms, and your prejudices, and step into my time machine for a journey down the memory hole.

Zionism And World War I

In the latter part of the 1800's, there arose in Europe a political movement known as "Zionism". Zionism in particular referred to the effort among certain jews to establish a jewish nation in the land of Palestine. Today, the term Zionism is more commonly applied to those jews who want to expand the borders of what was already established, at the expense of the Palestinians who once owned the land.

In a more general sense, the term "Zionist" is also used to describe a certain element within the jewish community (not all of them!), who believe in Jewish Supremacy, thus putting their own interests ahead of those of the nation in which they reside. It is a mistake to assume that all jews are supporters of the "Zionist Mafia" or Jewish Supremacy. In fact, some of the strongest condemnations of Zionism and Jewish Supremacy comes from Jews themselves!

> There exists an enormous collection of hard hitting anti Zionist writings compiled by such notable jewish authors, historians, and journalists as John Sack, 6 Alfred Lilienthal, 7 Noam Chomsky, 8 Israel Shahak, 9, Benjamin Freedman, 10 and Victor Ostrovsky 11 just to name a few.

There is even a Jewish religious group called "Neturei Karta, Jews United Against Zionism." 12 For their brave efforts, these men have had to tolerate vicious abuse from Zionist smear groups like the Anti Defamation League (ADL) - an organization which actually specializes in defamation!. So let us put to rest now and forever the slanderous lie, and strategic Zionist propaganda ploy, that labels anyone who dares to call attention to the dangers of the Zionist Mafia is an "anti-semite", a "hatemonger", or a "skin-head".

Now the Zionists of the late 1800’s faced one small problem with their bold takeover scheme of Arab Palestine. Palestine was under the sovereignty of the Ottoman Turkish Empire and the Arabs certainly weren't about to just give away prime real estate in Palestine to the Zionists of Europe. There were very few jews even living in Palestine and the jews had not controlled Palestine since the days of the Roman Empire.

This destroys the commonly believed myth that the Arabs and the jews "have been fighting over that land for centuries". The handful of Arab jews who lived in Palestine got along well with their Muslim hosts and never expressed any desire whatsoever to overthrow the Ottoman rulers and set up a nation called Israel. The movement to strip Palestine away from the Ottoman Empire came strictly from European Zionists who had become very influential within several European nations.

> As fate, or perhaps design would have it, a great opportunity would soon present itself to the Zionist Mafia. There came in 1914 "The Great War" pitting the three powers of Germany, Austria-Hungary, and the Ottoman Turkish Empire against the three powers of England, France, and Russia.

In the interests of staying on the subject of 9-11 and today's "War on Terrorism", we won't get into all of the underlying causes or the historical flow of World War I. What we need to understand is that the Zionists played an important role in dragging the USA into that bloody European war - a war in which the US had no vital interests at stake whatsoever.

Here was the situation. By 1916, the Germans, Austrians, and Ottoman Turks had seemingly won the war. Russia was in turmoil and about to be swallowed up by communist revolution. France had suffered horrible losses, and Britain was under a German U-boat blockade. Germany made an offer to Britain to end the war under conditions favorable to Britain. But the British, and the international Zionists, had one more card to play!

The British government and the Zionist leaders struck a dirty deal. The Zionists were led by Chaim Weizmann, the man who one day become the first President of the State of Israel. The idea was for the Zionists to use their influence to drag the mighty USA into the war on Britain's side, so that Germany and it's Ottoman allies could be crushed. In exchange for helping to bring the USA into the war,

The British would reward the Zionists by taking over Palestine from the conquered Ottomans after the war was over. The British had originally wanted to give the Zionists a jewish homeland in an African territory. But the Zionists were fixated on claiming Palestine as their land. Once under British control, the jews of Europe would be allowed to immigrate to Palestine in great numbers.

Zionists powerbrokers such as Bernard Baruch, Louis Brandeis, Paul Warburg, Jacob Schiff, and many others immediately went to work to put the screws to President Woodrow Wilson. The Zionist influenced press, quickly transformed the German Kaiser and his people into bloodthirsty "Huns", determined to destroy civilization. In 1916, the US, with the help of the Lusitania "incident", entered the war on Britain's side under the ridiculous pretext of "making the world safe for democracy".

Meanwhile in Germany - where Zionists also wielded tremendous influence in the press and industry- enthusiasm for the war was suddenly watered down by Zionist run newspapers. Wartime labor-strikes in German weapons factories were organized by Zionist and Marxist union leaders. With the German branch of the International Zionist Mafia undermining Germany from within, and the English and American branches of the Zionist mafia pushing America to join the war,

> QUOTE

> It wasn't long before the German, Austrian, and Ottoman Empires were defeated and their maps rewritten by the victorious powers at the infamous Treaty of Versailles in 1918. In addition to the numerous Zionist bankers who were influencing Versailles, the Zionists also had their own delegation which was headed by Chaim Weizmann.

Great Britain issued the Balfour Declaration in November 1917, the same month that Germany surrendered. But it had actually been prepared 20 months earlier in March 1916 with Weizmann's influence. 13 The Declaration allowed mass jewish immigration to conquered Palestine while promising to preserve Arab rights. The Arabs living in Palestine weren't buying these promises.

They protested, but there was nothing that they could do to stop the coming wave of Jewish immigration. This was the first step in creating what was to later become the state of Israel 20 years later. Years after the war, an American Zionist millionaire named Benjamin Freedman broke ranks with his fellow Zionists and turned against them.

> Freedman was the principal owner of the Woodbury Soap Company and was one of the many Zionists present at the Treaty of Versailles. Freedman was very well connected and had enjoyed access to several US presidents.

Freedman grew disgusted with the criminal behavior of the Zionist mafia and dedicated much of his life and fortune to exposing the truth about both World Wars and the Zionist grip on America. According to Freedman, Wilson had been blackmailed by Zionists with the threat of a public disclosure of an old extramarital affair Wilson had when he was president of Princeton University. 14

Freedman's voluminous and buried writings and books on this subject are essential reading. One leader of the jewish Anti Defamation League - Arnold Forster- once described Freedman as a "self-hating jew." 15

We may debate as to exactly what extent this Zionist-British dirty deal was responsible for dragging the sons of America off to die in a European bloodbath. Some, such as Freedman, believe it was the only reason that the US entered the war. Others, such as this writer, believe it was a primary contributing factor. But let us at this point agree on this one irrefutable point: the Zionists had no aversion to seeing Americans die for their own selfish interests.

Even the Encyclopedia Britannica and Microsoft Encarta Encyclopedia (look under "Balfour Declaration") confirm this little known fact of World War I. Here's the excerpt from Microsoft Encarta:

>
> THE BALFOUR DECLARATION. The Balfour Declaration was a letter prepared in March 1916 and issued in November 1917, during World War I, by the British statesman Arthur James Balfour, then foreign secretary.... Specifically, the letter expressed the British government's approval of Zionism with "the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people."
> The letter committed the British government to making the "best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done to prejudice the rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine." The immediate purpose was to win for the Allied cause in World War I the support of Jews in the warring nations and in the United States. As a result of the Balfour Declaration, Israel was established as an independent state in 1948 in the mandated area. 16

It's also worth mentioning at this point that when the British dismantled the Ottoman Empire after World War I, they created many smaller nations. The oil rich, puppet kingdom of Kuwait was formed by slicing off the southern coastal tip of what we now know as the nation of Iraq. As a result of this arbitrary redrawing of the Ottoman map, a bitter conflict was created between Iraq and Kuwait. Iraq has always considered Kuwait as its true southern province. This is what ultimately led to Iraq's invasion of Kuwait in 1991 and the Gulf War.

Weizmann -- Brandeis -- Baruch, the three Zionists who squeezed Woodrow Wilson right.

Zionism and World War II

Let us fast forward our time machine to the early 1930's. Again, there is no need for a detailed analysis and debate of the causes and major events of World War II. The purpose here is to again illustrate yet another case of selfish Zionist agitation for American entry into a war.

> The German people were bitterly resentful of not only the Zionist role in bringing about their defeat in World War I, but also over the brutal monetary reparations which had been imposed upon them by certain Zionist bankers who helped craft the brutal Treaty of Versailles after the war.

Stripped of formerly German territory, and with the German economy in ruins, the people of Germany elected Adolf Hitler as their Chancellor leader. Hitler and the Nazi party soon seized control of the German media, banks, and universities away from the influential Zionists who reigned supreme in those institutions.

Almost immediately, Zionists all over the world began to agitate for action against Germany. Boycotts of German imports were imposed and calls for the UK and USA to take immediate action against Germany began to emanate from Zionist circles.

On March 24, 1933, The Daily Express of England carried the bold headline; "Judea Declares War on Germany. Jews of All the World Unite in Action." 17 The front page story revealed that the Zionists had announced a concerted worldwide effort to isolate Germany and turn other nations against her.

QUOTE

The following year, Zionist political leader Vladimir Jabotinksy wrote.. The fight against Germany has now been waged for months by every Jewish community, on every continent...We shall start a spiritual and material war of the world against Germany. Our Jewish interests call for the complete destruction of Germany." 18

A few years later, Lord Beaverbrook, a British newspaper magnate issued this warning about the Zionist influence over the British press. Beaverbrook warned.. "There are 20,000 German Jews who have come here to England. They all work against an agreement with Germany. The Jews have got a big position in the press here. Their political influence is driving us into the direction of war." 19

In 1939, Germany and Poland went to war over disputed territory that was taken away from Germany by the Versailles Treaty of 1918. Under the phony pretext of protecting Poland, Great Britain and France immediately declared war on Germany. Beaverbrook's prediction was realized.

In the United States, the Zionist Mafia again went to work on a US president. The names of the players had changed but the game was still the same. It was Franklin Delano Roosevelt's turn to deliver the US into another European war. Patriotic Americans such as famed aviator Charles Lindbergh saw this and tried to warn the American people that Zionist media influence was intending to drive us into another World War. Said Lindbergh:

QUOTE

"I am not attacking the Jewish people. But I am saying that the leaders of both the British and the Jewish races, for reasons which are as understandable from their viewpoint as they are inadvisable from ours, for reasons which are not American, wish to involve us in the war." 20

Because of strong public anti-war sentiment, FDR and his Zionist allies had a hard time dragging the US into the European war. Then another "incident" came along at Pearl Harbor in 1941. Japan and Germany were bound to a mutual defense agreement, which meant that war with Japan would automatically mean war with Germany.

FDR embargoed Japan's oil supply in the hopes of forcing Japan to attack Pearl Harbor. Overwhelming evidence from government documents clearly shows that FDR had advance knowledge of the Japanese attack and allowed it to happen so that he could drag the US into World War II. 21

As was the case in WW I, US entry the war meant another defeat of Germany. Hours before committing suicide on April 30, 1945, Adolf Hitler dictated his last will and political testament. In it he placed responsibility for WW II on the Zionist Mafia - or, as he called it - "International Jewry and its henchmen".

QUOTE

> It's no surprise that Hitler would make such a claim. However, his final accusation of the Zionists does parallel the statements made by Jabotinsky, Lindbergh, Beaverbrook, Joe Kennedy, and many others. In the final writing of his life, Hitler wrote..
> "It is untrue that I or anyone else in Germany wanted war in 1939. It was wanted and provoked solely by international statesmen either of Jewish Origin or working for Jewish interests... Nor had I ever wished that after the appalling first World War, there would ever be a second against either England or America." 22

Regardless of your view of World War II and whether or not the USA belonged in the fight, the essential point which cannot be refuted is again this: years before World War II had even started, the Zionists had yet again demonstrated that they had no aversion to sending Americans to die for their own interests.

Left: Jabotinsky: we shall start a war against Germany Right: Lindbergh warned Americans about the Zionists.

Great Britain's turn to be betrayed

A few years after the end of World War II, the Zionist plan to establish the nation of Israel in Palestine was finally realized. But not before the British protectors of Palestine were chased out by acts of terror carried out by ungrateful Zionist terrorists. It was the British who had taken Palestine away from Arab control and allowed the Jews of Europe to immigrate there.

With Great Britain weakened and in debt from the war, the ungrateful Zionists saw their opportunity to chase the British out of Palestine by committing acts of terrorism against them. The most notorious of the Zionist terror groups was the Irgun, whose leader Menachem Begin would one day go on to become Prime Minister of Israel!

On the morning of July 22, 1946, of 15-20 Irgun terrorists dressed as Arabs entered the King David Hotel in Jerusalem. They unloaded 225 kilograms of explosives hidden in milk churns. 23 The King David Hotel housed the Secretariat of the Government of Palestine and Headquarters of the British Forces in Palestine.

> When a British officer became suspicious, a shootout took place and the Irgun lit the fuses and fled. The explosion destroyed part of the hotel and killed 91 people. Most of the victims were British but 15 innocent Jews also died, proving that radical Zionists are capable of even killing fellow jews in order to advance their cause.

The Irgun terror gang also targeted Arab civilians in order to frighten them into evacuating their land. The most well known of these massacres happened at the village of Deir Yassin on the morning of April 9, 1948. More than 100 Arabs, including women and children were systematically slaughtered by Menachem Begin's murderous gang. 24 The Israelis took over whatever villages the terrorized Arabs fled from.

By 1948, the British had had enough of Palestine. Under intense Zionist lobbying, the UN, the UK and the US recognized the nation of Israel in 1948. One of the first acts of the new Israeli government was to pass "the law of return", which gives any jew in the world the right to move to Israel and become a citizen. Understandably, the Arab nations weren't too pleased about this. There would be a several wars that followed. But the Israelis and their free arsenal of America's finest weapons kept the Arabs from reclaiming their land.

> The Arabs have never been a match for the US supplied Israeli war machine. The irony of "the law of return" is that many of today's jews have no direct ancestral link to the Jews of the Old Testament.
> Many, perhaps even most jewish people are descended from the Khazars, a people whose rulers converted to Judaism sometime during the 800's AD. 25 The Khazars never even set foot in Palestine!

The brutal and criminal circumstances surrounding the creation of Israel are now a half century in the past. Even most Arabs understand that Israel isn't going to go away. But by reviewing this real history, we can better understand the deceptive, dangerous, and brutal nature of Zionism today.

America becomes the Zionist's whore

We have reviewed how the Zionists used and discarded Germany. Then they used and discarded Great Britain. After World War II, it was clear that the chief remaining global power was the United States.

Now the USA had never had any problem with the Arab people, and had no reason to quarrel with the Arabs. For the Zionists to maintain and expand the support they were receiving from America, it would benefit them greatly if the Arabs and the mighty US could somehow become enemies.

> Could the Zionists possibly stoop so low? Why not? Look at what they had already pulled off! Remember that the official motto of the Mossad, Israeli's intelligence organization, is "by way of deception thou shalt do war." 26

In 1955, one of these "false flag" operations was publicly exposed for the world to see. Israeli agents, impersonating Arab terrorists, were caught staging a series of bombings against American installations in Egypt. 27 When this conspiracy was exposed, it ultimately created such a controversy that it brought down the Israeli government. The long since forgotten scandal became known as "the Lavon Affair".

Then again during a 1967 war with the Arabs, Israeli gunboats and fighter jets deliberately attacked the USS Liberty, an unarmed US communications ship. 28 Thirty five American sailors were murdered and 170 others injured in a prolonged Israeli onslaught - carried out in broad daylight and with the U.S. flag flying prominently.

The intent was to kill all of the Americans and then leave the Egyptians to take the blame. Israel denied that the attack was deliberate but the chilling stories of the lucky American survivors clearly contradicts that lie. To this very day, the U.S. Congress has never investigated the USS Liberty massacre.

> In 1989, the Israelis once again succeeded in framing enemy Arabs in order to enrage America. >
> Among some of Ostrovosky's other amazing revelations are: that the Mossad often uses Arab agents to carry out missions, that Israeli agents are skilled at impersonating Arabs, that Mossad had a plan to turn American public opinion against Iraq, and that wealthy Zionists in America are often called upon to help carry out Mossad missions.
> Ostrovsky, whose tell all book, By Way of Deception, infuriated the Mossad and made him the target of numerous death threats. 30

In 2001, the Washington Times ran a story about a 68 page research paper issued by the Army School of Advanced Military Studies (SAMS). The research was compiled by 60 US Army officers as an attempt to predict the possible outcomes of deploying a US force to maintain peace between the Israel and Palestinians.

Why does the US, which is trillions of dollars in debt, gives away billons of taxpayer dollars to a foreign government whose military violates international laws and whose Mossad is capable of murdering US troops in order to frame Arabs? Have we lost our minds?

Zionist power structure in America

Now that we have established the ruthless and criminal nature of radical Zionism, one more lesson needs to be understood before we return to the five dancing Israelis of 9-11 and other related stories. Even the Zionists themselves have never denied that they have long exerted great influence in America.

> What we must understand is that the Zionists do not merely influence United States policy....they dominate it! It is this domination that enables them to pull off monstrous crimes and then conceal them from the general public.
> The observation that Zionists dominate the American media, government, academia, and Hollywood has been made by many prominent Americans and is easily verifiable by public information.

Henry Ford said this.. If after having elected their man or group, obedience is not rendered to the Jewish control, then you speedily hear of "scandals" and "investigations" and "impeachments" for the removal of the disobedient. Usually a man with a "past" proves the most obedient instrument, but even a good man can often be tangled up in campaign practices that compromise him.

It has been commonly known that Jewish manipulation of American election campaigns have been so skillfully handled, that no matter which candidate was elected, there was ready made a sufficient amount of evidence to discredit him in case his Jewish masters needed to discredit him." 33

Charles Lindbergh said this.. Their greatest danger to this country lies in the Jewish ownership and influence in our motion pictures, our press, our radio, and our government." 34

Admiral Thomas Moorer, Chairman of the US Joint Chiefs of Staff under Ronald Reagan said this.. "I've never seen a President -- I don't care who he is -- stand up to them [the Israelis]. It just boggles the mind. They always get what they want. The Israelis know what is going on all the time. If the American people understood what a grip those people have got on our government, they would rise up in arms. Our citizens certainly don't have any idea what goes on." 35

William Fulbright US Senator and Chairman of the US Foreign Relations committee, while a guest on ABC's Face the Nation, said before a national television audience.. "Israel controls the United States Senate. We should be more concerned about the United States' interests." 36

Patrick Buchanan nationally syndicated columnist and former presidential candidate said.. "The United States Congress is Israeli occupied territory." 37

> GRAHAM: "Yes, sir."
>
> NIXON: "Oh boy. So do I. I can't ever say that but I do believe it" 38

But enough of quoting others. Let's look at the facts of Zionist control..

Fact: ABC, NBC, CBS, CNN, UPN, The Washington Post, The New York Times, The Wall Street Journal, The New York Daily News, Time Magazine, Newsweek, People Magazine, US News and World Report and countless other media and Hollywood companies all have either a Zionist CEO, a Zionist News Chief, or are owned by a media conglomerate which has a Zionist CEO. 39

Have you ever noticed how Hollywood movies always seem to portray Germans and Arabs as a bigoted fanatics or as terrorists? Now you know why!

Fact: AIPAC, the Israeli lobbying organization, is the most feared lobby in Washington DC. By their own admission, they are capable of unseating Congressmen and Senators that do not carry out their requests. The majority of Congressmen from both political parties receive large donations from AIPAC. Writing for the Nation Magazine, journalist Michael Massing explains:

"AIPAC is widely regarded as the most powerful foreign-policy lobby in Washington. Its 60,000 members shower millions of dollars on hundreds of members of Congress on both sides of the aisle." Newspapers like the New York Times fear the Jewish lobby organizations as well. "It's very intimidating," said a correspondent at another large daily. "The pressure from these groups is relentless." 40 (emphasis added)

Fact: The Pentagon is under the control of a hard core Zionist named Richard Perle. The civilian Defense Policy Board actually wields more control over the military establishment than the Defense Secretary or the generals and admirals. There are a number of other Zionists who serve on the board (Kissinger, Cohen, Schlessinger) as well as non-jewish members who have always supported Israel and the expansion of the "War on Terror". The notoriously belligerent Perle, nicknamed the "The Prince of Darkness", is Chairman of the Board. 41

With Perle as Chairman of the Defense Policy Board, Zionist Paul Wolfowitz as Undersecretary of Defense, and Zionist award winner Douglass Feith as Undersecretary of Defense Policy, the Zionist Pentagon gang controls 3 of the top 4 civilian leadership positions of America's armed forces. Careerist scoundrels like Condoleeza Rice and Donald Rumsfeld are either under their influence or unwilling to oppose their drive for WW III.

The Perle-Wolfowitz-Feith gang represent a fanatical and warmongering "government-within-a-government". In league with these Zionist Pentagon conspirators are jewish Zionist and potential 2004 Presidential candidate, Senator Joseph Lieberman (D-CT) and his Gentile partner in crime Senator John McCain (R-AZ).

>
> An Israeli journalist named Ari Shavit, lamenting the harsh treatments that his government dishes out to the Palestinians, made the following observation in Ha'aretz, a leading Israeli journal.. " We believe with absolute certitude that now, with the White House and Senate in our hands along with the Pentagon and the New York Times, the lives [of Arabs] do not count as much as our own.
> Their blood does not count as much as our blood. We believe with absolute certitude that now, when we have AIPAC [the Israel lobby] and [Edgar] Bronfman and the Anti-Defamation League, We truly have the right to tell 400,000 people that in eight hours they must flee from their homes. And that we have the right to rain bombs on their villages and towns and populated areas. That we have the right to kill without any guilt." 42

And this only scratches the surface of Zionist power! With such awesome power to control and cover up events, is it any wonder why so many of America's journalists and politicians are afraid to even talk about this issue? Is it any wonder why former President Bill Clinton would grovel before a Jewish audience and say something as ridiculous as the following statement:

"The Israelis know that if the Iraqi or the Iranian army came across the Jordan River, I would personally grab a rifle, get in a ditch, and fight and die." 43 I could go on and on at much greater length about this subject, but I want to get back to the dancing Israelis. Have I made my point yet?

The Butcher Sharon

I know. I know. You want to return to the scene of the dancing Israelis on 9-11. But there is one more quick lesson that needs to be covered before we climb back into the time machine and fast-forward back to 9-11. If we don't cover this, you won't be able to fully understand the "big picture".

> During the 1967 war, Israel occupied the Palestinian territories of the West Bank and Gaza.

Thirty five years have passed since that war ended, yet the Israeli army continues the humiliating occupation of those Palestinian areas. Those areas are not part of the nation of Israel that was created in 1948 by the UN. What the Palestinian people are resisting today is not the 1948 confiscation of their land.

They simply want the 1967 occupation to end. It is this ongoing occupation, not the 1948 creation of Israel, which fuels the conflict today. Prior to the current outbreak of hostilities, the majority of the Israeli people also supported the end of Israel's occupation and oppression of these territories.

They elected Yitzak Rabin as Prime Minister and Rabin made more strides towards achieving peace than any of his processors. The 1990's were a quiet years in Israel. Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat and Prime Minister Rabin appeared to have finally reached a peace deal the US acting as the mediator.

> This did not sit well with the hard core Zionists who ultimately hope to expand Israel's borders even more. Hopes for a lasting peace deal were soon dealt a major setback when a flurry of five bullets were pumped into Prime Minister Rabin at close range as he was attending a 1995 Israeli peace rally. It was not an Arab that killed Rabin.

It was a Zionist fanatic named Yigal Amir. Amir was a law student at Israel's Bar-Ilan University. He later told investigators that he had no regrets for his actions. 44 Amir, a bright young law student was willing to throw his life away in the service of the Zionist cause. (More on that concept later on.)

At the head of the Israeli government today sits a brutal man who has been a guest of honor at George Bush's White House on a regular basis since he took office in October 2000. His name is Ariel Sharon. His fanatical Zionist supporters in Israel refer to him as "Arik King", but the Arabs know him as a lifelong butcher, terrorist, and war criminal.

There was a time when Sharon was disgraced and his political career seemed to be over. The isolation of Ariel Sharon was the result a 1982 Palestinian massacre which Sharon engineered when he was Israel's Defense minister. It was the Israelis themselves who forced Sharon to resign.

Sharon's troops blocked the exits from the Sabra and Shattila refugee camps while a Lebanese militia, allied with the Israeli military, went into the camps and slaughtered more than 1,500 unarmed Palestinian civilians while raping many women. 45 Though these Lebanese militias were the ones who did the actual killing, it was Ariel Sharon who controlled the militias and it was Sharon's soldiers who stood by and blocked the camp exits, deliberately allowing the slaughter to take place.

> A survivor of the attack who had been raped and shot went to Belgium and initiated a war crimes case against Sharon. Several Lebanese militia leaders were summoned to testify against Sharon.

Shortly before their testimony, three of them were suddenly killed by unknown gunmen and car bombs. Israel's Mossad of course denied any responsibility for the strange and untimely deaths of these three witnesses against Sharon. 46 And if you believe that one, I'll sell you the World Trade Center!

After nearly 20 years of political exile, Sharon made his comeback in October 2000. Knowing full well how much the Palestinians hated him for his role in the 1982 massacres, Sharon and a small army of Israeli soldiers showed up at the Temple Mount 47 - a site held sacred by both Muslims and jews. This was a deliberate provocation. When the Muslims protested the Sharon provocation, the Israeli troops cracked down. Rocks were thrown and shots were fired.

In just a matter of minutes, years of peace and the Israeli-Arab peace effort had been destroyed by Mr. Sharon's bullying antics. When the fighting broke out, a frightened and propagandized Israeli population soon turned to a strong man for their protection - the very man who had deliberately instigated the violence in the first place. Ariel Sharon was elected Prime Minister.

True to form, Sharon has brutalized the Palestinian civilian population under the pretext of "self-defense". Armed and funded by Israel's wholly owned US Congress, the Israeli war machine can bulldoze Arab homes at will. The only weapon that the outgunned Palestinians can retaliate with is the "suicide bomber". With every suicide bombing, Sharon is able to "justify" even more attacks and occupy more land.

> QUOTE

The Zionist game plan is to ultimately drive the Palestinians out of the West Bank and Gaza, just like the Irgun massacres had driven the Arabs out of Deir Yassin. Standing in the way of such a bold Zionist scheme were three major obstacles:

1. the force of world opinion. Prior to 9-11, the Palestinian struggle against Israeli occupation had gained the sympathy of many people around the world.

2. the force of Israeli domestic opinion, most Israelis wanted peace and were opposed to the 35 year occupation of Palestinian territories.

3. Saddam Hussein's Iraq, which had always been a champion of the cause of Palestinian self determination.

How useful it would be for the Zionists if some "incident" were to happen which would turn American and world opinion against the Palestinians and ultimately drag the US into a war against Israel's Arab enemies. Now you know why those Israelis were celebrating on 9-11!

Ariel Sharon and some of his Palestinian victims

Advance Warnings

The days and hours leading up to 9-11 were marked by a series of chilling warnings about impending terrorist plots involving hijacked commercial airplanes. It's worth mentioning at this point that months before 9-11, the US had already informed some of its allies of plans to go to war in Afghanistan. On June 26, 2001, News Insight/India Reacts, an Indian public affairs magazine, wrote:

"India and Iran will "facilitate" US and Russian plans for "limited military action" against the Taliban if the contemplated tough new economic sanctions don't bend Afghanistan's fundamentalist regime.

Indian officials say that India and Iran will only play the role of "facilitator" while the US and Russia will combat the Taliban from the front with the help of two Central Asian countries, Tajikistan and Uzbekistan, to push Taliban lines back to the 1998 position 50 km away from Mazar-e-Sharief city in northern Afghanistan. Military action will be the last option though it now seems scarcely avoidable with the UN banned from Taliban-controlled areas" 48

The story of US military involvement in Afghanistan was reported months before 9-11 in Indian49 and British 50 publications but it was never reported in the US media. With the military plans already in motion since at least June of 2001, all that was needed was for an "incident" to take place to justify the US going to "war against Terrorism" in Afghanistan.

Here are just a few of the advance warnings which were brought to light in the aftermath of 9-11:

QUOTE

The London Daily Telegraph reported on September 16, 2001.. "The Telegraph has learned that two senior experts with Mossad, the Israeli military intelligence service, were sent to Washington in August to alert the FBI and CIA to the existence of a cell of as many as 200 terrorists said to be preparing a big operation.

They had no specific information about what was being planned but linked the plot to Osama Bin Laden and told American officials that there were strong grounds for suspecting Iraqi involvement." 51

Do you smell a "false flag" operation in the works? How is possible that the Mossad knew of the existence of these 200 terrorists but could not name or locate a single one? And how convenient for Israel that Saddam Hussein should be in cahoots with Osama Bin Laden, despite the fact that Bin Laden and Hussein hate each other!

The Franfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, (FAZ) one of Germany's most respected newspapers, quoted German intelligence sources who said that the Echelon electronic spy network gave US and Israeli intelligence agencies several warnings that suicidal hijack attacks were being planned against US targets. 52

Echelon is capable of monitoring all of the electronic communication in the world. Utilizing 120 satellites, the Echelon system is designed to suck up enormous amounts of data by using keyword search techniques to sift through the data. 53

The San Francisco Chronicle reported on September 12 that San Francisco Mayor and former California Assembly Speaker Willie Brown was advised eight hours before the attacks that he should be careful about flying on 9-11. 54

In its September 24, 2001 issue, Newsweek Magazine broke this startling revelation.. Three weeks ago there was another warning that a terrorist strike might be imminent… On September 10, Newsweek has learned, a group of top Pentagon officials suddenly cancelled travel plans for the next morning, apparently because of security concerns.". 55

Wow! Could these unnamed "top Pentagon officials" have been some of the Zionist directors of the Defense Policy Board which we talked about earlier? If these Pentagon officials were scared enough not to fly, then why didn't the Pentagon place the Air Force on full alert? How could they have been so slow to react to 9-11 when they already knew there was a threat?

On September 27, The Washington Post reported that two workers of the Israeli company Odigo (with offices also in New York) received instant message warnings just two hours before the attacks. Here's an excerpt from the Washington Post:

"Officials at instant-messaging firm Odigo confirmed today that two employees received text messages warning of an attack on the World Trade Center two hours before terrorists crashed planes into the New York landmarks" 56

Soon after the attacks, the Odigo employees informed the management of the electronic message they had received. Israeli security services were contacted and the FBI was informed.

Nothing has been heard about this event since. I think it's safe to say that "Islamic terrorists" would not have been considerate enough to send detailed E-mail warnings to some obscure Israeli office workers.

The September 11 dance party

Let us review what we have learned. We have clearly established that Zionists played a key role in steering the US into two World Wars. We have clearly established that Zionists do not care if Americans (or others) are killed to further their goals.

>
> We have clearly established that Zionists have a record of attacking Americans in order to frame Arabs. We have established that the Zionists are capable of acts of unspeakable brutality and genocide. We have established that US politicians fear the Zionist Mafia and defy them at their own peril.
> We have learned that warnings of a suicidal hijacking plot were issued to several people. And most importantly of all, we have clearly established that the Zionists have the capacity to make these amazing stories suddenly disappear from their controlled news media.

Having established these precedents, we can now easily deduce that the reason why those five dancing Israeli agents who celebrated the 9-11 attacks were so happy is because they knew that Americans would now become unconditional supporters of their "Israeli ally" and fanatical haters of Muslims and Arabs. On the day of the attacks, former Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu was asked what the attack would mean for US-Israeli relations. His quick reply was "It's very good…….Well, it's not good, but it will generate immediate sympathy (for Israel)" 57

The five Israelis made such a spectacle that everyone who saw them felt compelled to call the police. According to ABC's 20/20, when the van belonging to the cheering Israelis was stopped by the police, the first words out of the driver's (Sivan Kurzberg) lying mouth were: "We are Israelis. We are not your problem.

Your problems are our problems. The Palestinians are your problem." 58 The police and FBI field agents became really suspicious when they found box cutters (the same items that the hijackers supposedly used), $4700 cash stuffed in a sock, and foreign passports. Police also told the Bergen Record that bomb sniffing dogs were brought to the van and that they reacted as if they had smelled explosives. 59

From there, the story gets becomes even more suspicious. The Israelis worked for a Weehawken moving company known as Urban Moving Systems. An American employee of Urban Moving Systems told the Bergen Record that a majority of his co-workers were Israelis and they were all joking about the attacks. The employee, who declined to give his name said: "I was in tears. These guys were joking and that bothered me." 60

A few days after the attacks, Urban Moving System's Israeli owner, Dominick Suter, dropped his business and fled the country. He was in such a hurry to flee America that some of Urban Moving System's customers were left with their furniture stuck in storage facilities. 61

> The five Israeli army veterans (Mossad) were held in custody for several months before being quietly released. Some of the movers had been kept in solitary confinement for 40 days. 62

Immediately following the attacks, the Zionist controlled media was filled with stories linking the attacks to Bin Laden. TV talking-heads and scribblers of every stripe spoon-fed a gullible American public a steady diet of the most outrageous propaganda imaginable. We were told that the reason Bin Laden attacked the USA was because he hates our "freedom" and "democracy". The Muslims were "medieval" and they wanted to destroy us because of our wealth. But Bin Laden strongly denied any role in the attacks and suggested that Zionists orchestrated the 9-11 attacks:

"I was not involved in the September 11 attacks in the United States nor did I have knowledge of the attacks. There exists a government within a government within the United States. The United States should try to trace the perpetrators of these attacks within itself; to the people who want to make the present century a century of conflict between Islam and Christianity. That secret government must be asked as to who carried out the attacks....The American system is totally in control of the Jews, whose first priority is Israel, not the United States." 63

To date, the only shred of "evidence" to be uncovered against Bin Laden was a highly suspicious, barely audible amateur video, that the Zionist dominated Pentagon just happened to find "lying around" in Afghanistan. Though there is no evidence, be it hard or circumstantial, to link the Al Qaeda "terrorist network" to these acts of terror; there is in fact a mountain of evidence, both hard and circumstantial, which suggests that the Zionist Mafia has been very busy framing Arabs for terror plots against America.

Left: bin Laden.. I had nothing to do with the attacks." Right: Netanyahu.. attacks are good for US - Israel relations."

Who was really flying those planes on 9-11?

Hours after the 9-11 attacks, authorities began to find clues conveniently left for them to stumble upon. The Boston Globe reported that a copy of the Koran, instructions on how to fly a commercial airplane and a fuel consumption calculator were found in a pair of bags meant for one of the hijacked flights that left from Logan. 64

> Authorities also received a "tip" about a suspicious white car left behind at Boston's Logan Airport. An Arabic-language flight training manual was found inside the car. 65

How fortunate for investigators that the hijackers "forgot" to take their Koran and Arab flight manuals with them! Within a few days, all "19 hijackers" were "identified" and their faces were plastered all over our television screens.

Then, like a script from a corny "B" spy movie, the official story gets even more ridiculous. The passport of the supposed "ringleader" Mohammed Atta, somehow managed to survive the explosion, inferno, and smoldering collapse to be oh-so-conveniently "found" just a few blocks away from the World Trade Center! 66

It is obvious that this "evidence" was planted by individuals wishing to direct the blame towards Osama Bin Laden. How is it possible that Arab students who had never flown an airplane could take a simulator course and then fly jumbo jets with the skill and precision of "top-gun" pilots?

It is not possible and the fact is, the true identities of the 9-11 hijackers remains a mystery. In the days following the disclosure of the "hijackers" names and faces, no less than 7 of the Arab individuals named came forward to protest their obvious innocence. 67

That's right! Seven of the nineteen "hijackers" are alive and well. They were victims of identity theft, some of whom had had their passports stolen. They were interviewed by several news organizations including the Telegraph of England. Here’s an excerpt from David Harrison’s Telegraph story entitled:

Revealed: The Men With Stolen Identities:

"Their names were flashed around the world as suicide hijackers who carried out the attacks on America. But yesterday four innocent men told how their identities had been stolen. The men - all from Saudi Arabia - spoke of their shock at being mistakenly named by the FBI as suicide terrorists. None of the four was in the United States on September 11 and all are alive in their home country.

> The Telegraph obtained the first interviews with the men since they learnt that they were on the FBI's list of hijackers who died in the crashes in New York, Washington and Pennsylvania.

All four said that they were "outraged" to be identified as terrorists. One has never been to America and another is a Saudi Airlines pilot who was on a training course in Tunisia at the time of the attacks. Saudi Airlines said it was considering legal action against the FBI for seriously damaging its reputation and that of its pilots." 68
(emphasis added)

The story of these identity thefts was also briefly reported by ABC 69 and BBC (England) 70 The FBI does not deny this. Nobody denies this fact because it is easily verifiable. Instead, the US media and government just ignore this inconvenient little fact and keep right on repeating the monstrous lie that the hijacker identities are known and that 15 of them were Saudis.

CNN revealed that FBI director Robert Mueller openly admitted that some of the identities of the 9-11 hijackers are in question due to identity theft. Here's what CNN reported on September 21.. FBI Director Robert Mueller has acknowledged that some of those behind last week's terror attacks may have stolen the identification of other people, and, according to at least one security expert, it may have been "relatively easy" based on their level of sophistication. 71

This opens up a whole Pandora's box of unanswered questions. First and foremost of which is this: why would Osama Bin laden, the Saudi Arabian caveman, steal identities? To cover his tracks you say? Next question: why would a Saudi Arabian, attempting to cover his tracks, steal the identities of....fellow Saudi Arabians???

What would be the point? Why go you through the trouble of stealing identities that would point back to you? Why not steal Greek identities, or Brazilian identities, or Turkish ones? A much more logical conclusion is that non-Arabs stole these identities as part of a "false flag" operation designed to point the blame at Arabs, and Saudi Arabs in particular.

What kind of a corrupt character is FBI boss Mueller? He initially admitted that false identities were involved with 9-11, but then he allows the media to keep naming these innocent, and alive, Arabs as the hijackers? Why doesn't he correct them? More on the slimy Mr. Mueller later on!

Now I'm really going to rock your faith in the false religion of 9-11. In February of 2000, Indian intelligence officials detained 11 members of what they thought was an Al Qaeda hijacking conspiracy. It was then discovered that these 11 "Muslim preachers" were all Israeli nationals! India's leading weekly magazine, The Week, reported.. On January 12 Indian intelligence officials in Calcutta detained 11 foreign nationals for interrogation before they were to board a Dhaka-bound Bangladesh Biman flight. They were detained on the suspicion of being hijackers. "But we realized that they were tabliqis (Islamic preachers), so we let them go", said an Intelligence official.

The eleven had Israeli passports but were believed to be Afghan nationals who had spent a while in Iran. Indian intelligence officials, too, were surprised by the nationality profile of the eleven. "They say that they have been on tabligh (preaching Islam) in India for two months.

They are Israeli nationals from the West Bank," said a Central Intelligence official. He claimed that Tel Aviv "exerted considerable pressure" on Delhi to secure their release. "It appeared that they could be working for a sensitive organization in Israel and were on a mission to Bangladesh," the official said. 72 (emphasis added)

What were these 11 Israelis doing trying to impersonate Al Qaeda men? Infiltrating?...perhaps. Framing?...more likely. But the important precedent to understand is this: Israeli agents were once caught red handed impersonating Muslim hijackers! This event becomes even more mind boggling when we learn that it was Indian Intelligence that helped the US to so quickly identify the "19 hijackers"! On April 3, 2002, Express India, quoting the Press Trust of India, revealed:

Washington, April 3: Indian intelligence agencies helped the US to identify the hijackers who carried out the deadly September 11 terrorist attacks in New York and Washington, a media report said here on Wednesday. 73

Ain't that a kick in the ass?!! Did you catch that? The Indian intelligence officials that were duped into mistaking Israeli agents for Al Qaeda hijackers back in 2000, were the very same clowns telling the FBI who it was that hijacked the 9-11 planes! Keep in mind that Indian intelligence has an extremely close working relationship with Israel’s Mossad because both governments hate the Muslim nation of Pakistan. 74

Now about Mohamed Atta, you know, the so-called "ring leader". There are a number of inconsistencies with that story as well. Like some of the 7 hijackers known to be still alive, Atta also had his passport stolen in 1999, 75 (the same passport that miraculously survived the WTC explosion and collapse?) making him an easy mark for an identity theft.

Atta was known to all as a shy, timid, and sheltered young man who was uncomfortable with women. 76 The 5 foot 7 inch, 150 pound architecture student was such a "goody two shoes" that some of his university acquaintances in Germany refrained from drinking or cursing in front of him. How this gentle, non- political mamma's boy from a good Egyptian family suddenly transformed himself into the vodka drinking, go-go girl groping terrorist animal described by the media, has to rank as the greatest personality change since another classic work of fiction, Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

Atta, or someone using Atta's identity, had enrolled in a Florida flight school in 2001 and then broke off his training, making it a point to tell his instructor he was leaving for Boston. In an October 2001 interview with an ABC affiliate in Florida, flight school president Rudi Dekkers said that his course does not qualify pilots to fly commercial jumbo jets. 77 He also described Atta as "an asshole". 78 Part of the reason for Dekker's dislike for Atta stems from a highly unusual incident that occurred at the beginning of the course. Here’s the exchange between ABC producer Quentin McDermott and Dekkers:

MCDERMOTT: "Why do you say Atta was an asshole?"

DEKKERS: "Well, when Atta was here and I saw his face on several occasions in the building, then I know that they're regular students and then I try to talk to them, it's kind of a PR - where are you from? I tried to communicate with him.

I found out from my people that he lived in Hamburg and he spoke German so one of the days that I saw him, I speak German myself, I'm a Dutch citizen, and I started in the morning telling him in German, "Good morning. How are you? How do you like the coffee? Are you happy here?", and he looked at me with cold eyes, didn't react at all and walked away. That was one of my first meetings I had." 79

This is eerily similar to the way in which Zacharias Moussaoui (the so-called "20th hijacker") became "belligerent" when his Minnesota flight instructor tried to speak to him in French (his first language), at the beginning of that course. The Minnessota Star Tribune reported on December 21, 2001:

> "Moussaoui first raised eyebrows when, during a simple introductory exchange, he said he was from France, but then didn't seem to understand when the instructor spoke French to him.

Moussaoui then became belligerent and evasive about his background, (Congressman) Oberstar and other sources said. In addition, he seemed inept in basic flying procedure, while seeking expensive training on an advanced commercial jet simulator." 80 (emphasis added)

It truly is an amazing twist of fate that both Atta and Moussaoui both had American flight instructors who spoke German and French respectively. Even the great Mossad could not have foreseen such a coincidence! The real Atta would have been able to respond to his instructor’s German small talk and the real Moussaoui would have been able to respond to his instructor’s French small talk.

Atta just walked away and Moussaoui threw a fit! Neither responded because neither could. They were imposters, whose faces were probably disguised by a make up artist. Their mission was to frame the two innocent Arabs who were probably targeted by the Mossad at random.

The imposter was able to create a new Atta by using Atta's stolen passport from 1999 - the same passport that floated safely to the ground with a few burnt edges on 9-11. These strange inconsistencies tend to give support to Mohammed Atta's father's claim that he spoke over the phone with his son on September 12th, the day after the attacks. 81

Could a group of professionals have abducted and killed the real Atta in the days following the 9-11 attacks? Mossad agents, posing as "art students" were arrested after conducting some type of operation in Hollywood, Florida, the same small town that Atta stayed in! 82 So what happened to the real Mohammed Atta? To quote his grief stricken father: "Ask Mossad!".

So who, if not the "19 Arabs" was on those planes? That’s the million dollar question! There are a number of alternative scenarios. Could some Israelis have been fanatical enough to have volunteered for such a suicide mission? Odd as that may sound at first, it is not out of the realm of possibility. The fact is, hard-core Zionist extremists have proven themselves to be every bit as fanatical, (more so), than Arab extremists.

A nation which can produce thousands of bloodthirsty Zionist extremists, Irgun war criminals, Mossad terrorists who blow up occupied buildings, assassins who kill Israeli Prime Ministers in full view of policemen, and crazed killers who have carried sickening massacres of Arab women and children; would surely be capable of recruiting a few fanatics willing to sacrifice for "the cause". This theory becomes even more plausible when we consider that only the pilots would have needed to know that the planes were on a suicide mission.

Still don't think Israel is capable of producing suicidal terrorists? Have you already forgotten the case of Dr. Baruch Goldstein?. Goldstein was a New York doctor and resettled in Israel. On February 25, 1994, Goldstein walked into a crowded Arab mosque in the occupied West Bank. With hundreds of worshippers kneeled in silent prayer, Goldstein sealed off the exit, and opened fire with a rapid-firing assault rifle, killing 29 and wounding many more.

Goldstein, a father of four, was finally stopped and killed when the frenzied crowd overpowered him. With as many as 800 worshippers packed into the mosque, Goldstein surely could not have been expecting to come out alive. This was clearly a suicide attack. And what did Goldstein's mother have to say about her son's suicide attack? The Boston Globe revealed:

"The mother of Baruch Goldstein, the Jewish settler who massacred about 40 Palestinians in a Hebron mosque a week ago, says she is proud of her son. "I always thought to myself, When would someone get up and do such a thing? And in the end, my son did it," Miriam Goldstein told the weekly Shishi newspaper." 83

It gets even more sickening than that. Baruch Goldstein has become a folk hero among many of the crazed side-locked settlers who have encroached upon the West Bank. They have turned Goldstein's gravesite into a memorial and set up a website to honor his murderous deed! Look what these fanatics posted on the Goldstein memorial website:

Over the years, the grave has become a site of pilgrimage. Numerous people from all over the world come to pray and honor his (Baruch's) memory. 84
(emphasis added)

One has to wonder if some of Goldstein's admirers were flying those planes on 9-11. There is one interesting side note here which may or may not be of any significance. One of the two Israelis who died aboard the hijacked planes was Daniel Lewin - who was aboard the first plane to crash into the Twin Towers.

The Ha'aretz News Service of Israel revealed that Lewin, was a one-time officer in the Israeli Defense Forces elite Sayeret Matkal commando unit. 85 Oddly enough, Lewin's name is missing from CNN's comprehensive September 11 Memorial website.

> Another possibility is that some other group of "patsies" was recruited for the operation. Perhaps some anarchists, or some leftover Marxists who thought they were going to bring down western capitalism.

Or perhaps, the hijackers were another group of angry Arabs who weren't even aware of who their true handlers really were or what the broader strategic aim of the mission actually was. In the dark world of covert operations, agents are often kept ignorant of who it is that orchestrating the show.

Admittedly, these scenarios are speculative, but one thing that is not speculative is this: the hijackers were not the 19 men whose faces were shown on our TV screens!

Goldstein Still Alive: Al Nami Al Shehri Al Omari Al Ghamdi Al Ghamdi Al-mihdhar

Martin Timothy - March 6, 2010 01:53 PM (GMT)

Who provided the protective cover for the 9-11 operation?

On October 26, 1999, the famous golfer Payne Stewart boarded a private Learjet in Florida and left for Texas. Shortly after takeoff, Stewart's jet veered sharply off course and began heading northwest. All contact with air controllers was lost.

> Within 15 minutes of having gone off course, US fighter jets had already intercepted the jet. Everyone on board was likely dead due to depressurization. These fighter jets were dispatched by NORAD, the branch of the US air force whose job it is to monitor and defend US airspace 24 hours a day.

NORAD maintains a huge array of land based radar systems and has fighter jets on alert 24 hours a day so that they can respond to a crisis. The jets escorted the doomed airplane until another group of Air National Guard jets took over the escort mission.

Finally, Stewart's jet ran out of fuel a crashed in South Dakota. The quick reaction time and military precision with which NORAD intercepted and escorted Stewart's jet was impressive, and exactly what one would have expected from the greatest military power in world history. 86

But on 9-11, the same NORAD which had so effortlessly intercepted Stewart's jet in 1999, was nowhere to be found during that two hour period between the first planes going off course and the last one crashing in a Pennsylvania field. How is it possible that the airspace between Boston and Washington DC, an area which contains the political and economic heart of the nation, was left completely defenseless?

> The second plane to hit the New York had flown off course without communication for 40 minutes. On its way to New York, it actually flew within a few miles of McGuire Air Force base in New Jersey, after the first tower had already been hit! And how is it possible that Washington DC was left undefended long after the New York attacks, when Andrews Air Force base is within car driving distance? The air force jets which did finally arrive were too late.

Was this due to NORAD's incompetence, or was the order to scramble the fighter jets deliberately delayed so that the terror attacks could take place. Given NORAD's impressive performance in the 1999 Payne Stewart disaster, this would suggest that someone high up in the Air Force establishment may have issued stand down orders to some of our Air Force bases.

Remember, the Pentagon's Defense Policy Board is headed by Zionist Richard Perle and his gang of warmongering lackeys.87 The civilians on this board wield the power to promote career minded Generals and Admirals. Is it really that hard to believe that a highly placed military leader could have collaborated with the true 9-11 planners?

> What makes the Air Force's slow response even more outrageous and suspicious is that previously mentioned Newsweek article which revealed that several Pentagon leaders (Defense Policy Board?) cancelled flight plans for September 11 due to security concerns.88

There were other warning signals too which we're reviewed earlier. In light of all these warnings, why wasn't NORAD and it's armada of fighters placed on an even higher alert than they already are? There is only one logical answer to these questions: Certain Pentagon leaders were "in on it".

> General Hamid Gul, a former Director of Pakistani Intelligence hit the nail on the head with his analysis.. "The attacks against New York and Washington were Israeli engineered."
>
> "The attacks started at 8:45, and four flights are diverted from their assigned air space and no Air Force fighter jets scramble until 10:00. Radars are jammed, transponders fail and no IFF - friend or foe identification - challenge.
> In Pakistan, if there is no response to an IFF, jets are instantly scrambled. This was clearly an inside job. Will this also be hushed up in the investigation, like the Kennedy assassination?" 89

This raises another troubling set of questions. Surely the masterminds of the 9-11 operation would have taken the time to learn something about US air defense procedures. They would therefore have realized that hitting New York City with jets hijacked from Boston would have been difficult. New York is about 30 minutes away by airplane and jumbo jets fly very slowly when compared to US fighter jets that can crack the sound barrier.

Even with a 15-20 minute head start, NORAD's jets could have easily intercepted them, especially the second plane, which took a longer route to New York and flew way off course for 40 minutes. Why choose Boston's airport and jeopardize the success of the operation?

Wouldn't it be safer to just hijack planes from New York's Kennedy or La Guardia Airports? Or even Newark, NJ which is just across the river. Any plane hijacked from either of those three busy airports would have been unstoppable. Even a plane from Philadelphia's Airport would have been much closer to the target than far away Boston.

The planners were no dummies. They must have counted on receiving protective cover and a window of opportunity by someone high up at US Air command. Why else choose Boston? In addition to the protection that the planners were to receive from certain Air Force elements, there is another plausible theory for choosing Boston's Logan Airport as well as United and American Airlines planes.

It should be noted that the firm which provides security at Boston's Logan Airport and also Newark Airport, and also works extensively with United and American Airlines, is a company called Huntleigh USA. 90 Claiming that Huntleigh USA's airport security was grossly negligent on 9-11, family members of some of the victims are suing Huntleigh.

> 91 Huntleigh USA had been acquired by ICTS International in 1999. ICTS is controlled by two Israelis; Ezra Harel and Menachem Atzmon. 92 In short, security at Boston's Logan airport was handled (or mishandled) by an Israeli controlled company.

Is there a connection here? Could agents have been infiltrated into Logan Airport under Israeli owned Huntleigh's cover? It's quite possible. In the days following the 9-11 attacks, Israeli security professionals began aggressively marketing themselves in order to gain more airport security jobs. 93 Americans should be grateful to have such wonderful allies who care about our airport security so much!

Could some of the failure of our defense systems be attributed to a cyber attack from computer hackers? Our defense and intelligence systems are very dependent upon technology. A well coordinated attack on these systems may also have contributed to our inability to expose and prevent the attacks. There is one group that has the capability to attack our military computer systems.

> In July of 1999, Ha'aretz (Israel) ran a story headlined: "Hackers Using Israeli Net Site to Strike at Pentagon": Ha'aretz reported.. "An Israeli Internet site is being used by international computer hackers as a base for electronic attacks on US government and military computer systems, according to Pentagon officials who were quoted in a Washington Timnes report yesterday."

"According to the Times, the real danger to US national security is the threat posed by foreign intelligence services or governments that could launch electronic warfare against the United States" 94

And look what the US Department of Justice wrote in this 1998 press release.. WASHINGTON, D. C. -- "The Department of Justice, in conjunction with the FBI, the Air Force Office of Special Investigation, the National Aeronautic and Space Administration and the Naval Criminal Investigative Service, Announced today that the Israeli National Police arrested Ehud Tenebaum, an Israeli citizen, for illegally accessing computers belonging to the Israeli and United States governments, as well as hundreds of other commercial and educational systems in the United States and elsewhere." 95

No doubt about it. Covert elements in Israel have been targeting the US military's defense systems for some time now. This could very well have been yet another instrument played during the great orchestrated concert of 9-11.

Left: Bush: "let us never tolerate outrageous conspiracy theories." Right: General Hamid Gul: "clearly an inside job."

The curious collapse of the twin towers

The government/media approved version of events insists that the fires in the World Trade Center burned so hot that they caused steel supports to melt and buckle, thus triggering a total collapse of the towers. This is a strange theory for a number of reasons:

>
> 1. The architects who designed the World Trade Center designed it to withstand the direct impact and fuel fire of a commercial airline crash. Aaron Swirsky, one of the architects of the WTC described the collapse as "incredible" and "unbelievable." 96 Lee Robertson, the project's structural engineer said: "I designed it for a 707 to hit it. The Boeing 707 has a fuel capacity comparable to the 767." 97
>
> 2. The history of high-rise building fires provides no case histories of buildings collapsing due to steel beams melting from a fire.
> 3. The collapse of both towers were both perfectly symmetrical and methodical. The straight down collapse was identical in appearance to a well engineered, controlled implosion. A demolition company could not have done it better. Now that we know that all one has to do to bring a tall building straight down is set a fuel fire in it, the well trained experts who work for demolition companies should all be out of a job by now!

Even a layman with no explosives background should be able to see this. But many specialists in the explosives and structural engineering have also made this observation and commented on these inconsistencies.

After the WTC collapse, the Vice President of New Mexico Tech, Van Romero, gave an interview to the Albuquerque Journal. He stated plainly that he believed that the WTC collapse was too methodical and that explosive devices must have been placed in key points of both buildings. Romero said:

"It would be difficult for something from the plane to trigger an event like that. It could have been a relatively small amount of explosives placed in strategic points. One of the things that terrorists are noted for is a diversionary attack and a secondary device." 98

In that same interview, Romero revealed that he was in Washington DC when the attacks took place. He and a colleague were there to discuss defense research programs for New Mexico Tech. A few days after his interview, Romero abruptly changed his opinion and told the Albuquerque Journal that he no longer believed that bombs brought down the towers. 99 Romero, who relies upon the Zionist occupied Pentagon for funding, had suddenly flip-flopped and joined the "melted steel" theorists.

There is more than just my own common sense and Romero's expert opinion to support the belief that the towers were imploded from within. Several witnesses and survivors reported hearing bombs going off inside the World Trade Center. Louie Cacchioli is a firefighter with Engine 47 in Harlem, New York. Cacchioli told People Magazine the following:

> "I was taking firefighters up in the elevator to the 24th floor to get in position to evacuate workers. On the last trip up a bomb went off. We think there were bombs set in the building." 100

Now this whole controversy between the "melted steel" scenario and the detonation scenario is one that could be very easily resolved. All we have to do is dig up the steel beams and examine each and everyone of them. If an explosive device caused the steel to fail, there will be tell-tale indications for the engineers to see. But if it was intense heat that caused the steel to "melt" or "buckle", there will be tell-tale signs of that as well. All we have to do to put an end to this controversy is to closely examine the steel. Right?

Well, don't hold your breath. That's never going to happen. Thanks in large part to Time Magazine's "Man of the Year 2001", New York Mayor Rudy Giuliani, the steel beams were quickly recycled before investigators even had the chance to look at them! A media darling and lifelong supporter of Israel,

Saint Rudy Giuliani made sure that the "smoking gun" evidence was destroyed and right quick too. Much of the steel was recycled in America, but an additional seventy thousand tons of WTC steel was sold to Metals Management - a New York company with a jewish (Zionist?) president named Alan Ratner. Ratner then turned around and shipped the WTC's steel to China and India for recycling! 101

> China Radio International's English Edition also reported.. "New York's Metals Management is among the firms taking steel from the huge project to clear Ground Zero. The company says it has bought 70,000 tons of scrap from the ruined twin towers.
> Some of the scrap has been shipped across the Pacific to Asian, including China and India. Among the consignments of scrap are the "very dense" steel girders from Ground Zero, which could finally yield 250,000 to 400,000 tons of scrap for recycling." 102

Imaine that! The largest criminal investigation in history and the investigators weren't even permitted to see the most important evidence of all - the steel! During the time that Saint Rudy and Ratner the Recycler were destroying evidence, many of the most respected engineers in the country complained not only about the recycling, but also about the Federal government's suffocating control of their investigation.

On December 25, 2001, the New York Times ran a story about the frustrations of some of the engineers who were called in to study the cause of the collapse.. "Interviews with a handful of members of the team, which includes some of the nation's most respected engineers,

Also uncovered complaints that they had at various times been shackled with bureaucratic restrictions that prevented them from interviewing witnesses, examining the disaster site and requesting crucial information like recorded distress calls to the police and fire departments..." 103 (emphasis added)

They made their concerns known publicly. Bill Manning, editor of the 125 year old Fire Engineering magazine, noticed a strange difference between the WTC investigation and other major fire investigations in New York City's history. Manning wrote:

"Did they throw away the locked doors from the Triangle Shirtwaist fire? Did they throw away the gas can used at the happy land social club fire?...That's what they're doing at the World Trade Center. The destruction and removal of evidence must stop immediately." 104

QUOTE

One investigator told the New York Times.. "This is almost the dream team of engineers in the country working on this, and our hands are tied," said one team member who asked not to be identified. Members have been threatened with dismissal for speaking to the press. "FEMA is controlling everything," the team member said. 105

Dr. Frederick W. Mowrer from the Fire Engineering department at the University of Maryland told the New York Times.. "I find the speed with which important evidence has been removed and recycled to be appalling." 106

Finally, the Times story made this interesting little revelation about St. Rudy the Recycler.. "Officials in the mayor's office declined to reply to written and oral requests for comment over a three- day period about who decided to recycle the steel and the concern that the decision might be handicapping the investigation.." 107

It is a very odd form of science that the government and some of its house scientists practice these days. Without a shred of physical evidence, these modern-day alchemists have been able to "prove" their theory fire caused the towers to collapse. This appears to be yet another monstrous lie. Why else would you destroy the "melted steel"? Ask Rudy.

Right: Saint Rudy the recycler at a pro israel rally. He was also named "Man of the Year" by Zionist controlled Time Magazine..

The Miracle of Passover

Not just Americans were murdered on 9-11. Nearly 500 foreign nationals from over 80 different nations were killed in the World Trade Center. 108 As a center of world trade and finance this is not surprising.

> It is also commonly known that many Israelis work in the field of international trade and finance. The laws of probability dictate that among the nearly 500 dead foreign nationals, from over 80 different nations, there should have been a considerable number of Israelis.

The number of Israeli dead was suspiciously low, especially when we consider the report, contained in the September 12 Jerusalem Post, that the Israeli embassy in America was bombarded on 9-11 with calls from 4000 worried Israeli families. 109 George Bush had told the US Congress that he also mourned the deaths of foreign citizens including "more than 130 Israelis". 110

Bush was either misinformed or he was lying. The actual number of Israeli dead at the WTC was far less than 130. It was far less than 100. It was far less than 50. It was far less than 25. It was far less than 10. It was……. zero! 111A That's right! ZERO Israeli nationals lost their lives in the WTC while citizens from over 80 different nations, including such powerhouses of world trade and finance as Granada, Bermuda, Ireland, and the Philippines, all lost people in the WTC.

> *(ne Israeli was killed aboard each of the flights that crashed into the WTC, one who was visiting the towers on business was also killed.

We learned earlier about the employees of the Israeli instant messaging company Odigo, who were anonymously informed of the attacks two hours before they took place. 112 Even more intriguing than the Odigo warnings was the narrow escape of 200 employees of an Israeli government run company called Zim Israel Navigational. With over 80 vessels, Zim Navigational is the 9th largest shipping company in the world. Just one week before 9-11, Zim Navigational moved out of its World Trade Center offices with over 200 workers. 113A , 113B

Company spokesperson Dan Nadler said: "When we watched the pictures, we felt so lucky. Our entire US operations were run out of the 16th floor." 114A ,114B Zim moved to Virginia. Nadler added that the aim of the sudden move "was to save on rent". 115A, 115B Somehow the claim that a major global shipping firm, backed up by government money, needed to save a few bucks on rent lacks credibility. And oh what perfect timing!

> QUOTE

> So who tipped off Zim? Who tipped off Odigo? Who tipped off those Pentagon officials? Who tipped off those Israeli workers in New York? I think it's safe to say it wasn't Osama Bin Laden.

Left: Bush commemorates 9-11 at a December 11 White House ceremony. Israeli flag was used as his prop, Right: Zim Navigational moved out of WTC 1 a week before 9-11, claiming it couldn't afford the rent!

Framing bin Laden

Within minutes after the attack, a parade of politicians and "terrorism experts" appeared on every TV channel all claiming that the attacks were the work of Osama Bin Laden. The Bush administration claimed that it had evidence linking Bin Laden to the attacks which it would release to the public in a matter of days.

They never did. Just like they never provided any evidence that he blew up the US embassies in Africa in 1997. The entire case against Osama Bin Laden was based on nothing but the repeated claim that he was the culprit for the embassy bombings and for 9-11. Demands were placed upon the Taleban government of Afghanistan turn Bin Laden over to the US or face an attack, we established earlier that US military action had already been planned since June. 116A ,116B

>
> The Taleban offered to turn Bin Laden over to a neutral party, if the US provided any evidence to them that he had anything to do with the 1997 US African embassy bombings or the 9-11 attacks. The evidence was never presented to the Taleban for two reasons:
>
> 1. There was never any evidence, not even circumstantial
> 2. The war to replace the Taleban with a US puppet government was already in motion. The 9-11 attacks served as the perfect excuse, the "incident" to win the support of the American people and kick off the war.

Three months after the attacks, and with the bombing of Afghani peasants in full swing, the US had still not provided one shred of evidence to link Bin Laden and his Al Qaeda "network" to 9-11. People in foreign countries were beginning to ask questions.

Then one day, the Pentagon claimed that some unnamed source found a video tape in Afghanistan. The Bush gang began dropping hints in the media that this video shows Osama Bin Laden bragging and admitting his role in the attacks. How convenient! And how improbable. The "mastermind" of 9-11, who was so brilliant that he pulled off 9-11 without being detected, was careless enough to leave a "confession video" laying around to be discovered by the US!

The video was shown on the news with English subtitles. Bin Laden's voice was so barely audible that even viewers in Arab nations had to rely on the Pentagon's translated subtitles! An obedient American (Zionist) news media accepted the Pentagon story and translation without question. A few Arab media whores were even trotted out to vouch for the tape's authenticity. Aha! This is the "smoking gun" they assured us. But this too is another vicious lie.

On December 20, 2001, the German TV show Monitor (the "60 Minutes of Germany") found the translation of the "confession" video to be not only "inaccurate", but even "manipulative". 117 Dr. Abdel El M. Husseini and Professor Gernot Rotter made an independent translation and accused the White House translators of "writing a lot of things that they wanted to hear but cannot be heard on the tape no matter how many times you listen to it." 118

Even more compelling than the revelations of the European press are the actual images of the "confession video". Every photo previously taken of Osama Bin laden shows gaunt facial features and a long thin nose. The Pentagon video of Bin Laden clearly shows a man with full facial features and a wide nose. Examine the pictures side-by-side for yourself if you don't believe it. The differences in facial features will jump right out at you. 119

> Would the Pentagon leadership be capable of such deception? Why not?! They were capable of allowing 9-11 to happen weren't they? The Pentagon itself has even admitted the existence of a special department established for the purpose of planting false stories in the media in order to carry out strategic objectives.

The very Zionist and very pro-war New York Times broke a story in February 2002 which revealed that the Pentagon has plans to deliberately provide false stories to the press as part of an effort to influence policy. The Pentagon set up the Office of Strategic Influence (OSI) for this purpose. A Zionist Air Force General named Simon P. Worden was chosen to head this criminal effort. 120

Worden's boss is Douglass Feith, another dedicated Zionist who serves as Undersecretary of Defense for Policy. How dedicated of a Zionist is Feith? The Zionist Organization of America (ZOA) honored Feith and his father at an award dinner in 1999. So I'll let ZOA's 1997 press release you about Feith:

"This year's honorees will be Dalck Feith and Douglas J. Feith, the noted Jewish philanthropists and pro-Israel activists. Dalck Feith will receive the ZOA's special Centennial Award at the dinner, for his lifetime of service to Israel and the Jewish people. His son Douglas J. Feith, the former Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense, will receive the prestigious Louis D. Brandeis Award at the dinner." (121)- (Google usues enter: feith zionist organization award)

There you have it! The Zionist Air Force General who runs the Pentagon's media disinformation department, reports directly to a Zionist Pentagon boss who was a recipient of the "prestigious" Louis Brandeis Award. Brandeis, a former Supreme Court judge, was one of the key Zionist powerbrokers who helped influence Woodrow Wilson into joining World War I as part of the Zionist-British Balfour deal we learned about earlier.

> One year has passed since the 9-11 attacks and the FBI has not uncovered any Al Qaeda cells in the United States nor has it found any paper trail. The London Times reported.. "Thousands of FBI agents have rounded up more than 1,300 suspects across America since September 11, but they have failed to find a single Al-Qaeda cell operating in the United States...Tom Ridge, Director of Homeland Security could not explain why none had been caught." 122

In April of 2002, FBI director Robert Mueller - the same Robert Mueller who admitted that several hijacker identities were in doubt due to identity thefts- made this stunning announcement.. In our investigation, we have not uncovered a single piece of paper - either here or in the treasure trove of information that has turned up in Afghanistan and elsewhere - that mentioned any aspect of the September 11 plot." 123

Predictably, Directors Ridge and Mueller attribute this total lack of any evidence to the skill of the Al - Qaeda "terrorist network". If you've read this far you should know better. The reason that the US has been unable to uncover a shred of evidence to link Al Qaeda to 9-11 is because....Al Qaeda didn't do it!

Will the real osama bin laden please stand up? Left: Pentagon's "confession" video bin Laden Right: Known image of bin Laden.

Whistleblowers. Whistleblowers. Whistleblowers. The FBI agents who tried to prevent 9-11

The FBI's field agents are "the good guys". It's the ass kissing, spineless careerists at the top who have corrupted the agency. In the critical weeks and months leading up to that fateful day, numerous clues were picked up by loyal FBI field agents. Some of these agents were so alarmed at what they thought was an unfolding terror plot, that they tried to convince their superiors to investigate deeper. These agents were either ignored, threatened, or fired.

Each of these FBI agents thought that they were on the trail of an Arab terror plot and unless they've read this paper, they probably still believe so. We can forgive them their ignorance if they haven't realized yet that the trail they were on was not that of Arab terrorists, but rather Mossad agents impersonating Arab terrorists. (much more on that later!) The essential point is that these agents were on to something big that someone didn't want them to digging into.

There is FBI Special Agent Robert Wright. The public interest law firm Judicial Watch is representing agent Wright. Wright claims that he was met with retaliation and threats from his bosses and from the Justice Department who told him they wanted his probes to go no further. 124 Wright maintains that if his investigation had been allowed to continue, the attacks could have been prevented.

> There is FBI agent Coleen Rowley. The gutsy Rowley wrote a 13 page letter to FBI Director Robert Mueller in which she actually accuses the director of her own agency of "a subtle skewing of the facts". 125 Rowley's letter also charged that the agency refused to react to evidence of a pending terror plot.

According to Rowley the FBI's obstruction was so blatant that her and some of her fellow agents jokingly speculated that key FBI personnel must have been moles working for Osama Bin laden! 126 Rowley’s main point of contention was the agency’s failure to go after Zacharias Moussoui, the "20th hijacker", even after his flight school instructor reported his suspicious behavior to the FBI. Moussoui you will recall was the French Algerian who couldn’t speak French to his flight school instructor.

There is FBI agent Sibel Edmonds. Edmunds was an FBI wiretap translator. She claims that another FBI translator was working for the Mossad and that the Mossad also tried to recruit Edmonds to make phony translations for the purpose of misdirecting investigations.

When agent Edmonds refused, the Mossad threatened her safety! 127 When she brought these allegations to the attention of her superiors, she was fired for being "disruptive". The Washington Post briefly reported this story without mentioning the name of nation that tried to recruit Edmonds. The Post did reveal that Edmonds and the other translator "trace their ethnicity" to this certain "Middle Eastern" country. 128 Agent Sibel Edmunds is not an Arab. Edmonds is Jewish.

Therefore we know that the "Middle Eastern" nation which the Post chose not to name is Israel. (No big surprise there!) Sibel Edmonds deserves a lot of credit for defying the Mossad and blowing the whistle to her superiors. Instead, she was fired for her patriotic efforts, proving once again that Zionists are willing to hurt innocent jews.

There is FBI agent John M. Cole, program manager for FBI intelligence investigations covering India, Pakistan, and Afgahinstan. In the same Washington Post story about Edmunds, it was reported that Cole also wrote a letter to FBI chief Mueller warning him about lax security procedures in the hiring of translators. 129

Dedicated agents such as Wright, Rowley, Cole, Edmonds and others who have spoken anonymously, had to be stopped from going after "Muslim terrorists". If not so obstructed, they would in time come to discover that they weren't really Al Qaeda terrorists!!

Not only were investigations blocked before 9-11, but they continue to be blocked after 9-11. The cover up is so blatant that members of both the House and Senate Intelligence committees complains directly to CIA Director George Tenet and Attorney General John Ashcroft. The Los Angeles Times reported:

> "Lawmakers leading the investigation of intelligence failures surrounding the 9-11 attacks are increasingly concerned that the CIA and Justice department are actively impeding their efforts....The flare up centers on obstacles congressional investigators say the agencies have strewn in their path." 130

That's exactly what FBI agents Wright, Rowley, Edmunds, and Cole said happened to them when they tried to investigate before the attacks! By the way, did I mention that the FBI is under the jurisdiction of yet another Zionist named Michael Chertoff? Chertoff is the Director of the Criminal Division of the US Justice Department. FBI chief Robert Mueller has to answer to Chertoff. Perhaps that explains Mueller's highly pathetic, and highly revealing, speech before the Anti Defamation League's 24th Annual National Leadership Conference held in May of 2002:

"I have long admired and respected the work of ADL, and I appreciate your longstanding support of the FBI. I know that under my predecessor, Louis Freeh, this partnership reached new heights. . . . I am absolutely committed to building on that relationship. We in the FBI tremendously value your perspectives and your partnership. Your insights and research into extremism are particularly helpful to us, shedding light on the changing nature of the terrorist threats facing America.

Your support of hate crime and terrorist investigations, which are now front and center in the work of the FBI, is essential to us. And the training and education you provide for the FBI and for law enforcement have never been more relevant. That includes the conference on extremist and terrorist threats you are sponsoring later this month at the FBI Academy." 131

Just shoot me now! The FBI is in "partnership" with the Zionist ADL and relies upon this criminal smear group for "insights and research", and "education and training!" Didn't anyone ever tell FBI chief Mueller that when the FBI raided the California offices of the ADL in 1993, they found that the ADL had computerized files on nearly 10,000 people across the country,

And that more than 75 percent of the information had been illegally obtained from police, FBI files and state drivers license data banks? 132 Isn't Mueller aware that the San Francisco Superior Court awarded $150,000 in court judgments against the Anti-Defamation League in connection with this FBI bust? 133

>
> What other group in America could get away with not only stealing FBI files (a Federal offense!!!), but then becoming "partners" with the FBI? So why would FBI Director Mueller disregard the fact that the ADL is a criminal group that was caught spying on US citizens by his own FBI?

Why does Mueller ignore the "insights" of his own agents while thanking the criminal ADL for it's "advice"? It's because Mueller and his kind are empty, career minded "yes men" who understand that it doesn't pay to defy the Zionist Mafia. Ass-kissers like Mueller get promoted. Honest agents like Wright, Rowley, Edmonds and Cole go nowhere fast!

The Anthrax Letters: Another anti Arab frame up

On October 3, 2001, an Egyptian-American scientist named Dr. Ayaad Assaad sat terrified in a vault-like interrogation room at an FBI office in Washington D.C. It was not yet known that a pair of letters containing deadly anthrax had been mailed to NBC Newsman Tom Brokaw and US Senator Tom Daschle.

>
> Five people would die as a result of the anthrax mailings which had been mailed from New Jersey. Billions of pieces of mail were delayed, costing the US Post Office to suffer huge losses.
> The news media ran nothing but anthrax stories night and day. Politicians and commentators speculated that Osama Bin Laden or Saddam Hussein were behind the letters. Why was the FBI questioning Asaad?

Before the anthrax murders were committed, someone had sent the FBI an anonymous letter accusing Dr. Assaad of being a bio-terrorist with a grudge against the United States. 134 The letter was sent on September 25th - before the first anthrax case was even diagnosed. The FBI agents soon were convinced that the anonymous letter was a hoax and a frame up attempt. Assaad was cleared of suspicion and released. Assaad later told The Hartford Courant of Connecticut:

I was so angry when I read the letter, I broke out in tears. Whoever this person is knew in advance what was going to happen and created a suitable, well-fitted scapegoat for this action. You do not need to be a Nobel Laureate to put two and two together." 135 If we find out who would have wanted to frame Dr. Assad in particular, and Arabs in general, we will likely find out who was behind the anthrax murders. That the wording of the anthrax letters was contrived in such a manner as to frame Arabs/Muslims is so self evident that even a mentally retarded child could see through it.

Here is the wording of the Daschle letter.. You cannot stop us. We have this anthrax. You die now. Are you afraid? Death to America. Death to Israel. Allah is great." 136 And the Brokaw letter.. This is next. Take Penacilin now. Death to America. Death to Israel. Allah is great." 137

> Give me a break!!!!!!!!! Ask yourself: Who would want to frame Arabs? Who would want to link the interests of the US and the interests of Israel in the obvious way these ridiculous letters attempt to? Remember the Lavon Affair? Remember the USS Liberty? Remember the dancing Israelis? Remember Netanyahu's saying 9-11 was good for US-Israeli relations?

A good place to start searching would be the US bio-weapons lab at Fort Detrick, MD. The Ames strain of anthrax has in fact been traced to Fort Detrick, where Assaad once worked until he was laid off in 1997. After he was let go from Fort Detrick, Assaad filed a federal discrimination suit based upon the brutal abuse and harassment that he had endured from some highly suspicious co-workers.

In 1991, Assaad found an 8 page poem in his mailbox which became a courtroom exhibit. The poem had 235 lines, many of them lewd and sexually explicit, mocking Assaad. Along with the poem, the perpetrators left Assaad a rubber camel with a large penis attached to it! 138 This was an obvious attempt to mock Assaad's Arab ethnicity.

Assaad said that when he brought the poem to the attention of his supervisor, Col. David Franz, Franz kicked him out of his office! 139 Now these weren't immature college kids doing this. This outrageous emotional abuse was carried out by highly trained scientists who obviously wanted Aassad out.

> One of the scientists known to have been a leader in the horrible attacks on Dr. Assaad was Dr. Lt. Col. Philip Zack. Philip Zack was to "voluntarily" leave Fort Detrick shortly after Assaad brought Zack's poem and camel to the attention of his supervisors. 140 Strike one on Dr. Zack!

In an indirectly related matter, another Fort Detrick researcher, Dr. Mary Beth Downs told army investigators that on several occasions in January and February of 1992, she had come to work several times to discover that someone had been conducting anthrax research after hours. 141 Who could that person have been?

Documents from that 1992 inquiry confirm that an unauthorized person was observed on a surveillance camera being let into the lab at 8:40 PM on January 23, 1992. Who was this unauthorized person caught sneaking into the bio-weapons lab, during the same time period that anthrax research was being done after hours? None other than Lt. Col. Philip Zack! 142 The same Zack who was forced to resign a year earlier because of his horrible abuse of Dr. Assaad. Strike two on Dr. Zack!

Why would Dr. Zack and others have such an animosity towards Dr. Assaad? What would motivate him to help write a 235 line hate poem? What motive would he have to frame Arabs for the deadly anthrax murders? Well, some research into the name "Zack" reveals that it is a fairly common jewish surname, derived from the Old Testament "Zacharias".

> Dr. Zack is Jewish, and given his obvious, fanatical hatred of Arabs - we can safely deduce that he is a hard core Zionist. Strike three on Dr. Zack!

All of the above is public information. Assaad's 1990's legal proceedings, Dr. Down's testimony, the surveillance video of Zack sneaking into Fort Detrick one year after he had "resigned"- it's all there. The Hartford Courant exposed all of these facts 143 as did the Toronto Globe and Mail, 144 the Seattle Times, 145 and other publications.

Just the facts contained in Hartford Courant story alone should be enough to at least indict Philip Zack. So why didn't we see Dr. Zack's face on our TV screens? Why hasn't Dr. Zack been given a lie detector test? What forces in the media and the government are protecting Zack from being exposed as the logical prime suspect?

The plot thickens (and sickens) even more. It is not my intent to smear, defame, or offend jewish people here. But to not mention the ethnicity of certain players in this fantastic drama would be like writing an expose on the Italian Mafia without mentioning that it's major players are Italians. Remember, some of the Zionists' harshest critics are themselves jewish.

Dr. Assaad had been cleared and Dr. Zack was coming under a small amount of media and FBI suspicion. Enter, from stage left, one Barbara Rosenberg, a jewish environmentalist professor and political activist with no expertise in bio-warfare. 146

> Rosenberg suddenly went public with the claim that she knew who the anthrax killer was. 147 She was supported in this effort by another Zionist New York Times journalist named Nicholas D. Kristof, who openly called for the arrest of Hatfill! 148

Quietly and behind the scenes, Rosenberg began directing investigators towards an American scientist named Dr.Stephen Hatfill, and therefore away from Dr. Zack, The Washington Post confirmed that it was Rosenberg who helped put authorities on the trail of the innocent Dr. Hatfill. 149

The name of Hatfill trickled forth from the news media. In a matter of weeks, the trickle became a media flood. Dr. Hatfill became a household name. Hatfill called a news conference to protest his innocence. There is not a shred of evidence against him and he passed an FBI lie detector test. 150

The Zionist controlled media lynch mob, led by the evil Rosenberg and the yellow journalist Kristoff, continued to pursue and harass Hatfill. Dr.Hatfill may never be imprisoned, but his life and career have been destroyed by these false allegations and the media hype. Lt. Col. Zack is off the hook.

What these mad Zionist scientists and their media brethren have done to Dr. Assaad and Dr. Hatfill is monstrous beyond belief. It is clear that these anthrax letters were first intended to be an anti-Arab frame up with Assaad meant to take the blame. When that didn't work, these fanatical Zionists (who always stick together like glue!) put the media and the FBI on poor Dr. Hatfill‘s back, and wrecked his career and reputation in the process. Why hasn’t Dr. Zack been given an FBI lie detector test???? Ask FBI boss and ADL’ "partner" ; Robert Mueller!

Left: The anthrax letters, an obvious frame up attempt Right: Zionist writer Kristoff, an evil liar who tried to frame an innocent man.

Hundreds of Mossad agents running wild in America!

We talked at length about the five Israeli "movers", i.e. Mossad agents, who were arrested and placed in solitary confinement after they were caught celebrating the 9-11 horror show. We also reviewed how the Israeli owner of Urban Moving Systems - Dominick Suter - then suddenly abandoned his "moving company" and fled for Israel on 9-14. But there were still more Israeli "movers" in America whose actions raise serious suspicions.

In October of 2001, three more Israeli "movers" were stopped in Plymouth, PA because of their suspicious behavior. These "movers" were seen dumping furniture near a restaurant dumpster! When the restaurant manager approached the driver, a "Middle Eastern" man later identified as Moshe Elmakias fled the scene. 151

>
> The manager made note of the truck's sign which read "Moving Systems Incorporated" and called the police. When the police spotted the truck, two other Israelis - Ayelet Reisler and Ron Katar began acting suspiciously.152 The Plymouth police searched the truck and found a video.

The Israelis were taken into custody and the video tape was played at the police station. The video revealed footage of Chicago with zoomed in shots of the Sears Tower. 153 The police quickly alerted the FBI and it was also discovered that the Israelis had falsified travel logs and phony paperwork on them.154

They were also unable to provide a name and telephone number for the customer that they claimed to have been working for. These Israelis were up to some sort of dirty business, and you can be sure it had nothing to do with moving furniture.

On October 10, 2001, CNN made a brief mention of a foiled terrorist bomb plot in the Mexican Parliament building. They promised to bring any further developments of this story to their viewers, but the incident was never heard of again in America. But the story appeared in bold headlines on the front page of the major Mexican newspapers 155 and was also posted on the official website of the Mexican Justice Department. 156

Two terrorist suspects were apprehended in the Mexican Chamber of Deputies. Caught red-handed, they had in their possession a high powered gun, nine hand grenades, and C-4 plastic explosives, great stuff for demolishing buildings! 157 Within days, this blockbuster story not only disappeared from the Mexican press, but the terrorists were released and deported!

> The two terrorists were Salvador Gerson Sunke and Sar ben Zui. Can you guess what their ethnicity was? Gerson Sunke was a Mexican jew and Zui was a colonel with the Israeli special forces. 158 Can you say "Mossad?" The story in El Diario de Mexico went on to reveal that the Zionist terrorists had fake Pakistani passports on them. 159

Can you say "false flag operation?" The probable motive of this particular botched terrorist operation was to involve oil rich Mexico in the "War on Terrorism" The War on Israel's enemies would be a more accurate description. Mexico is no military power, but the psychological trauma of an "Arab" attack on Mexico would surely have induced Mexico to provide unlimited cheap oil to her American "protector".

With cheap oil flowing to America at rock bottom prices from Mexico, the US could better afford to break off relations with the oil rich Arabs in general and Saudi Arabia in particular. That‘s why the conspiracy chose so many Saudi identities to steal for the 9-11 operation..

In November of 2001, 6 more suspicious Israelis were detained in an unspecified mid-eastern state. They had in their possession box cutters, oil pipeline plans, and nuclear power plant plans. 160 The local police called in the Feds and Immigration officials took over the scene and released the men without calling the FBI.

The Jerusalem Post, 161 the Miami Herald, 162 and the Times of London 163 all carried this amazing story and all revealed how furious FBI officials were that these suspects with nuclear power plant plans were allowed to go free. Of course, the corruption riddled FBI would only have caved into Zionist pressure from the Justice Department’s Criminal Division boss, Michael Chertoff, and also from the ADL’s "partner", FBI boss Robert Mueller - who would no doubt have found a way to release those Israeli terror suspects too.

In December of 2001, the Los Angeles Times published the story of how two jewish terrorists were arrested by the FBI for plotting to blow up the office of US Congressman of Arab descent - Darrell Issa (R-CA), and also a California mosque. 164

Irv Rubin and Earl Kruger of the radical Zionist Jewish Defense League (JDL) were charged with conspiracy to destroy a building by means of explosives. This story got brief national coverage but quickly disappeared too. These Zionists sure love blowing up buildings and killing innocent people don't they?

In May of 2002, yet another moving van was pulled over in Oak Harbor, Washington near the Whidbey Island Naval Air Station. Fox News reported that the van was pulled over for speeding shortly after midnight. The passengers told the police they were delivering furniture, but because it was so late at night, the police weren't buying the story.

> A bomb sniffing dog was brought in and the dog detected the presence of TNT and RDX plastic explosives in the truck, great stuff for demolishing buildings! Both Fox News 165 and the Ha'aretz newspaper of Israel 166 Reported that the two "movers" were Israelis.

According to FOX news, throughout late 2000 and 2001, a total of 200 Israeli spies were arrested. 167 It was the largest spy ring to be uncovered in the history of the US. The Washington Post also reported that some of these Israelis were arrested in connection with the 9-11 investigation. 168 US. Carl Cameron of FOX News Channel did a excellent four part, nationally televised, series of investigations into this blockbuster scandal.

FOX pulled the investigative series after Zionist groups complained to FOX executives. FOX even went so far as to remove the written transcripts of the series from its website! In it's place was posted a chilling, Orwellian message which reads: "This story no longer exists." 169 Fortunately for the sake of history, the FOX transcripts were copied onto to many other websites and all four parts are available for your review. (see footnotes.)

The FOX series and other mainstream news media sources revealed that many of these Israelis were army veterans with electronics and explosives expertise. Many of them failed lie detector tests. FBI agents told FOX that some of their past investigations were compromised because suspects had been tipped off by Israeli wiretapping specialists.

It was discovered that Israeli companies such as Comverse and Amdocs have the capability to tap American telephones, great for blackmailing all those wife-cheating politicians! FBI agents also told FOX they believed the Israelis had advance knowledge of the 9-11 attacks, which certainly would explain why no Israelis died in the WTC, Still another US official informed FOX that some of the detained Israelis actually had links to 9-11, but he refused to describe the nature of those links. The FBI official told FOX's Carl Cameron:

> "Evidence linking these Israelis to 9-11 is classified. I cannot tell you about the evidence that has been gathered. It is classified information." 170

Then there was that small army of Israeli "art students" who were arrested for trying to sneak into secured US Federal buildings and staking out 36 Department of Defense sites. Some of these suspicious "art students" even showed up at the homes of Federal employees. 171 Ron Hatchett, a Department of Defense analyst, told Channel 11, KHOU news in Houston that he believed that the "art students" were gathering intelligence for future attacks. Here's an excerpt from the October 1, 2001 KHOU investigative report by Anna Werner:

"Could federal buildings in Houston and other cities be under surveillance by foreign groups? That's what some experts are asking after federal law enforcement and security officials - nationally and in Houston - described for the 11 News Defenders a curious pattern of behavior by a group of people claiming to be Israeli art students."

"Hatchett says they could be doing what he would be doing if he were a terrorist, sizing up the situation: "We need to know what are the entrances to this particular building. We need to know what are the surveillance cameras that are operating. We need to know how many guards are at this operation, when do they take breaks?" Says Hatchett: "This is not a bunch of kids selling artwork."

"A former Defense Department analyst, Hatchett believes groups may be gathering intelligence for possible future attacks. "Some organization, thinking in terms of a potential retaliation against the U. S. government could be scouting out potential targets and looking for targets that would be vulnerable."

And a source tells the Defenders of another federal memo, stating that besides Houston and Dallas, the same thing has happened at sites in New York, Florida, and six other states, and even more worrisome, at 36 sensitive Department of Defense sites. "One defense site you can explain," says Hatchett, "well that was just a serendipitous, …….. Thirty-six? That's a pattern." 172

A Federal memo stated that these art students may have had ties to an "Islamic terror group". 173 Remember the bombing of the King David Hotel in 1946, and how the "Arab terrorists" were actually Irgun terrorists? Remember the Zionist terrorists caught in Mexico with Arab passports? remember the official motto of the Mossad - By Way of Deception Thou Shalt Do War. Are you getting the picture? Can you say "false flag operations."?

> Before his excellent work was silenced, FOX's Cameron reported this amazing bit of information.. Investigators within the DEA, INS, and FBI have all told FOX News that to pursue or even suggest Israeli spying is considered career suicide ." 174

Did you catch that? If an investigator dares to mention Israeli spying, he has committed career suicide! And if a journalist like FOX's Cameron dares to bring this scandal to light, he is told to shut his mouth. If they persist, they may even be called "anti-Semitic" - a label which has served as the kiss of death for many a journalistic and political career.

This means that Zionist Mafia can do whatever it wants, whenever it wants, and however it wants - including orchestrating, financing, executing, and covering up the true story of events in the Middle East, the 9-11 massacre, and the ensuing "War on Terrorism" (war on Israel's enemies).

> QUOTE

> Now do you remember the Mossad's "warning" about the 200 "Al-Qaeda terrorists" said to have been preparing major attacks in the US? 175 At the time of this writing, we are one year into the largest investigation in American history, and not one of these 200 "terrorists" has yet to be uncovered. 176

200 Israeli spies were uncovered, among them many military members, electronics experts, wiretapping and phone tapping specialists, and explosives experts with the skill to bring down tall buildings. 177 Logic and common sense leads to the conclusion that the "200 Al Qaeda terrorists" were in reality, 200 Zionist terrorists sent to frame the Arabs for terrorist attacks and drag America into a war.

History repeats itself. But who will teach this history to the American people when the Zionists control the information industry? The Zionist Mafia and their ass-kissing careerist henchmen in media, government, academia, and business have all of the bases covered.

Front page of El Diario de Mexico, shows Israeli terrorists being escorted out of Mexican parliament building Right: Fox News alert televised report of two Israeli "movers" arrested in Washington state, explsoves residue detected in moving van.

Zionists want World War III

In January of 2001, 9 months before the 9-11 attacks, a well known economist and political figure with worldwide intelligence connections issued the following prediction:

"A new Middle East war of the general type and implications indicated, will occur if certain specified incidents materialize. It will occur only if the combination of the Israeli government and certain Anglo-American circles wish to have it occur. If they should wish it to occur, the incidents to "explain" that occurrence, will be arranged."

"Contrary to widespread childish opinion, most of the important things that happen in the world, happen because powerful forces intend them to happen, not because of some so-called "sociological" or other statistical coincidence of the types reported for the popular edification of the easily deluded. A new Middle East war, bigger than any yet seen, is inevitable under presently reigning global influences." 178

The man who made that prediction is the perpetual presidential "wannabe" Lyndon Larouche. Now Larouche may be a cult like figure with some really weird interpretations of history, but his intelligence contacts are legitimate and many of his political and economic forecasts have been accurate in the past. Considering all the history and recent events reviewed in this paper, and the logical conclusions which they lead us to, the above prediction was "right on the money."

The Zionists (and also Anglo-American Internationalist interests) do not conceal their desire for World War III, with American troops doing dying. They pulled off 9-11, turned us into Arab hating fanatics, put an American flag in our hands, and are marching us off to die for Zionism. Just read what Ra'anan Gissin - a senior adviser to and spokesman for Ariel "the Butcher" Sharon - said in an interview with the Arizona Daily Star in April of 2002:

>
> "The terror attacks on Sept. 11 and extreme turmoil in the Middle East point to one thing - World War III. We've been fighting a war for the past 18 months, which is the harbinger of World War III. The world is going to fight, whether they like it or not. I'm sure." 179

Here's another warmongering, inflammatory quote from Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, urging the US to attack Iraq.. Attacking Iraq now would be "quite dangerous, but postponing it would be more dangerous. The problem today is not if but when." 180

And here's another warmongering quote from an editorial that former Israeli Prime Minister Benjamim Netanyahu wrote for the New York Post headlined "Today We are All Americans":

"What is at stake today is nothing less than the survival of civilization.... I have absolute confidence that if we, the citizens of the free world, led by President Bush, will marshal the enormous reserves of power at our disposal, harness the steely resolve of a free people and mobilize our collective will to eradicate this evil from the face of the earth....

The international terrorist network is thus based on regimes - Iran, Iraq, Syria, Taleban Afghanistan, Yasser Arafat's Palestinian Authority and several other Arab regimes such as the Sudan. For the bin Ladens of the world, Israel is merely a sideshow. America is the target" 181

Note the ominous similarity between Netanyahu's lies and the first words that Sivan Kurzberg - one of the dancing Israeli "movers" - spoke to arresting police officer on 9-11:

> "We are Israelis. We are not your problem. Your problems are our problems. The Palestinians are your problem." 182

Recall Netanyahu's September 11 comment about the attacks being "very good" for Israeli-US relations. The title of the New York Times article which carried that comment was: "Spilled Blood is Seen as Bond That Draws 2 Nations Closer." 183

>
> Ariel Sharon used the same "linking tactic" in a speech before the notoriously defamatory, Zionist Anti-Defamation League..
> "There is a moral equivalency and direct connection between America's continuous operations against al Qaeda in Afghanistan and any other Israel Defense Forces operation to defeat terrorism, they are acts of self-defense against the same forces of evil and darkness bent on destroying civilized society." 184

Notice how Sharon, Netanyahu, the Israeli "movers", and the totally Zionist dominated New York Times and New York Post all used the same strategic tactic of linking the interests of the US with the interests of Israel. The same ploy was utilized in the anthrax letters: "Death to America! Death to Israel!". Do see how these evil Zionist bastards play the game?

They turn their enemies into our enemies while pretending to be our "allies". They laugh and celebrate as 1000's of innocent Americans are burned and crushed to death. And when someone dares to shine the light of truth upon them, they label you an "anti-Semite"! Can you not see that we've been played for fools?

>
> Behold this bit of bold hypocrisy by American Jewish Congress President Jack Rosen.. "I don't think Palestinians celebrating the death of thousands of Americans should go unchallenged." 185 ..Is that so Jack? What about the Israelis who celebrated the death of thousands of Americans. Why haven't you challenged that?
> Now read this quote from the Prince of Darkness himself - Pentagon big shot and Zionist fanatic Richard Perle.. "Neither the president nor the British Prime Minister will be deflected by Saddam's diplomatic charm offensive, the feckless moralizing of 'peace' lobbies or the unsolicited advice of retired generals." 186

Perle not only lays down the policy line for Bush, but apparently for British Prime Minister Tony Blair as well. And note how casually he dismissed the sound advice of those retired generals who warned that a war against Iraq was unnecessary. But what does Perle care! His kids won't be dying.

As always, it will only be the children of the flag waving masses, which Perle and his Zionist brothers and sisters see as nothing more than cannon fodder for Zionism, who will do the fighting and killing. What threat did Iraq ever pose to the US? None! Iraq, and other Arab nations, are to be crushed so that Israel can have a freer hand to expand in the Middle East.

It appears that George Bush goes along with the wishes of these Zionist gangsters for his own political protection and/or advancement, but it is unclear as to what extant he is truly in agreement with them. Bush and Cheney may even be under a some form of blackmail.

But they also represent oil interests and the Caspian Sea area is rich in oil and minerals. Plans have been in the works for years to build pipelines to take the oil from the Caspian, through Afghanistan and Pakistan, and then out to sea. The "oil angle" may be a secondary contributing factor behind the "War on Terrorism", one much nearer to the hearts of Bush/Cheney than the cause of Zionism.

It is clear from just the well publicized information that the president had at least some type of knowledge that a major attack was coming. Do you remember Bush’s strange behavior when he was first told of the attacks? He was reading to a group of Florida school children when his Chief of Staff Andy Card whispered the news of the second tower being hit in New York.

> Instead of just calmly excusing himself and apologizing to the kids for having to leave suddenly, Bush quickly shifted his eyes at the camera, turned somber, and then returned to reading for another 15 minutes! 187

Our major cities were under attack, 1000’s of his countrymen were burning or jumping to their deaths on live TV, and more planes were still unaccounted for. Yet Bush just sat there with a stupid look on his face and then went back to reading a story about a goat.

Is this the reaction of a man who was truly surprised by these horrible attacks? Or is this more indicative of the reaction of a guilty person who, like FDR just before Pearl Harbor, was expecting an attack and therefore was not surprised? 188

There is one more interesting coincidence worth mentioning. During the whole time that these terror attacks were expected, Bush was out of Washington DC on what the media had dubbed "the longest vacation in presidential history." Time Magazine of August 5, 2002 explains:

"Getting ready for a vacation can be so hectic. It certainly was for George W. Bush last week. While Laura Bush left the White House early to get the ranch in Crawford, Texas, ready for a month-long holiday (one of the longest in presidential history), the President rushed through some last-minute errands." 189

Bush was in Texas for the entire month of August, returned to the White House briefly, then left again and ended up in a Florida classroom on September 11. (What a tough job eh?) Is this of any significance? Well, I don't know about you, but if I had the kind of intelligence network and advance warning that we know certain people had- and surely a sitting US president would also have had- I would not have been in Washington DC on 9-11 either!

There are many politicians and journalists in America who "carry the Zionist's water" for them only because they are careerists who understand very well from whence their bread is buttered. My suspicion is that if Bush doesn't deliver a war against Iraq, and then WW III against other Arab states, Joe Lieberman may be installed as president in 2004, with McCain running as an independent to draw votes away from Bush.

Will Bush, like Wilson in WW I, and FDR in WW II, go all the way and deliver WW III to the Zionist Mafia? At the time of this writing it does appear that way. But if Bush should hesitate (like his father did in 1991) to "go all the way", the Zionist Mafia will try to replace him with Lieberman in 2004.

> Iraq knows who is behind the planned attack on their nation. In an interview with CBS's Dan Rather, Aziz accused the Zionists.. "This war which the Bush government is a planning does not serve the basic interest in the long run of the American nation. It serves the imperialistic interest of Israel and the Zionist groups who have now a great say in the American policy." 190

How sadly ironic it is that the Arabs know that the Zionist Mafia dominates America but the American people are oblivious to it. But who will tell the American people if the Zionists dominate the media too?

Left: Bush: "The World Trade Center will have to wait until I'm done reading about the little goat". (writer's joke) Right: Benjamin Netanyahu: "The attacks will be good for US - Israel relations."

Closing argument

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, we have established that the political force of Zionism is a dangerous supremacist movement, and that its leaders have always placed the interests of International Zionism ahead of the interests of their respective nations.

> We have demonstrated that this Zionist Mafia will send unsuspecting Americans to war to fight for their interests. We have seen how Germany and Great Britain were selfishly used for their purposes.

We have demonstrated the role played by Zionism in helping bring about some of the 20th centuries greatest disasters; such as World Wars I and II and the Treaty of Versailles. We have learned about Zionist massacres of unarmed Arab civilians and Zionist terrorism designed to frame Arabs and poison relations between the US and Israel's Arab enemies.

We learned about the awesome Zionist power structure that exists in America, covering the Congress, the pentagon, the mass media and more. We have established that the Zionists, through their media monopoly, have the ability to cover up and conceal some of the most amazing stories of both the past and present.

We have established a primary motive - to turn the US into a nation of Arab haters and Israel lovers eager to go to war against Zionism's Arab enemies. We have established a secondary motive - to brutally crush the Palestinian resistance under the cover of a major US war on terrorism.

> Sharon's tanks were unleashed on September 12 in a major escalation of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, because of the 9-11 attacks, few noticed and still fewer even cared.

We have established numerous precedents for these type of "false-flag" operations as well as cases of Israeli agents impersonating Arab terrorists (Lavon Affair, USS Liberty, Mossad agents caught with Arab passports, Muslim impersonators caught in India etc.)

We have established that the Zionists have the logistical capability and the opportunity to orchestrate such an operation - best intelligence service in the world, key positions of power at the Pentagon and in US intelligence, experts with explosives, access to WTC, access to Logan Airport and US Air and American Air, unlimited supply of money, able to thwart investigators with phony wire translations and US moles, etc.

We have established that the Zionist controlled media has the ability to cover-up the facts contained in this paper, even after the stories had initially penetrated their own media screens. We have established that the Zionists have the power to ruin the careers of US Congressmen, Senators, presidents, law enforcement officials, and journalists. Conversely, they also have the power to advance the careers of those who serve their interests. We have seen that they have the ability to block investigations as well misdirect and thwart existing investigations. We have established that the Zionists were the beneficiaries of the 9-11 attacks whereas the Arabs have been hurt greatly by the 9-11 attacks.

> We have exposed numerous lies linking Arabs to 9-11. We have established how evidence against Arabs was planted and contrived in order to misdirect investigators, wording of anthrax letters, phony passports, stolen passports,
> Korans and Arab flight manuals left conveniently behind for FBI filed agents to find in cars and "forgotten" suitcases, Atta‘a passport surviving the blast and floating down to earth, etc.

We have established that 7 of the 19 hijackers are alive and well. We have established that a small army of Mossad agents was caught planning terror acts in America and Mexico. We have seen how anxious the Zionists are to use 9-11 as a pretext to crush the Palestinian resistance and to have the US attack Iraq and other nations. We have established all of this and so much more. In addition, there is a plethora of even more damning facts which, in the interests of time and space, weren’t even included in this paper!

The only logical conclusion that a reasonable person can arrive at is this: The 9-11 attacks, the anthrax murders, and numerous other foiled terror plots, were planned, orchestrated, financed, carried out, and covered up by the forces of international Zionism. What other logical explanation can there be?

As incredible as this may seem, what other conclusion is there that can so neatly tie up all of the "loose ends" and mysteries related to 9-11? This is the only scenario into which the many pieces of the 9-11 jig-saw puzzle snap snugly together to reveal a clear image. Now compare this to the official explanation of 9-11, which requires us to force, bend, recreate, and manipulate puzzle pieces.

Even in the face of this mountain of facts, there will still be those who will go into denial and casually dismiss this whole case as just another silly "conspiracy theory". But the funniest "conspiracy theory" of all is the theory that some Saudi caveman and his "network" of Arab students managed to elude US investigators and pull off the most sophisticated intelligence operation in world history.

> You can continue to believe that fairy tale if it makes you sleep better at night, and if your sense of credulity can stand the burden!

Or, you can muster the moral and intellectual courage to free your mind from Zionist bondage and face the ugly truth for what it is. You can join the "extremists" and make a commitment to share the horrible truth with others, or, you can smirk, roll your eyes, and "pooh-pooh" everything you've just read.

Go back to your controlled TV news, pretend this problem doesn't exist, and let Messrs. Rather, Brokaw, and Jennings do your thinking for you while the world goes to hell in a Zionist hand-basket.. The choice is yours. History and posterity will judge your actions accordingly. To borrow a line from the Maximus, hero of the film Gladiator: "What we do in life, echoes in eternity."

A closing statement from the father of our country.

"A passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one nation the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter without justification.

It leads also to concessions to the favorite nation of privileges denied to others which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions; by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill-will, and a disposition to retaliate, in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld.

It gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens who devote themselves to the favorite nation, facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity; gilding, with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation."

> On Sunday 28th April 1996, a team of well-trained professional terrorists launched an attack on Australia. The lead terrorist entered the Broad Arrow Café, pulled a sawn-off Mistaravim AR-15 out of a bulky sports bag and opened fire on the unarmed diners. In just under thirty seconds, 20 people were killed and another 12 seriously injured.

October 2002

Of the twenty dead, the first nineteen were killed by incredibly accurate single shots to the head, all fired from the right hip of the terrorist as he performed a faultless moving pirouette down the length of the café, covering his own back while picking off his moving targets.

> QUOTE

> During the initial Café phase of the attack, the terrorist used only 29 rounds to kill or injure a total of 31 people. Subsequent forensic analysis proved that two of his shots scored “double”, i.e. each bullet literally “exploded” the head of one victim, with the resulting bone and bullet fragments continuing on to injure a second victim standing directly behind the first.

By firing only 29 counted rounds, the shooter ensured he still had a live round in the breech of the weapon to protect him during the two seconds he needed to fit a fresh 30-round magazine. This terrorist was a consummate professional who could never be taken by surprise.

By early the next day the Australian Government had all of these gruesome details, and knew very well that the overall carnage at Port Arthur and Seascape Cottage could only have been caused by a thoroughly professional team of imported terrorists. But despite this knowledge and absolute certainty at the highest of political levels, the mass murder was promptly blamed on a left-handed intellectually impaired young man by the name of Martin Bryant, whose shooting skills were limited to a single-shot Webley air rifle.

By noon on 29th April 1996 at the latest, the Government knew that Australia had suffered a horrific terrorist attack, and [should have had] no reason to assume the terrorists would stop there. Clearly, as was the case in Great Britain during 1940 when the Local Volunteer Force was formed and armed with 520,000 weapons to help combat feared fifth columnists in the United Kingdom, it was time to arm Australian civilians for defense.

Inexplicably, this did not happen. Instead, on 10th May 1996, the Prime Minister directly and illegally interfered with State Police Ministers, and ordered the disarmament of Australian civilians across the nation. In all, approximately 660,000 serviceable firearms that could have been used to defend Australia against terrorist attacks then and in the future, were confiscated, crushed, and melted down. Though it cannot yet be proved conclusively, but based on the bizarre actions of politicians after Port Arthur, the primary motive of the terrorist operation [obviously] appears to have been the disarmament of Australia.

Why did Australian civilians have to be disarmed? Again this is very hard to prove until events make the reasons self-evident, but it is useful to remember that even back in 1996, Wall Street was in serious trouble. During the mid-nineties with rapidly escalating costs, it was easy to foresee the day when certain giant multinationals would no longer be able to pay their greedy “investors” large enough dividends.

> What then? Experts in Wall Street suggested the easiest answer was to cut upstream costs, by stealing the raw materials that multinational corporations would normally be required to buy with investor funds.

Australia has a very small population, but is beyond doubt the world’s biggest open-cut mine, with truly staggering quantities of iron, aluminium, copper, zinc, gold, silver, diamonds and just about anything else you care to name. So Australia was an obvious target for a hostile Wall Street “takeover”, were it not for the hordes of armed civilians who might object to the massive theft.

As Wall Street knew very well, armed Australians are not people to be taken lightly, a fact noted by the Japanese High Command during World War II. Imperial papers released after the war confirm Japan intended to invade Australia, but dropped the whole idea after fifth columnists reported back on the huge numbers of armed civilians. In a nutshell, the Japanese High Command was confident it could take Australia's major cities, but would be unable to hold the entire country in the long term.

If you think the idea of a desperate Wall Street attacking Australia is absurd, take a very close look at Iraq. Using George W. Bush and the mythical "War on Terror" as fronts, an even more desperate Wall Street is openly planning to use the US military to invade and capture Iraq's oil. After that, the intent is to cut the oil-rich former Soviet republics away from Mother Russia, and basically steal the lot. Israel would get its usual ten-percent cut, and all will be well with Wall Street again. Or will it?

In order to give even the slightest semblance of credibility to its war plans on Iraq, Wall Street needed and still needs other "willing" [read subservient] nations to join in. Top of the list is Australia, with Prime Minister John Winston Howard ready and willing to illegally incite war against Iraq. Indeed, he had already done so almost countless times on Australian television.

The problems John Winston Howard and Wall Street faced during October 2002 were twofold and almost insurmountable. The vast majority of Australians voters were not prepared to engage in a Wall Street war on Iraq, and many of them had still not been completely disarmed, meaning they were still a very real hazard for treacherous politicians. Then, as if by divine intervention, the Bali Bombing just happened. As I wrote earlier in an earlier report about the event:

"It was precisely 11.30 p.m. on Saturday 12 October 2002, when someone somewhere pressed a button that sent a single coded radio-squirt to an underground aerial located in a monsoon drain outside the Sari Club in Bali. An unseen circuit closed and a primer fired, then one-millionth of a single second later, a terrible fireball formed under the street. Less than six inches in diameter and burning at a staggering 300,000 degrees centigrade, the fireball was a perfect shimmering sphere, made possible by 99.78% Plutonium 239 manufactured at Dimona in the Negev Desert."

southeastasianews.org/bomb_poster.html

On the night of the Bali Bombings Robert S Finnegan snapped this incredible photo, guy who had been "sunburned" by the Sari Blast, holds up a poster advertising the weekends party called: Ultimate Explosion Party in and around nightspots in Kuta, finalizing in the party grand final on Oct 12th 2002.. it shows two illuminated brightly burning bodies.and some concentric circles.

Targeted deliberately on a bar known to be constantly frequented by Australian [rather than American] tourists, the entire Bali nightmare was essentially a deadly Hollywood spectacular, designed to force Australian citizens to “follow their leader” into an American-led invasion of Iraq and the Muslim Republics. Despite the massive death toll in Bali, the scam failed to work. If anything, most Australians were even more angry at John Winston Howard for failing to protect Australian citizens abroad, and surprisingly few were buying the manufactured media garbage about “Muslim Terrorists” being responsible for the atrocity. Three days later on 15th October, it had become obvious in New York that these insubordinate Australians would have to be rendered less dangerous, by disarming them some more.

In a small book I self-published a few years ago called “Deadly Deception at Port Arthur”, I predicted that the mass murder at Port Arthur would not be the last atrocity on the road to Australian disarmament. Addressing the wider risks Australia would face if police failed to properly investigate the terrorist attack, I wrote, “Riding piggyback on the atrocity at Port Arthur, the lobbies and politicians are currently setting up Australian sporting shooters as internal redneck terrorists, and if no aggressive defensive legal action is taken,

I can confidently predict that within months or years another psyop [Covert Psychological Operation] will be executed in Australia; this time using semi-automatic handguns and revolvers, aimed at introducing legislation that will outlaw all such weapons for ever.” [page 54]

> At exactly 11.20 a.m. on 21st October, just nine days after the terrorist attack on Bali, student Huan Yun Xiang entered a tutorial room in the Menzies Building of Melbourne’s Monash University, loaded down with a total of four heavy semi automatic handguns and revolvers, plus a considerable quantity of spare ammunition.

Described by one witness as being in a “trance-like state”, Xiang then mechanically opened fire with a single semi-automatic handgun, killing two of the occupants and wounding another five. He was overpowered by staff, arrested by police, and remanded in custody to appear in the Victorian Supreme Court on 25th February 2003.

It was swiftly reported by media that Xiang was a “properly licensed” shooter, legally entitled to own a total of seven different handguns. Unsurprisingly perhaps, Prime Minister John Winston Howard then went on the public record saying he would ban “all seven types” of handgun, though Winston backed off a bit when he found that even the mainstream media had apparently lost its normally voracious appetite for endless gun control. Nonetheless, Winston was not to be denied his second bite at the gun control cherry, telling Radio 5DN that it was “Ludicrous that ordinary people in Australia should have access to handguns".

> The Prime Minister claimed he supported the concept of police and security workers having such weapons, "But other than that you don't need a handgun, and I think most people would agree with that.

If Winston Churchill had heard this pompous treachery, he would have turned in his grave. His pint sized antipodean namesake was psyching up the entire Australian population to be "vigilant" while looking for mythical "Muslim terrorists" who might attack the nation with guns, bombs, and perhaps even giant battle cruisers. Then in his very next breath, John Winston Howard clearly expected the good people of Australia to believe his absurd claim that "You don't need a handgun…"

Obviously the carefully orchestrated 'trigger' for this radio madness was the shooter at Monash University, but what was not reported about the shooter is probably the most important part of the story. Huan Yun Xiang was suffering from severe depression, and being actively treated by a Melbourne psychiatrist for the condition.

This was the same psychiatrist who was paid a vast sum by the Government to "help" three Port Arthur survivors, who were having a lot of trouble remembering the official government story about the Broad Arrow Café. After being loaded up to the gills with psychoactive drugs, and then subjected to multiple sessions of narco-hypnosis, all three made remarkable "progress", to the point where they could once again "remember" the gunman in the Broad Arrow Café was Martin Bryant, rather than a taller thinner man with an entirely different face.

As yet there is no hard evidence to prove that Xiang was "narco-hypnotized" into carrying out the murders at Monash University, but the firm possibility exists. I have taped and written documentary evidence of the remarkable mental changes this man brought about in the three recalcitrant Port Arthur survivors: extreme changes which indicate strongly that this man's obscene skills would certainly be more than a match for Huan Yun Xiang's conscious ethics.

> These incriminating documents are currently held in a safe deposit box, well out of reach of criminally negligent federal authorities, and will be presented at Martin Bryant's trial whenever that may be.

The gun control so desperately sought in Australia by Wall Street and treacherous local politicians, has absolutely nothing to do with public safety. Its underlying agenda and long-term goal is to facilitate external control by foreign multinationals, with the [assumed] added bonus of protecting Australian politicians and bureaucrats from angry Australian citizens, who will soon become furious.

New laws are currently being enacted in Canberra, which will allow for the arbitrary arrest and detention by the Australian Security and Intelligence Organization [ASIO], of any Australian "reasonably suspected" of having possible links with any group, which ASIO might suspect in turn of having possible links with alleged terrorists invented by Wall Street.

Corrupt Australian politicians and bureaucrats are now getting visibly desperate about their own survival, proved graphically by the "small print" in this legislation. What it literally allows for is the arbitrary arrest and detention of whole families for up to seven days on a single warrant.

Then, one minute after they have to be released at the end of the first seven day period, they may lawfully be arrested again on a second warrant for another seven days, and so on. Do not listen to ridiculous claims from the Australian Federal Attorney General's department that the new law is "protected" by "safeguards". No, it is not. The bottom line is that at a single stroke, politicians intend to remove the right to freedom that has underpinned Australian democracy since the very beginning.

This process was started at the covert level many years ago, as I found to my family's cost when I self-published my book on Port Arthur. The Federal Attorney General ordered that my name be placed in the nationwide Bureau of Criminal Intelligence computer database as a "security risk" to Australia, despite it being known in Canberra that I formerly held an extremely high NATO security clearance, and had no criminal record at all in any country.

> I found out about this illegal activity only when my children failed their "integrity checks" for jobs, based on the allegation that they were associating with a "known criminal" – their own father!

After a lot of hard work I managed to have the matter resolved, and was advised formally in writing that the blatantly false data had been "removed from the BCI database". But the moral of this story is not solely about what was done to my family and I by the Federal Government.

Recently when 26 large armed ASIO agents pinned an unarmed family of four civilians to the floor of their own Australian home at 5.30 a.m. one morning, they did so on the "reasonable suspicion" that the father might be a "security risk", because he had attended a religious lecture by an Indonesian cleric who Australia had recently and arbitrarily declared a "terrorist", despite a total lack of proof.

Direct comparison between the two cases proves that members of ASIO have not the slightest genuine interest in protecting Australian national security. By their actions to date, they have proved beyond reasonable doubt that they are employed solely to do the bidding of the Federal Attorney General and other politicians, whether that bidding is legal or not. ASIO members have thus become the latest in a long line of political "Thought Police", using whatever force might be necessary to crush community dissent.

The history books are loaded down with similar examples. Every ruler on earth [read politician in this case] has started out with the "interests of the people" as his or her stated aim, and then has slowly but surely forgotten his original manifesto and promises. It normally goes something like this: A powerful fellow comes up with some ready cash for the politician because he wants to take over the village next door. The cash is tempting, and anyway, who will notice that a small village has been given away?

The politician pockets the cash, and then finds that another fellow is offering even more cash for two villages on the other side of the hill. Why not? Without giving a thought to whether or not the villagers might actually want to be taken over, the politician pockets the cash and then quietly spends a little of it on two fine horses and a new chariot.
Several years pass during which the politician sells more villages, surrounds himself with paid secret police, and then the people down tools and refuse to work.

No problem! At the stroke of a pen the politician allows the new landowners to import foreign labor to do the work for less money, despite the fact that the imported workers have customs and behavior alien to those of his own villagers. When word reaches the politician that the villagers are threatening open rebellion, he orders his secret police to do the rounds and confiscate every scythe and pitchfork in sight.

> Bathed in a glowing but entirely false sense of security, he relaxes again. Just two years later the villagers overwhelm his secret police with their bare hands, play with the hated politician's body parts for a while, before finally impaling his severed head on a rusty spike.

This cycle repeats itself throughout history without exception. There is not a single policy maker on record who managed to control the angry masses by any means in the long term. History also tells us that the harder a politician pushes the people, and the more Draconian the measures he introduces to protect his own hide under the false guise of national security, serve only to rapidly accelerate his demise.

What is more, the mass attack normally happens so quickly that no security or intelligence on earth is capable of predicting or preventing it, no matter how sophisticated its equipment, and no matter how "clever" its personnel. A disenchanted & disenfranchised nation is a truly dangerous nation.

One excellent recent example would be Iran, back when the Shah sat on the Peacock Throne in Tehran. Loved to bits by his Wall Street backers, the Shah indulged himself to extraordinary excess, and handed over anyone who objected to the hated Savak, Iran's version of Australia's ASIO.

Savak already had the powers that ASIO are currently seeking, so had no problem knocking the prisoners around, or hooking them up to the mains electricity supply. The Shah and the American CIA were sure Savak could protect him forever, but they were wrong. When the Iranian Revolution finally came, it came with breathtaking speed. Within months, and despite them having "protected" identities like ASIO members, ninety percent of the Savak operatives were tracked down to their homes, where they were slowly butchered in front of their families.

> In equivalent terms today, Australian and American citizens are probably at the same point the Iranians were two or three years before they finally overthrew the Shah and Savak.

There is huge public dissent smoldering just below the surface, a reality reinforced by increasingly frantic attempts by government to disarm the citizens of both nations. The politicians have sensed the increasing risk, but have failed to see the harsher reality; a novel reality shoved right under their noses by a single man in America during the month of October.

For two long weeks, a sniper paralyzed three American States to the point where children were no longer allowed to go to school, workers were too frightened to go to the office, and drivers stopped refueling their cars for fear of being hit by a bullet.

> Whoever the real sniper was, it was certainly not John Allen Muhammad, the man arrested for the crime. The FBI jumped too quickly in this case, accidentally arresting the suspect before realizing that Muhammad no longer owned the .223 Bushmaster rifle named in the warrant, which was then waved around by police on national television in order to incriminate him.

Muhammad did indeed buy the Bushmaster cited in the warrant from Welcher's Gun Shop in Tacoma, Washington, but sold it back to the same store on 23rd May 2000. I confirmed this fact with the owner of the store by telephone from Australia, and was freely provided with the Bushmaster serial number.

Welcher's owner also stated the Bushmaster named in the warrant had subsequently been bought by another citizen of Tacoma, who still had it safely under lock and key. So the Bushmaster being waved around in front of the American media by the FBI, was certainly not the firearm originally owned by John Allen Muhammad.

We can safely set aside the actual identity of the sniper, for it is largely irrelevant to the lesson the sniper was teaching American citizens, and any other citizens who cared to diligently analyze the situation. His targets were of no particular religion, race, creed, sex or age.

Indeed, during the two-week period he shot men, women and children who were white, brown and black. Because of this apparently random [but probably planned] technique, the sniper denied government authorities any chance of a "psychological profile", thereby ensuring his continued freedom in the community. The sniper only ever fired a single shot at each target, thereby ensuring he avoided detection by sophisticated aerial surveillance platforms.

The main thrust of the sniper's lesson, seemed to be that of teaching governments and citizens alike that there is absolutely no point in confiscating 660,000 firearms from Australians or anyone else, when it is clearly possible for a mere handful of expert snipers to bring an entire nation to its knees.

Think about it people, think about it. This man single-handedly paralyzed three American States for two weeks, and could have continued for months if he had wanted to. How many American States are there in total? The bottom line is that this single man proved America could be completely crippled at will by no more than twenty expert snipers, each causing mass panic in his or her three designated States.

>
> Was the sniper wrong to teach Americans this lesson? Quite possibly. Was it cruel and unnatural punishment for the unfortunate targeted American citizens who had never harmed anyone? Yes it certainly was, but nowhere near as cruel as the proxy murder of 500,000 Iraqi women and children by Wall Street economic sanctions.

Nicola Calipari & Giuliana Sgrena

Nicola Calipari was already 220 yards inside Baghdad Airport's security perimeter when he received an incoming call on his cell phone. Calipari said "Yes?" and instantly recognised the positive ident trap.As Deputy Chief Calipari cursed & threw himself across Giuliana Sgrena to protect her, the kill team from Langley fired more than 300 bullets at their car.

I think it's absurd to make any such suggestion that our men and women in uniform deliberately targeted innocent civilians. That's just absurd," said White House spokesman Scott McClellan. If the American Administration wishes to prove that it did not order the CIA to intentionally ambush and then brutally murder Nicola Calipari inside the American security cordon at Baghdad Airport, all it has to do is surrender the bullet-riddled target car to Italian forensic authorities for detailed examination.

As countless television programs have taught us with boring monotony in recent years, forensic scientists will then be able to match the blood spatters from Calipari's horrific head wound suffered inside the car, with Calipari reference blood samples held in Italy. In addition they will be able to match the blood soaked cloth from the car seat, with blood from badly injured journalist Giuliana Sgrena, currently in hospital.

Perhaps the Americans could fool the Italians by switching the interior furnishings of the target car with another of the same year and make, but with far fewer bullet holes? Unfortunately for New York, this would not work at all. Atomized blood particles from high-velocity wounds like Calipari's get into every nook and cranny of the vehicle, rendering any car switch obvious to Italian forensic experts.

QUOTE

It was this advance necessity to hide the damning hard evidence of a premeditated 'saturation' attack on the car, that dictated the final selection of the killing ground itself: well inside the heavily fortified American defensive perimeter around Baghdad International Airport, and thus out of sight and range of cameras belonging to the Republican Guard and Mehdi Army, nowadays collectively known as "The Resistance".

All American checkpoints at Baghdad Airport are outside on the the approach road, where they are frequently filmed by Republican Guard soldiers and agents, indirectly proving Italian media claims that Calipari's car, "had already passed through all the checkpoints when it was attacked without warning". If the Italian vehicle had been challenged and attacked at one of these external American checkpoints, the Republican Guard [who had earlier accurately predicted the Americans would try to kill Sgrena and Calipari] would by now have spread pictures of the bullet-riddled car far and wide across al-Jazeera, Uruknet, and others.

Alas, the Republican Guard was unable to do so, thereby giving creative propagandists in New York time to deflect public attention to something markedly more tasteful, and

101% more believable as an 'accident'. As Fintan Dunne, Editor of BreakForNews.com points out:- "Right-wing bloggers are circulating a photo purportedly showing the car in which Sgrena Guiliani was wounded and her rescuer Nicola Calipari was fatally shot. The photo is being used to discredit Sgrena's account of the shooting. "It shows a four-door sedan which has only the driver's side window broken and no overt bullet damage to the bodywork. That contradicts the 'hail of bullets' described by Sgrena and others. And it boosts the US military's case that the incident was just a "mishap."

To round this point off nicely, I can predict with 100% confidence that the American Administration will never surrender the target vehicle inside Baghdad Airport to the Italian or any other forensic authority, because the automobile in question has already been torched and run over by a bulldozer several times, to remove even the slightest trace of forensic evidence: All this with the tacit consent of Italian Prime Minister and American Cheerleader Silvio Berlusconi. Case proved. In order to unravel the reasons why politicians in America and Italy wanted these particular Italian intelligence agents and Italian journalists murdered, you first have to understand that in Iraq there are two distiinctly different forms of "Hostage".

QUOTE

Nick Berg

By far the greatest number of hostages taken, are snatched by either CIA or Mossad 'black ops' teams, who then circulate and broadcast sadistic video footage of terrible atrocities they want you to believe were committed by "Evil Muslim Terrorists". Most famous of these ersatz hostage situations is probably the Mossad [allegedly Muslim of course] 'beheading' of Nicholas Berg, an unarmed prisoner who had not been sentenced to death by a court.

Though we 'Judeo-Christians' in the west arbitrarily murder unarmed and unconvicted men on government orders without fear of serious repercussions [e.g. Panama, Colombia, Serbia, Palestine, Iraq et al] , it is far different for those operating under even the most basic form of Islamic Law in a secular country like Iraq. If a pack of Muslims really was responsible for the murder of Berg, its members would themselves be ruthlessly hunted down, tried, convicted, and then legally executed by their own authorities.

The Mossad black op 'hostage' murder of Nicholas Berg in Baghdad Deliberate hostage taking is not something the Iraqi Resistance engages in, though from time to time it is circumstantially obliged to take prisoners for limited periods, normally to cover the withdrawal of its own forces from a combat area. Most famous of these is probably Thomas Hamill, a 43-year-old truck driver from Mississippi. By his own account, Thomas Hamill's broken arm was properly dressed by his Republican Guard captors, who did not torture, threaten or intimidate him in any way. Hamill was given an equal share of their meagre rations to eat, and later allowed to 'escape' in the general direction of an American convoy.

The Republican Guard is fighting for the very survival of its sovereign territory, and has no time or food to spare for entertaining American guests. Though much of this information may come as a surprise to many readers, it is no news at all to the Central Intelligence Agency and the Mossad. Because these two agencies control all of the propaganda 'false flag' hostage-taking situations, and because they know very well that the Iraqis do not take hostages at all, the 'kidnapping' of Giuliana Sgrena threw them into a spin. Clearly neither the CIA or Mossad had taken her, yet there she was on television pleading for Italian forces to be removed from Iraq.

QUOTE

Simona Pari and Simona Torretta

Naturally enough, coalition partner Italy knew how the CIA/Mossad false flag 'hostage' situations worked, and had actively helped the American propaganda along on two occasions in the past. The first was the joint freeing of Simona Pari and Simona Torretta, two Italian NGO workers kidnapped by the Mossad in September 2004, and the second involved four Italian security operatives kidnapped by the CIA.

Lots of excited screams and flash bangs, and massive psychological reinforcement of the myth that all Muslims are "Evil Terrorists". But the 'kidnapping' of Giuliana Sgrena was entirely different. It did not take long for American snouts to discover that the Italian Intelligence Service was heavily involved in this unique third-party 'hostage-taking' situation, but there had been no consultation with coalition partner America.

This was decidedly ominous, because the last time communication ceased between 'partners' in a foreign land, was when America invaded Somalia, and we all know what happened to American forces in Somalia after that. Finally coming to their senses, the Americans realised that Italian Intelligence had managed to engineer the very gentle 'kidnapping' of Giuliana Sgrena by none other than the Republican Guard, who were filling her head, her notebook, and her camera with hard proof of American war crimes in Iraq (especially in Fallujah), while Nicola Calipari liaised unseen in the background.

> It is most unlikely that Sgrena knew the true identity of her 'captors', but she must have realised that she was being used as a credible conduit to the outside world. Viewed through American eyes, Nicola Calipari was not only a spy and a traitor, but had seemingly also recruited one of the most dangerous journalists in Europe.

Though Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi personally owns and controls the biggest media empire in Italy, he certainly does not own or control the Communist daily newspaper "Il Manifesto", for whom Giuliana Sgrena works. There seems little doubt that Giuliana Sgrena was cynically using Nicola Calipari, and he was equally cynically using her, in what might best be described as a makeshift marriage of convenience, where each apparently remembered the old adage, "My enemy's enemy is my friend."

Giuliana was in Iraq essentially on behalf of the more than ninety-percent of Italian citizens who want their 3,000 troops removed from Iraq for humanitarian reasons, and Nicola was in Iraq on behalf of powerful "Old European" and other bureaucrats who also want those 3,000 troops sent home, though for slightly different reasons.

Since both groups desired the same end result, it is not surprising that the micro Calipari-Sgrena coalition was formed. Most European intelligence agencies have powerful factions that want their own sovereign troops removed from Iraq immediately, and Italy is no different fom any other. Thus before his death, Nicola Calipari, Deputy Director of anti-Mafia operations for Italian external intelligence, headed one of the most powerful factions of all.

> To him fell the direct task of getting 3,000 Italian soldiers home alive to their families, against the express orders of his 'democratically elected' Prime Minister and media mogul Silvio Berlusconi. By deliberately inserting Giuliana Sgrena into the Republican Guard, Calipari was doing the only thing dynamic enough to drive Italians out onto the streets again to demand the return of their troops.

Nicola Calipari knew very well that the Italian Intelligence Service could never go public and demand the return of the soldiers, because ordinary Italians would immediately smell a trap, though in reality there was none. Giuliana Sgrena was an entirely different matter. She was well known, respected, and had unquestioned credibility - especially after she returned home with accurate and terrifying details of American war crimes against the women and children of sovereign Iraq.

There were the awesome cluster bombs that had laid waste entire villages; giant AC130 gunships which rained death through the open windows of civilian houses, and laughing soldiers who burst into private homes to strip-search or machine gun the occupants. All of this and more in the sacred name of 'democracy' - New York style. Once more, driven on by the vivid images painted by Giuliana Sgrena, furious Italians would stalk the streets of Rome, demanding that 'New York Toady' Silvio Berlusconi bring the soldiers home from Iraq, and this time around, Berlusconi might be forced to comply.

Bush and Berlusconi

Nicola Calipari had made an inspired choice, but word had leaked out to both Bush and Berlusconi. The two elderly war criminals decided that the only way out of the mess, would be to kill both Sgrena and Calipari before they could actually leave Iraq. George W. Bush did not actually sigh a "kill order" of course, but got on the hot line to Langley, Virginia, where there are plenty of two-bit murderers who know exactly what to do, and how to do it.

In fact, the answer turned out to be quite easy. Nicola Calipari would be able to transport Giuliana Sgrena alone from a Republican Guard safe house just west of the "Green Zone" in Baghdad, but would then be vulnerable as he transited the American-controlled Baghdad airport on the way to a waiting Italian helicopter. There lay the critical window of opportunity, and the CIA rapidly assembled a kill team. For more than nine months, the road running from the Green Zone to Baghdad Airport has been the most dangerous in Iraq, and is completely off-limits to all coalition vehicles including heavy armor.

> The fact that Nicola Calipari and Giuliana Sgrena were allowed to travel this route unmolested in a thin-skinned automobile, proves they were under the direct protection of the Republican Guard, i.e. under the direct protection of the military representatives of the legitimate Government of Iraq.

In her own way and in her own words, Giuliana Sgrena has personally verified that her hosts were Republican Guard rather than "Terrorists" or "Insurgents", though at the time she might not have realised the implications of what she was saying, after arriving home wounded and dazed in Italy. Italy's La Stampa daily newspaper reported that Sgrena confirmed on Sunday she had been voluntarily released by her kidnappers. "They (the kidnappers) never treated me badly but I wish things had gone better last night [at the airport] ," the exhausted journalist told colleagues of left-wing daily Il Manifesto who greeted her inside the plane.

Most crucial of all was the statement that Giuliana, "had been warned by her captors that the Americans didn't want her to get out of Iraq." Apart from the Americans themselves, the only people in Iraq who could possible have received intercepted electronic fragments of the plan to kill her, would be the Republican Guard via its active contacts at Russian GRU Sigint (Signals Intelligence).

At present, only the Russians can crack American codes. Despite the overwhelming publicity after her return to Italy, Giuliana Sgrena is not yet out of danger. One of the Italian Prime Minister's privately owned media outlets put it rather coyly like this: "An Italian Cabinet member urged Sgrena, who writes for a communist newspaper that routinely opposes U.S. policy in Iraq, to be cautious in her accounts and said the shooting would not affect Italy's support for the Bush administration."

> The statement was factually correct, but the media outlet discreetly forgot to mention the name of the "Cabinet member" who warned Sgrena, which. when you come to think about it, is a very strange omissiion. So, why make the omission at all? Perhaps the omission was made because the Cabinet member involved was Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi himself, who also happens to own the media outlet, and thus controls all staff jobs and pensions.

Berlusconi is a bully who has no time at all for truth in reporting, and his employees swiftly learn that their job is to broadcast only what he tells them to broadcast. Fascist dictators like Silvio Berlusconi (left picture) do not make a habit of rushing aboard executive jets to welcome home left wing communist journalists. This was the point at which Wall Street's Berlusconi crudely hinted that the Il Manifesto reporter had better shut up or else. Badly wounded in both the shoulder and lung as she was, this encounter would have been unquestionably intimidating for Giuliana Sgrena.

Then, to prove that Sgrena was effectively a prisoner in her own country, Berlusconi had her moved to a military rather than civilian hospital. Asking why George W. Bush felt entitled to order the deaths of Nicola Calipari and Giuliana Sgrena is pretty much a waste of time. At his morning prayer meetings in the White House, George frequently hints that his Talmudic God has given him permission to kill whoever he likes whenever he likes, in an ongoing 'holy crusade' to bring 'democracy' (Wall Street hegemony and slavery) to the 'autocratic' and 'dictatorial' people of the Middle East.

Condoleeza Rice

By any reasonable psychological standard, George W. Bush is barking mad - the sad product of basic intellectual weakness, an inability to fly Air National Guard jets, premature ejaculation, and creeping but unstoppable megalomania. He is surrounded by obsequious fools including that "brilliant mind" Condoleeza Rice (New York Times), who by her criminal incompetence as National Security Advisor, has brought America to its economic knees. If this is brilliance, how much more of it can America afford?

Though European politicians like Blair of Britain and Berlusconi of Italy are adoring fans of George and his 'religious enlighenment', increasing numbers of hard-headed European bureaucrats are not. Their intelligence officers in particular have seen the unspeakable level of American savagery in Iraq, and in turn have increasing worries about long term security in Europe and the Middle East.

The Europeans are no strangers to war crimes, and comitted thousands of their own during the colonial era, but the problem here is one of scale. Chopping a few hundred colonial natives for disobedience was bad enough, but not in the same class as murdering more than 45,000 Iraqi women and children with custom-designed fragmentation bomblets, and laying waste the entire City of Mosques (Fallujah) with every heavy weapon known to man. Joe Stalin would have been proud, but the European intelligence agencies are not amused.

Though it took a long time, the European agencies finally came to realize what the Russians already knew before the first American soldier crossed the Crusader 'start line' in Kuwait: Iraq was a heavily baited trap designed to utterly destroy America and the Jewish State, and the only hope for the future of Europe and the Middle East together, was direct dialogue between European agents and the legitimate Government of Iraq, in this case represented by the commanders of the Republican Guard. Crusader George practices finger pointing in a mirror This was what Nicola Calipari's mission was all about. First re-establish a dialogue and working relationship with the Republican Guard, and then find a way of getting Italy's troops home to their families by bringing intolerable public pressure to bear on Berlusconi.

> Though it is sadly posthumous, Calipari's mission can be justifiably claimed a success. Nor is Calipari the only European agent who has talked to the Republican Guard. By mid-2005 all of the Europeans will be out of Iraq, and the only people stupid enough to send more sacrificial troops into the killing fields for America, are dim-witted obsequious Australian politicians in Canberra.

The Europeans have only just acted in time. George is now in crusader overdrive, blindly ordering Syria to pull its troops out of Lebanon, supported only by a thousand flag-waving Maronite Christians in Beirut, each paid $50.00 per day by the frightened Jewish State to attend this phony demonstration for 'democracy'. Bush then completely ignores the counter demonstration by 250,000 unpaid Lebanese, all telling him in no uncertain terms to "F... Off", and "Stay out of our country".

Best forget the whole thing and go home George! Wall Street's attempt to invade, occupy and control all ol-bearing Middle East countries has failed, and there will noe never be fashionable little Jewish Settlements scattered across the hilltops from Gaza to Abadan. In the fullness of time, the Syrian-Lebanese hammer will descend on the illegal Jewish State, and crush it completely. A blanket of welcome peace will then descend over Europe and the Middle East for more than a century, with the memory of savage America merely an unpleasant but steadily receding dream

> Deliberately restricting your potassium intake makes you very ill, and thus vulnerable to hundreds of highly profitable medical "cures," the title immediately suggests to the reader that a giant pharmaceutical atrocity has been inflicted on the poor natives of some far off third-world country, by a predictably greedy drug multinational, but this is simply not the case.

By far the largest number of deaths and permanent crippling disabilities from potassium deficiency occur in America, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and several other western nations. How this horrific state of affairs came into being and was perpetuated thereafter, is a very long and frequently confusing story, meaning that we must start at the very beginning if we are to have any real chance of understanding the lethal implications.

We first need to understand what potassium is, how much our bodies need on a daily basis to stay healthy, and what happens to us when our body's critical store of potassium is inadvertently or deliberately depleted. Unlike toxic sodium [table salt], potassium is essential to our health. Potassium is present in all cells and is critical to cardiovascular and nerve function, regulating the transfer of nutrients into cells and facilitating muscle energy. This wonder mineral also regulates water balance, assists recuperative powers, and aids rheumatic or arthritic conditions by causing acids to leave the joints, thereby easing stiffness.

> QUOTE

At the same time..

* Potassium is vital for the elimination of wastes

* It iss a natural pain desensitizer

* Helps control convulsions, headaches and migraines

* Promotes faster healing of cuts, bruises and other injuries

Because of its very high electrochemical activity, potassium is on the move all the time, and we need vast quantities to replenish that lost every day. When we exercise and sweat, we lose potassium through urine. When we are under extreme stress for a variety of other reasons, potassium loss can treble instantly.

As renowned nutritionist Adelle Davis points out, it is toxic sodium that causes the greatest problems.. Persons eating [sodium] salt as they wished, excreted nine times more potassium than when their salt intake was limited, and human volunteers kept on diets deficient in potassium, retained so much salt that they developed high blood pressure. If Mother Nature was to deprive you of potassium completely, hard scientific evidence proves you would be dead in less than three weeks.

In many ways this would be a merciful release when compared with the infinitely more painful and far slower death caused by slow potassium deprivation, the preferred method of the FDA American Food & Drug Administration, and AMA American Medical Association. Proper scientists agree the daily potassium requirements of an average adult lie between 3,200 and 4,100 milligrams, but the average potassium intake of Americans through the food chain is only 1,500 to 2,100 milligrams per day, representing an overall average shortfall of 1,850 milligrams.

QUOTE

Obviously humans can survive at these savagely depleted levels, because Americans manage to eke out about 70 years each, before this basic potassium deficiency overwhelms them and they finally die, sometimes in great pain from a number of directly related illnesses including,

* Arthritis

* Osteoporosis

* Hypertension [high blood pressure]

* Angina

* Strokes and so on....

It is scientifically beyond question that all would live longer and suffer less pain if they received the necessary quantity of potassium each day, which is where the American Food & Drug Administration should do a John Wayne job, and ride gallantly > to the rescue.

Alas, the Food and Drug Administration has not and will not do so, because of sustained lobby pressure by the pharmaceutical multinationals. Despite having full and unrestricted access to the real scientific data providing hard proof of widespread potassium deficiency bordering on a pandemic, the FDA has deliberately avoided specifying a "Recommended Dietary Allowance" [RDA], while simultaneously passing a law restricting the potassium content of all alternative medicines to a mere 100 milligrams.

This is your first clue to understanding how it is that we get so ill, and then willingly swallow billions of dollars worth of useless 'patent medicines'. Remember, just to keep up with the average shortfall of 1,850 milligrams of potassium per day, you would need to swallow at least 19 pills from your local health food shop, and no ordinary person could possibly afford that in the long term.

In order to keep their medical doctors in line, both the FDA and AMA have circulated a number of truly frightening stories about potassium. Most common among them is that the potassium will 'react' with one of a wide range of synthetic pharmaceutical medicines, frequently resulting in death. This is actually true, but it is the poisonous synthetic medicine which causes the lethal cross reaction that kills you, not the natural potassium so essential to your health.

> Then there is the even scarier rumor that 'too much' potassium will kill you by stopping your heart from beating, as in the case of a lethal injection execution.

Too much of almost anything will kill you, including simple water and air, especially if applied too quickly or by the incorrect route. When Timothy McVeigh was strapped to a gurney and put to death, the third chemical injected directly into his vein was a 'chaser' containing 50 milliliters of concentrated potassium chloride, which finally stopped his heart.

If you are stupid enough to try this at home, you will die just as quickly, and in order to put this deliberate FDA and AMA scare mongering into the proper perspective, it is necessary to explain why, the normal route for potassium to enter the body is by way of the mouth, either in the form of food, or sometimes as a solution made up of 100% water soluble potassium chloride dissolved in fruit juice.

As the potassium passes through the digestive tract, the cells extract what they need and any excess is then passed out of the body, partly as solid waste, but mostly through the kidneys as urine. It is a perfectly normal biochemical process that the body itself knows how to handle very well, without any outside help from medical doctors. However, if you inject the potassium directly into a vein, you bypass the body's biochemical safety processes and stop the heart.

Exactly the same can be said of concentrated hydrochloric acid, always present in our stomachs in order to digest food, but incapable of harming us because of the body's sophisticated biochemical defenses. However, if you injected this same concentrated hydrochloric acid from the stomach directly into a vein, you would die even more quickly than you would from injecting potassium.

>
> You can only be scared by a medical doctor if you allow yourself to be scared, and you will no doubt gain added confidence where potassium is concerned later in this report, when we examine the extraordinary case of the Yanomami Indians of South America.

The Yanomami were fortunate enough to escape the attention of western medical 'science' for thousands of years, and still shun it now. These fascinating people receive virtually no sodium [table salt] at all, but every adult consumes around 8,500 milligrams of potassium every day. They are incredibly fit and have no history whatever of arthritis, osteoporosis, hypertension [high blood pressure], angina or stroke.

We will return to the Yanomami a little later on.. Far too many of the 'illnesses' we suffer today can be laid at the door of potassium deficiency, though hordes of pharmaceutical and medical apologists will probably reject this, claiming that medical 'research' proved long ago that simple deficiency cannot cause life-threatening conditions. Sadly the apologists will be defeated by historical fact, chronicled long before your local pharmaceutical multinational decided to use your body as a private playground for the benefit of its shareholders.

> Scurvy is caused solely by Vitamin C deficiency, and is thus predictably cured quickly by large quantities of Vitamin C.

There are thousands of documented cases, especially in the British Royal Navy, where sailors became known as "Limeys" because of the vast amounts of citrus fruit provided free by The Admiralty. Rickets is less well known, but is caused by a deficiency of Vitamin D, rapidly corrected by the generous application of Vitamin D and calcium.

Embarrassing though this may be for modern pharmaceutical salesmen and medical doctors, these bald facts are there in the history books for all to see.. So why not admit potassium deficiency? The beginning of the end for obtaining essential minerals from fruit and vegetables happened in the middle of the 19th Century, when German chemist Baron Justus Von Liebig analyzed human and plant ash, and determined that nitrogen, phosphorus, and potassium [NPK] were all the minerals plants needed.

He claimed that if fed synthetically to plants, farmers could force plants to grow and support healthy humans. Thus Von Liebig became the father of synthetic manure, which in turn spawned superphosphate, the mother of all deceptive fertilizers.

Though NPK and superphosphate are able to create a synthetic soil environment sufficient to stimulate plant growth, the resulting fruits and vegetables are always seriously deficient in trace minerals, with some containing none at all. Baron Von Liebig watched the deficiencies his invention caused with horror, and recanted before he died, but it was all too late. By then, the big investors had moved in for a quick kill.

Running in tandem with the depletion of potassium in fruit and vegetables during the 19th Century was an even bigger problem. Until then, salt of any kind had been so highly valued on most continents, that at one point in history it was actually used as money. In Europe, Asia and Africa most of the salt moved by the camel trains over thousands of miles was sylvite, otherwise known as potassium chloride.

> QUOTE

Great chunks of sylvite were dotted along the trading routes for the beasts of burden to lick at, thereby restoring their electrolytes lost through sweating and other exertion. But when the railroads opened up America from east to west, they started carrying vast quantities of cheap salt produced in giant pans on the two coasts.

Unfortunately for Americans this was sea salt, comprised of 98.8% sodium chloride, the favorite of fishes but a deadly enemy of man. And so it was that in less than seventy years, western man had his healthy potassium replaced almost entirely by unhealthy sodium.

It was not until the early 20th Century that medical 'science' started to determine what it considered were healthy 'normal' levels for blood pressure, serum potassium and so on, using data drawn from the population as a whole. The problem is that medical 'science' was by then dealing with seriously damaged human beings, who had already been subjected to the ravages of sodium for nearly fifty years.

So what seemed normal to American medical 'researchers' in the early 20th Century, would have horrified the Yanomami or any other self-respecting tribe one hundred years earlier. Because American medicine got off on the wrong foot, it stayed on the wrong foot, and slowly built a giant pyramid of myths based largely on ignorance and fatally flawed biochemistry.

Despite the best efforts of the fledgling pharmaceuticals and medical 'science' in general to belittle the problems, by the nineteen thirties it had become obvious to most Americans that something was seriously amiss with their soils, with their crops, and with their rapidly deteriorating personal health. During the 2nd Session of the 74th Congress in 1936, the United States Senate published Document #264, which really laid the problems facing American nutrition on the line.

Verbatim extracts from Document 264 are provided at the bottom of this page, but for the specific purposes of this report, here are the three most important paragraphs. The alarming fact is that foods [fruits, vegetables and grains] now being raised on millions of acres of land that no longer contain enough of certain minerals are starving us - no matter how much of them we eat.

No man of today can eat enough fruits and vegetables to supply his system with the minerals he requires for perfect health because his stomach isn't big enough to hold them." The truth is that our foods vary enormously in value, and some of them aren't worth eating as food... Our physical well-being is more directly dependent upon the minerals we take into our systems than upon calories or vitamins or upon the precise proportions of starch, protein or carbohydrates we consume."

It is bad news to learn from our leading authorities that 99% of the American people are deficient in these minerals, and that a marked deficiency in any one of the more important minerals actually results in disease. Any upset of the balance, any considerable lack or one or another element, however microscopic the body requirement may be, and we sicken, suffer, shorten our lives."

QUOTE

Sixty eight years ago, the American Government knew full well the problems facing the people, but the stuffed-shirt medical fraternity did absolutely nothing to help.

In fact, driven ever onwards by the extravagant fiscal needs of pharmaceutical shareholders, medical 'science' and its subordinate doctors stood reality on its ear, and proceeded to steadily undermine what little good health the general community had left. Learned doctors published papers on the 'potassium-sodium balance needed by all humans', when a quick field trip to almost any Indian Reservation would have reversed their absurd findings in seconds.

More and more sodium found its way into every kind of food imaginable, and blood pressures started to rise sharply. By the nineteen-forties, relatively new diseases such as arthritis, hypertension and angina started to climb through the roof, to be met with a veritable shock wave of expensive 'patent medicines' to help with the new 'disease' problems.

A handful of alert doctors recognized the problem for what it really was, and started giving their patients massive doses of potassium [between 5,000 and 20,000 milligrams per day] in order to bring their blood pressures back down to normal, and to relieve problems with angina and other heart complaints. In fact these treatments were entirely successful, but the use of a basic mineral that could not be patented by the pharmaceutical companies was frowned on, and medical research grants in this field mysteriously started to dry up.

By the late sixties such research has been suppressed, as you can see from the [limited] general references provided at the bottom of this page.

The pharmaceutical multinationals were by now exerting increasing pressure on the medical fraternity, providing all kinds of 'assistance' during their university training, with copious quantities of fancy-sounding scholarships and research grants. Both were vital in helping to get medical doctors to "see things the right way", meaning of course that profitable drugs were the answer to all ills.

As more doctors peddled more drugs to their patients, pharmaceutical corporate profits rose sharply, allowing perks for the doctors to be extended to include 'training seminars' at luxury hotels and golf complexes, along with other varied forms of discreet bribery.

By the seventies, all meaningful references to serious mineral deficiencies had been removed from the curriculum, with medical students taught that patients could obtain all the minerals they needed from a diet rich in fruit and vegetables, although their university tutors knew this was a complete lie. Deficiencies manifesting as cramps, arthritis, osteoporosis, hypertension, angina and strokes etc, became 'diseases' that could be treated by a truly dazzling array of brightly colored and highly profitable pharmaceutical drugs.

It was all a terrible illusion of course, but the show had to go on. As toxic sodium increasingly overwhelmed healthy potassium, the resulting potassium deficiency caused hardening of the cardio vascular system, and 'essential hypertension' [high blood pressure of 'unknown' origin] became the order of the day. Incidences of angina, stroke and heart attack increased dramatically, as did stress, with the latter feeding on the former.

> Because of a lack of space, this report will only cover the effects of potassium deficiency on the cardio-vascular system. Other directly related horrors such as arthritis, osteoporosis, diabetes etc. will have to wait for another day.

Modern medical 'science' has tried to explain away the critical and frequently lethal human sodium-potassium imbalance with an artfully designed theoretical model generally referred to as the 'Potassium Pump', in which the medical buzzword is 'balance'. To quote one medical article, Potassium is pumped into the cell by active transport systems, which concomitantly pump sodium out of the cell. The preferential segregation of sodium and potassium across the cell's biological membrane is important in maintaining osmotic balance".

What osmotic balance? ..The Yanomami and other tribes prove that ancient man had no need for toxic sodium, proving to all but a certifiable cretin that the potassium pump is an emergency one-way biochemical protective mechanism, designed to drive toxic sodium out of the cells before it can cause mayhem and premature death.

Despite the Yanomami's overall levels of sodium being incredibly low, researchers who examined more than 10,000 of these cheerful people found that there was a direct correlation between marginally increased sodium intake and increased blood pressure. "A a highly significant statistical relationship was observed between sodium excretion and systolic blood pressure for the 10,079 participants. The higher the urinary sodium excretion [and, therefore, the sodium intake], the higher the blood pressure."

> The reader should remember that for the Yanomami Indians, normal blood pressure averages out at 95/60 and does not increase with age.

Try comparing this with the AMA western 'normal' blood pressure of 120/80, which then goes up in incremental steps as you ingest more sodium and lose more potassium while getting older. Of course, the medical apologists will claim this is because we are more civilized, have evolved, and are thus 'different', but rest assured this is pathetic rubbish.

The only significant difference between the Yanomami and Americans or Australians, is that the Yanomami are stuffed full of healthy potassium, while we are stuffed full of toxic sodium. The researchers also noted that another benefit for the Yanomami related to their lack of obesity. Adults of industrialized populations have an increase in weight with age. The Yanomami Indians did not increase their weight with age.. Short, but to the point. Somebody remind me to add "obesity" to my shopping list of potassium deficiency related ailments.

Those western ladies with a slight weight problem, should resist the temptation to pack their bags and rush off to the headwaters of the Orinoco River, Yanomami husbands are hot on protocol, and do not take kindly to the lady of the house sneaking off into the bushes for a quickie with one of the young bucks. If caught in such a situation, the wife can expect her husband to fire a sharp hunting arrow into the fleshy part of her buttocks. Not enough to kill, but certainly enough to stop her lying on her back for several weeks thereafter. Some choose to call this behavior "barbaric", while others suggest that it merely reinforces strong family values.

> And oh, yes, before I forget, the favorite supper dish is barbecued frog.Of course, to prove that any of this Yanomami potassium stuff is relevant to western folk, medical 'science' demands that you must have western guinea pigs for 'controlled trials'.

I am one of those guinea pigs, though the trial was controlled strictly by me without independent medical observers, which means that my testimony is suspect at the very least, and I should probably not to be believed. Quite frankly I don't give a damn about that, but the information might be of use to someone out there who either already has cardio-vascular problems, or is seriously interested in avoiding cardio-vascular problems at any time in the future.

For more than 25 years I suffered from 'essential hypertension', in other words high blood pressure that the medical fraternity cannot explain. During that period about eight different medical doctors gave me a staggering variety of 'patent medicines', none of which produced a steady reduction of blood pressure, though on two notable occasions the medicines caused 'bad reactions' which dropped my blood pressure so low and so suddenly, that my wife could barely get a reading.

At no time during this 25-year period did any of the medical doctors suggest that it might be a good idea to measure my serum electrolyte levels, in order to check for potassium deficiency. As you might expect, this entire sequence put me off the medical profession in a very big way.

Towards the end of 2003 I started getting the classic signs of 'angina', which, over the next six weeks, rapidly progressed into 'unstable angina', a textbook case involving an accelerating or "crescendo" pattern of chest and back pain that lasted longer than ordinary 'angina'. This was accompanied by acute breathlessness, especially after even moderate exertion or a small carbohydrate meal.

The fact that the medical profession did not know the cause of 'angina' infuriated me, because everything on the planet is caused by something else.

My basic knowledge of chemistry indicated that I might be suffering from a sodium overdose, so although in extreme pain and at times barely conscious, I managed to hook up to the Internet and do a few basic Google searches. The only sodium overdoses I could find were those caused by various synthetic drugs, so I reversed my search pattern and tried "potassium deficiency" instead.

It was then that I discovered my medical 'angina' symptoms precisely matched those exhibited by a person suffering from an acute potassium deficiency. This information came as no great surprise. On the face of it, I had uncovered the underlying cause of medical 'angina', the latter credited with the sale of more than a billion dollars worth of synthetic 'patent medicines' every year.

The problem was knowing what to do next. In Australia I was limited to 100-milligram potassium pills from the health food shops, or to a product called "Slow K" available from some pharmacies. Basically Slow K is a slow-release 600-milligram chunk of potassium chloride, which allows a 'non-lethal' dose of potassium to be administered under the direct control of the pill, rather than under the control of its recipient.

The problem here is that all chunks of salt are biochemically "hot', meaning that as the sugar coating wears off the outside of the pill, the chunk of undissolved salt is exposed, and can then come into direct contact with delicate internal tissues. In my casual view, this could easily cause some sort of perforation or an ulcer. Clearly what I needed was an industrial quantity of potassium in free flowing 100% water soluble form, which would allow me to first dissolve the potassium in water and fruit juice, thereby ensuring that no salt 'hot spots' could later cause problems in my digestive tract.

QUOTE

> In the end I settled for a kilogram of AR [Analytical Reagent] grade potassium chloride salt from a chemical warehouse, mercifully not yet under the direct control of the American FDA, or the Australian AMA.

Cost wise this was also a plus, because the whole kilogram set me back a mere US$30.00 including taxes, which is cheap enough when you realize that my potassium chloride purchase contained approximately 620 grams [or 620,000 milligrams] of the same potassium the FDA has restricted to 100-milligrams per dose in the health food shops. You do the math. Pop down to your local health food provider and ask for a quote on 6,200 x 100-milligram potassium supplements. Be ready to write a very large check.

By this stage there was so much pain so often, that I made a personal executive decision to attempt to slowly try to absorb a minimum of 50 grams or 50,000 milligrams of potassium, representing about 1/5th of the 250 grams total that an adult male should contain within his body. Simple common sense suggested that such an acute deficiency, with the extreme symptoms I was suffering, could hardly be caused by a minor reduction in whole body potassium, and, quite frankly, I also wanted the stop the overwhelming pain before it had a chance to accelerate into a fatal stroke or heart attack.

With this in mind, I dissolved 4 grams [4,000 milligrams] of potassium chloride in water and fruit juice, slowly swallowed the lot, and then kept grimly repeating this process every eight hours. After about five days [or 60,000 milligrams] most of the pain had gone, but I was still incapable of truly coherent thought. It was not until I was well past the 110,000-milligram mark that my faculties truly returned, though by then I was so exhausted I could no longer write or use the computer.

Expressed in the same terms used by the FDA, in ten days I had slowly ingested 68.2 grams of dissolved potassium [68,200 milligrams], or sixty-eight times the maximum quantity permitted under American law. However, it should also be noted that this figure represents only five days of the maximum quantity administered by licensed American doctors to their hypertensive patients during the nineteen forties, before their research funding was mysteriously and abruptly withdrawn.

> When viewed in the latter context, my actions do not seem unreasonable.

At the end of the ten day period, all of my 'unstable angina' pain and breathlessness had vanished completely, and along with it most of the 'essential hypertension' that plagued me for more than twenty-five years. Nowadays I take a daily maintenance dose of 2,000 milligrams potassium per day [3,200 milligrams of AR grade potassium chloride salt], plus 200 milligrams of magnesium orotate to minimize losses.

Though medical doctors might rave about me illegally 'giving medical advice without a license', I am doing no such thing. In the first place potassium is a naturally-occurring mineral essential in our diets for normal development, which places it firmly in the 'nutrition' rather than 'medical' basket. Secondly there is no way that any government agency can prevent determined people from getting their hands on potassium chloride if they really wish to do so.

The material is produced in bulk and used for hundreds of applications. For example, about every third oil rig drilling in the Rocky Mountains probably has about 25,000 pounds of the stuff, neatly stacked in sacks at the edge of the rig site. There are less difficult ways of obtaining potassium, especially in America where there are a range of "No Salt" products, most of which simply replace sea salt with potassium chloride.

Fruit and vegetables grown in strict organic rotation on properly maintained soil will probably contain significant quantities of potassium, though it is very difficult to check precisely. Although I have the necessary knowledge required to test for potassium in a range of different substances, I lack the laboratory equipment needed to do so consistently.

On a closing note, try not to believe the advertising garbage that keeps telling you the banana has the highest level of potassium known to man, because it is a lie. If grown side by side on suitable soils, the humble jacket potato has more than four times as much potassium as the banana, weight for weight.

This might bring a wry smile to the face of many an Irishman, whose ancestors were forced to live on a 'poor' diet of potatoes in Ireland more than a century ago. The reality is that those potatoes, so very high in potassium, gave the Irish the huge strength and endurance they needed to build bridges and lay railroads half way round the world. Looking back briefly on the Yanomami Indians, it is not hard to see why.

The truth is that our foods vary enormously in value, and some of them aren't worth eating as food... Our physical well-being is more directly dependent upon the minerals we take into our systems than upon calories or vitamins or upon the precise proportions of starch, protein or carbohydrates we consume."

This talk about minerals is novel and quite startling. In fact, a realization of the importance of minerals in food is so new that the textbooks on nutritional dietetics contain very little about it. Nevertheless, it is something that concerns all of us, and the further we delve into it the more startling it becomes." You'd think, wouldn't you, that a carrot is a carrot - that one is about as good as another as far as nourishment is concerned? But it isn't; one carrot may look and taste like another and yet be lacking in the particular mineral element which our system requires and which carrots are supposed to contain."

Laboratory test prove that the fruits, the vegetables, the grains, the eggs, and even the milk and the meats of today are not what they were a few generations ago (which doubtless explains why our forefathers thrived on a selection of foods that would starve us!)"

No longer does a balanced and fully nourishing diet consist merely of so many calories or certain vitamins or fixed proportion of starches, proteins and carbohydrates. We know that our diets must contain in addition something like a score of minerals salts."

It is bad news to learn from our leading authorities that 99% of the American people are deficient in these minerals, and that a marked deficiency in any one of the more important minerals actually results in disease. Any upset of the balance, any considerable lack or one or another element, however microscopic the body requirement may be, and we sicken, suffer, shorten our lives."

We know that vitamins are complex chemical substances which are indispensable to nutrition, and that each of them is of importance for normal function of some special structure in the body. Disorder and disease result from any vitamin deficiency. It is not commonly realized, however, that vitamins control the body's appropriation of minerals, and in the absence of minerals they have no function to perform. Lacking vitamins, the system can make some use of minerals, but lacking minerals, vitamins are useless."

Certainly our physical well-being is more directly dependent upon the minerals we take into our systems than upon calories of vitamins or upon the precise proportions of starch, protein of carbohydrates we consume." This discovery is one of the latest and most important contributions of science to the problem of human health."

Did New York Orchestrate The Asian Tsunami?

by Joe Vialls – 5 January 2005

Despite a natural human tendency to be shocked into silence by the sheer number of dead and injured across Asia on 26 December 2004, and despite also being slightly fearful of losing personal credibility because of the magnitude of the apparent crime, there are many provable irregularities in the official American tsunami story that simply have to be recorded now, or forever be lost in the sands of time.

It is beyond any doubt that a giant tidal wave (tsunami) smashed its way through South and South East Asia, and still had enough legs to continue all the way across the Indian Ocean to Africa, where it killed and injured a few hundred more. So the only question we must ask, is whether this tsunami was a natural or man-made catastrophe? A natural event would be horrifying enough, but if the tsunami was man-made, then we are unquestionably looking at the biggest single war crime in global history.

To make any sense at all of the irregularities, we must start at the very beginning, and then follow the course of events as they unfold, especially events in the immediate vicinity of the real tsunami epicenter, because the latter is quite different from the location being remorselessly peddled by the New York Times and CNN.

At midday local Australian time I faithfully recorded the magnitude and position plotted by the Jakarta Geophysical Office in Indonesia. An earthquake measuring 6.4 on the Richter scale had hit the north of the Indonesian island of Sumatra. The Jakarta Geophysical Office meticulously noted that the epicenter of the event was located 155 miles south-southwest of Aceh Province.

This location is approximately 250 miles south of the position later selected by the American NOAA, which plotted the epicenter to the north-west of Aceh, and initially claimed a Richter reading of 8.0. Alas, even that was not enough to cover the damage caused by this extraordinary event, so NOAA progressively upgraded the reading to 8.5, then to 8.9, and finally to 9.0 - at least for the present.

So, the first proven irregularities were peddled by American officials at the NOAA, who suddenly invented a new 'flexible' peak seismic wave for the event, of far greater magnitude than Jakarta, when the Jakarta office was located much closer at almost point-blank range. Believe me when I tell you there is no such thing as the new 'flexible' peak claimed by NOAA. The first seismic peak you record is the only real peak, unless of course you later manually draw in a few more peaks of your own, to match a contrived agenda. Naturally there is also only one epicenter, which was faithfully recorded by dozens of Indonesian and Indian seismographs.

Quite apart from the huge disparity in Richter values, the Indonesians and Indians were disturbed to find that the normal earthquake 'preamble' was missing from their seismograph charts. All this means is that the normal steadily increasing number of transverse shear "S" waves that always precede an earthquake were missing, as were later aftershocks, which likewise always accompany a naturally occurring or Tesla standing-wave generated earthquake. There were 'warnings' of aftershocks from the NOAA, but none actually eventuated.

To simplify matters for non-technical readers, an earthquake is always triggered by a resonant electromagnetic frequency in the range 0.5 to 12 Hertz, but it is not an instant process, because the resonant frequency must be precise. Thus as true resonance approaches, the fault line starts to tremble like a piece of rope under tension, and sends out warnings to the seismographs in the form of steadily increasing transverse shear waves.

If all you get is a cluster of "P" compression waves, then you are almost certainly looking at an underground or sub sea explosion. These were in fact the only copious seismic signals that the Indonesians and Indians received, and they looked curiously similar to those generated many years ago by large underground nuclear weapons in Nevada

We will return later to the relatively simple task of delivering a multi-megaton thermonuclear weapon to the bottom of the Sumatran Trench, and then detonating it with awesome effect, but right now we need to return to our initial task of following the trail of events and inexplicable irregularities. First we must travel south to the distant desert island of Australia, currently ruled by an obsequious Wall Street toady known as Little Johnny Howard. To the intense displeasure of many of his Australian "subjects", Little Johnny never makes a move outside Australia unless he first receives explicit instructions from one of his New York minders. Remember this reality, because it is extremely important in terms of what Australia did next.

On the morning of 27 December, the Australian (New York owned) media was making it very clear that the most badly hit nation in the region was Sri Lanka, an island at the southern tip of India, which like Australia is a member nation of the British Commonwealth. Accordingly, Tim Costello, head of one of Australia's largest charities, made immediate plans to fly to the area and assess the need for aid. But that same morning, Little Johnny was dancing to a very different tune, which, based on his known subservience, must have been playing down his secure telephone line from Wall Street.

In true covert manner, Little Johnny secretly dispatched two RAAF Hercules transport planes packed with supplies to Malaysia on "Stand By", and directed two more to Darwin in Australia's north. Please note that if Little Johnny had any humanitarian concerns at all, all four Hercules could have flown directly to Commonwealth partner Sri Lanka, where every other Australian had already been told by the media that aid was needed. But no, it wasn't to be, and Little Johnny waited patiently for orders from New York.

The waiting period was short, and after a high-flying reconnaissance jet confirmed that the runway was clear at Medan in eastern Sumatra, all four Australian Hercules complete with troops, guns and other tackle, invaded Sumatra just south of the devastated province of Aceh. In turn, with 90% of its population killed by the tsunami, Aceh might perhaps one day soon become Indonesia's very own Guantanamo Bay, crawling with hundreds of heavily armed Australians and Americans.

Remember carefully though, at the time these four Hercules touched down in Medan, the ordinary Australian public still had no idea that Sumatra was badly hit. Only Little Johnny knew, and of course his trusty crystal ball in New York. To hell with Sri Lanka, his bosses wanted a main base for the huge reconstruction contracts in Asia, designed to replace the failed oil theft and reconstruction in Iraq, and keep poor old Zion on its tottering New York legs for a few more weeks or months.

In the end, what the hell did it matter how many Goyim had to die? And, hey, on the credit side they'd already managed to kill more than 100,00 Muslims in Sumatra with a single tidal wave, which was partial payback for their own resounding defeats in Afghanistan and Iraq.

Needless to say the Australians were merely the advance party, soon to be joined by a curiously well prepared and equipped U. S. Military, though it is doubtful that any of the officers and men involved really comprehend what is going on. Only a handful thought to question why they had been spending a whole year training for a "Humanitarian Mission", when the whole point of the U.S. Navy and Marine Corps is normally to kill people in very large numbers. Just look at Fallujah, people, look at Fallujah.

As if by magic, the Pentagon managed to have two battle groups ready to sail at an instant's notice from Hong Kong and Guam during the normally chaotic Christmas to New Year period. Crikey! Military discipline has come a hell of a long way since my day, when everyone including the ship's cat was sleeping it off at some highly questionably hostelry or another. Not these 10,000+ Americans though, who must have been standing rigidly to attention beside their hammocks day and night, tugging furiously at their forelocks whenever an officer of NCO came in sight.

The next bit was superbly orchestrated, because it took place at sea, far away from the prying eyes of dock spies or imaginary KGB agents. But oops, first you have to know who was involved. Out of Hong Kong rushed team one, comprised of the nuclear-powered USS Abraham Lincoln and her escort vessels, while the far more interesting team two rushed out of Guam, led by the USS Bonhomme Richard, a marine amphibious assault carrier crammed to the gunwales with gun-toting wooden tops. And that is not all, believe me, because the Bonhomme Richard is in fact leading a veritable armada known as "Expeditionary Strike Group 5".

Flagship USS Bonhomme Richard is accompanied by the U.S.S. Duluth, an amphibious transport dock vessel; the USS Rushmore, a landing ship dock; the guided missile cruiser USS Bunker Hill, guided missile destroyer USS Milius, and the guided missile frigate USS Thach. To take care of the underwater side of things they are joined by the nuclear hunter-killer submarine USS Pasadena, while the U.S. Coast Guard's high-endurance cutter Munro is also tagging along, presumably to deal with Asian Customs and Excise.

Now then, though 'Strike Group 5' may be toting enough nuclear weapons to destroy half of the known world, and the title is perhaps lacking when viewed from a strictly humanitarian perspective, engineer chief Staff Sgt. Julio C. Dominguez says otherwise: "The Marine Service Support Group has been preparing for a humanitarian mission of this type for about 12 months now, and is more prepared for an actual mission". Well, OK chief, but didn't you ask why you were being trained for a mysterious humanitarian mission a year before it actually happened, especially when your day job is normally shooting Muslims full of holes?

The really sneaky (inexplicable) bit came as both battle groups entered the Indian Ocean. The USS Abraham Lincoln looked about as innocent as a carrier with 70 attack planes can look, but was already carrying 2,000 marines instead of her normal complement of around 500. That is a huge amount of grunt firepower to put on the deserted streets of Banda Aceh, especially when Wall Street normally expects these marines to die quietly for Zion in Iraq. Now then, how did they know the extra marines would be needed before team one left Hong Kong, because the surplus 1,500 marines were certainly not just standing around on Kowloon dock waiting to hitch a ride.

Then while the two battle groups (apparently) headed in two different directions across the deserted Indian Ocean, an even stranger event took place. Though Expeditionary Strike Group 5 (Humanitarian) was supposed to help the folks in Sri Lanka, the combat marines aboard the USS Bonhomme Richard transferred to amphibious transport dock vessel U.S.S. Duluth, which then split from ESG-5 and headed towards team one. So without the Indonesians really being aware of it, the (relatively) harmless and Bulky aircraft carrier USS Abraham Lincoln has been used to screen the arrival of at least 3,500 heavily-armed US Marines in tiny Aceh Province.

That more or less brings us up to date on known military activity, though yesterday an Australian television cameraman did accidentally film some of these heavily-armed US Marines (who tried to shoo him away), searching a devastated Indonesian military base for any remaining weapons. Now call me old-fashioned, but if these guys and their bosses are straight, that particular job should be left to the Indonesian Army…

I will be circumspect as to exactly how a large American thermonuclear weapon managed to arrive at the bottom of the Sumatran Trench, though all of the seismic evidence and preparedness for the resulting mission indicates strongly that this is the case. After all, we are back to the age-old question of "who benefits?", and in this particular case, "Who is insane enough to kill more than 150,000 civilians just to hang on to power?' Based on their past performance in Iraq and other luckless countries, it would seem that the only realistic candidates are Wolfowitz and company, striving as always to create a "One World Government".

Certainly no other nuclear powers including Russia and China stand to gain anything at all from such an outrageous mass murder, so, as always in the end, we come back to Sherlock Holmes via the pen of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle: "When you have ruled out the impossible, whatever remains, no matter how improbable, is the truth."

For the Zionist Cabal, obtaining a thermonuclear weapon in America is no great trick, especially when we have the precedent of 100 small 'decommissioned' air-to-air atomic warheads being smuggled out the Pentagon's (civilian) back door, to form the core of the Jewish State's current nuclear arsenal. Once a weapon system is out date and out of service, loyal uniformed US military personnel can no longer track it.

Those who wish to understand how such a seemingly small weapon could rattle a 20,000 feet-deep oceanic trench, and then force a giant tsunami right across the Indian Ocean, would do well to look at the diagram of the famous 'Dambusters' attacking the German dam below, most of which is self-explanatory.

The designer of the RAF's bouncing bomb (actually called "Highball") was a scientist called Barnes Wallace, who had already gained a formidable reputation with his Wellington bomber, which he constructed geodetically, thus enabling it to absorb enormous punishment before actually being shot out of the sky. Many Wellington returned to base literally in tatters, while many luckless cousins like the Stirling and Halifax were all too often consigned to the murky deep of the North Sea.

Wallace knew that bombing the dams vertically was a complete waste of time, and the only possibility of success lay in placing a mine hard up against the dam wall at its base. You see, water cannot be compressed, meaning that if the mine was pressed against the dam wall at the moment of detonation, part of its energy would automatically be expended on the wall itself. Too far away in the relatively shallow water, and most of the blast energy would be lost to atmosphere, in a huge exploding cloud of water of course.

Though it was obvious that the dam wall could not be destroyed by a single bomb from a single Lancaster bomber (it would weight far too much for the aircraft to get off the ground), Wallace pinned his hopes on the scientific fact that cumulative stress should do the job, and he was proved right. Though officially three of the bombs, each containing 6,500 pounds of TNT, were considered to be direct hits, one of these veered off slightly, meaning that the giant Mohne Dam was completely breached by a total of 13,000 pounds of tri-nitro toluene.

It is the incompressibility of water in particular that matters deep down in the Sumatran Trench. At the bottom you already have 10,000 pounds of pressure per square inch pressing down on your weapon of choice, and above that weapon there is a column of water 20,000 feet tall, which is what caused the pressure in the first place. Not only that. The trench narrows at the bottom, meaning that the weapon is 'hemmed-in', with a very real chance of moving a tectonic plate if sufficient tonnage is used.

In this particular case there was no real need to shift a tectonic plate, and science suggests that if this blast had caused such an effect, several very powerful aftershocks would have occurred, as has happened with every other major earthquake in the past. But, as previously stated, and setting aside the seemingly deliberate provocative though false warnings from the American NOAA, there has not been a single aftershock.

To force subservience on Asia, and ensure the lion's share of incredibly lucrative reconstruction contracts, all that was needed was a very large tsunami targeted on the selected nations, which was easily within the capabilities of a large thermonuke. There is nothing new about "Sea Bursts" as they are called, and more than 30 years ago plans existed in both America and Russia to wipe out each other's coastal cities using exactly this technique. The tidal wave from a deep sea burst is relatively clean, allowing the aggressor to take over both land and remaining buildings etc. with the minimum of delay.

If everything had gone to plan, then Indonesia, Sri Lanka and India would have been in hock to the IMF and World Bank for thirty or more years - time enough to wait for the price of oil to come down again after the lethal fiasco in Iraq. At the same time, if the Indian Government had taken the bait, the deadly Russian-Chinese-Indian-Brazilian coalition would have been dead in the water. Not a bad day's work for a single thermonuclear weapon discreetly removed from the decommissioning process.

There are those who may claim that I have 'left out' the giant ExxonMobil gas fields in Aceh, but that is not the case. Certainly they are very productive sub-surface fields, and will unquestionably produce lots of gas again once the surface equipment has been repaired, but in isolation they are completely incapable of saving the New Zion from collapse. Wall Street needs giant reconstruction contracts, and plenty of them.

If I remember correctly, shortly before Christmas I received a large number of emails from various people about some "German Guy", who apparently claimed that Wolfowitz had got hold of a critical weapon and was going to nuke Houston on either the 26 or 27 of December. I never did read the whole email, but it seems very likely that it was initially circulated by Wolfowitz or one of his ilk, as a classic disinformation distraction. Try something along the lines of "You suckers all watch Houston very carefully on 26 December, while I nuke Asia behind your backs… "

Secret OSS (Forerunner of the CIA) Plans to Trigger Earthquakes & Tsunamis in Japan

All text is displayed on .jpg images of the original declassified pages, and will take some time to load. To copy, right click on each page and then "save as"

Back in 1945 the OSS (forerunner of the present-day CIA) planned to bring the "unbridled brutality of Japanese troops" under control by use of artificially triggered earthquakes. "If we could could get (an atom) bomb within a mile of a point on a fault line (trench) destined to break within 90 years we might set it off ..."

Since this secret paper was written, the modern-day CIA has had sixty years to get its nuclear numbers right - just in time for the shattering war crime against South and South-East Asia which murdered more than 300,000 people on December 26, 2004. Joe Vialls

In still another part of his article he gives us a tip-off for a Psychological Warfare potential that might be used not only to activate this panic complex among the mob but might be capable of bringing about a hysterical social condition which would turn Japan from a well regimented state into a mob more interested in individual survival than state survival.

Norman states further: "Today with contemporary Japan subject to the will of the political police, the tight social regimentation of the neighborhood groups, the grinding economic exploitation, the student propaganda of chauvinism, and the shinto superstition, are placing heavier burdens on the Japanese people than they experienced even under the stern rule of the feudal Bakufu. As the military and political machine of Japanese imperialism begins to crack under the hammer blows of its enemies, it is not improbable that violent outbursts of mass hysteria will flare up here and there."

Given these facts, it now is apparent that it is timely that we step up our Psychological Warfare against the Japanese homeland. This should feature material that would tighten the frustration ring around the Japanese people.

people.

Already there is enough evidence leaking out from the Japanese radio broadcasts, indicating that the major morale government operation is the channelling of this frustration complex. This was evident with the collapse of two cabinets within the period of the war, which came as an appeasement of the mass, when Saipan fell and Okinawa was invaded. The real purpose behind these moves was to supply new hope for growing frustration. The method was to discard a once believed infallible leader for another who could be propagandized as a true infallible one. But it goes without saying that not even the Japanese people can continue to be fooled by the replacement of an infallible who turns out to be fallible, world without end.

There is already increasing evidence of a drop in the Japanese morale barometer. This was reflected in the first public address of Premier Suzuki, after the fall of the Koiso cabinet, following the invasion of Okinawa. He stressed the graveness of the crisis now facing Japan, as the result of the invasion of Okinawa. How serious Japanese officialdom takes this U. S. move into the inner defense zone of Japan is revealed in a recent editorial in the Tokyo-Yomuri-Hochi, voice of the militarist group. In this editorial it is admitted that the tarist group. In this editorial it is admitted that the loss of Okinawa would leave Japan with "no hope of turning the course of the war. The loss of Okinawa would mean the collapse of the vanguards of Japan."

Such editorial comments from an official newspaper like the Yomuri-Hochi appears to indicate that the seeds of hysterical fear are already sprouting even in official sources.

This brings us to the point as to just how we might put enough pressure on this panic potential to turn it into an actuality, a mad hysteria among the mass of Japan. This might be accomplished by a long-range strategic campaign in which we tie up the destruction of physical war with that of the forces of nature.

Such a Psychological Warfare campaign would be designed to show that by scientific bombings of Japan, we intend to use even the forces of nature to step up their annihilation.

CAN IT BE DONE?

This poses the question: Scientifically can heavy bombing, pinpointed on known earthquake areas, bring bombing, pinpointed on known earthquake areas, bring about an underground condition within fault sections which would step up the expectancy and possibly bring about a calamitous earthquake in a selected area? The tactical purpose being to put out of production war industries in this area, or to neutralize a strong defense sector.

This question is partly answered by N. H. Heck, Assistant Director of the U.S. Coast Geodetic Survey, in his pamphlet "Japanese Earthquakes from the Military Viewpoint." He states in part: "Can an Earthquake be set off by an explosion?"

"This question has been asked several times, so it should receive a serious answer. All that could be applied is trigger force, and this can only advance and set the time for an earthquake which is about to occur. It is conceivable, however, that an explosion at exactly the right time and place might have the correct effect. It (the explosive) would have to be very large and it would be necessary to know where to place it, and the latter cannot be determined at all from outside Japan".....

When and where to drop this explosive message,(at the most timely hour) is the crux of the problem, he stresses.

This problem, he adds, has been complicated by the loss of seismological listening stations at Manila, Shanghai, and Batavia. These stations, he points out, are needed to supply the data to forecast a possible "trigger stress." Some of the data needed would be geological changes within Japan itself and those covering concurrent minor earthquakes, which often anticipate a major earthquake. These statements, it is timely to report, were made before the recapture of Manila and the occupation by our forces of the Okinawa Islands, well within the zone of Japan proper.

It now appears as though they no longer hold valid, and that this job of collecting the needed data is now within the realm of possibility.

With the possibility of getting this data, now arises the question of where to place this large explosive charge. Professor P. Byerly of the Seismological Laboratory of the University of California, in an answer to this question, reduces the range of speculation as to time and location. In a letter to Dr. L.H. Adams of the Geophysical Laboratory, he states: ....."we would have to get (bomb) within less than 5 miles of that place on the fault which is destined to break within a year, no help being offered it...." and "....if we could get (bomb) within a mile of a point on a fault destined to break within 90 years we might set it off...".

Here again, the determination of the vulnerable faults is dependent upon the more specific data to be obtained from seismic listening posts.

The statements of these men, prominent scientists in their field, testify to the plausibility of "triggering" a potential earthquake condition by intensified and accurate bombings. This plausibility is further substantiated by actual tests conducted at the Palmer Physical Laboratory. Here, high explosive charges were studied with a view to their effect on these earthquake conditions.

It was the results of this study that brought the possibility of triggering a potential earthquake condition from the realm of fantasy to that of scientific plausibility.

With the knowledge of the possible effects of explosives, and the seismological data to be obtained from listening posts there appears a good possibility that we may be able to create a Psychological Warfare panic campaign well within this realm of scientific plausibility.

And if it became known in Japan that we had placed scientists in strategic areas within the zone of Japan proper for working out a hypothetical plan to further harass Japan by creating earthquakes, another diabolical feature would be added to stir up the imagination and increase the panic hysteria of the Japanese people.

Also, the knowledge of the presence of these scientists at Manila and Okinawa, slipped into Japan proper by our agents in China, would not only give credence to such a diabolical plan among the mass of Japan but would act as a challenge to Japan's scientists.

This diabolical plan would also add another dilemma for Japanese officials to meet. Such a plan, it becomes obvious, would neutralize the effectiveness of underground industries, put there to protect machinery and workers from ordinary surface bombings. It would not take much imagination on the part of the lowliest coolie to visualize himself trapped in the bowels of the earth and doomed to being buried alive, by such a man-made earthquake. Add to this localized hysteria the fears of the mass of workers in above-ground industries, workers in shipyards, the fear of the mass of the great hydro-electrical dams turning their floods loose on the countrysides, and the general tension of their homes tumbling about their heads at any hour, and you have a PW formula for panic hysteria that cannot be duplicated by any type of physical warfare.

PSYCHOLOGICAL WARFARE PANIC CAMPAIGN AGAINST JAPANESE HOMELAND

PURPOSE:

To create a negative flux; that is a condition where the people of Japan are turned into a hysterical mob, no longer believing in any leadership from above, but more interested in individual survival than even state survival, which has lost its power of mystic leadership. Our purpose being mainly to break the regimented state pattern and smash it into an individual survival flux. This Psychological Warfare campaign, of course, should be timed to run concurrently with the intensification of the physical warfare against Japan. As this physical warfare increases in intensity it will create for us automatic Psychological Warfare wedges. We should be ready to take advantage of this to increase the psychological pressure on growing panic temperment created by the intense physical destruction of Japan.

METHOD:

This may be accomplished by increasing the pressure on the natural panic complex of the Japanese people. Althe natural panic complex of the Japanese people. Already are evident many signs that the frustration ring drawn around the people of Japan, is being tightened to the point where something is about to crack. Available historical data reveals Japan as a "country of social tensions," and one which has several times in its history violently socially exploded because of these social tensions.

MEDIUMS:

Two outstanding factors have played a major historical role in creating social hysteria and panic among the Japanese; they are fire and earthquake. When these have occurred during times of great economic pressure, there has often followed social chaos. We know now that the economic factor is present; the fire factor is being supplied by our extensive bombing with incendiaries. There now remains but one other factor for us to utilize. This is the earthquake factor.

SITUATION:

Seismologists reveal Japan to be a geological mine. The evidence of geological maps and the record of seismic disturbances bear witness to the unstable condition of the earthis interior immediately beneath Japan. Honeycomed the earth's interior immediately beneath Japan. Harbored within this interior is a latent force of tremendous destructiveness. When triggered, this latent energy which has been accumulating over a period of years, is released in a recurrent earth-shaking wave. At spaced intervals throughout the history of Japan this mine has exploded with fierce intensity and shaken surface structures to the ground and cost the lives of millions.

Scientists further reveal the plausibility of triggering this earthquake potential by intensified bombings. Through tests conducted in the physical laboratories of leading universities and institutions, a similarity between the normal triggering forces of nature and those which man can exert is established. These scientists, seismologists and physicists, have compiled tables to show the effects of various sized bombs on this geological mine, and have determined the distances from the mine within which the explosives would have to be detonated in order to be effective.

Impetus is greatly added to the already established scientific plausibility of triggering this earthquake potential by the recent revelation of the atomic bomb. With a manifoldly greater amount of destructive force in

With a manifoldly greater amount of destructive force in a single atomic bomb the plausibility of triggering the earthquake potential is brought further toward the realm of practicality.

This also poses the possibility that the explosive force of an atomic bomb may set up, deep within the earthquake blocks, a seismic wave, the result of radio activity set loose. This may expedite the trigger hour, or by itself increase the external pressures forcing the blocks to make a sudden adjustment in an attempt to recover their equilibrium.

On the basis of the scientific plausibility of triggering this earthquake potential by atomic and large scale intensified bombing lies the foundation for our psychological plan to combine, within the minds of the Japanese, the additional fear of earthquakes being caused by the radio-active destructiveness of the atomic bomb.

INSTRUMENTS TO BE USED:

1) Magazine: The ground-work for all the media to be used would be a pseudo-scientific article inserted in a counterfeit Japanese magazine. This article would purport to have originated with Japanese scientists and port to have originated with Japanese scientists and would contend that the prime purpose of the Allies, in further intensifying their bombings, is to bring about a calamitous earthquake. The article would then go on to raise arguments relative to the feasibility of triggering the home earthquake potential by heavy explosives, and, especially, the new atomic bomb. Further counterfeit articles, signed by individual Japanese seismologists, in crediting or denying the possibility of realizing this end, would keep the fear of earthquakes paramount in the minds of the Japanese people.

2) Leaflets would follow the appearance of the counterfeit articles and would give detailed instructions as to the precautionary measures to be taken in the event that the earthquake does occur. In these leaflets, the current air-raid regulations would be revised to incorporate new measures necessitated by the expected earthquake. These leaflets could be distributed in occupied territory by our agents in China, or dropped from B-29s.

3) Radio could be used if some method could be found to establish a station on Okinawa, which could broadcast by medium wave, directly into Japan, a series of broadcasts on a band counterfeiting an official Japanese radio broadcast. These programs by indirect subversion.

radio broadcast. These programs by indirect subversion, would call to the attention of the people of Japan the need for preparing themselves to meet any earthquake which might result from intensive bombing by the Americans. It could also, by indirect subversion, call attention to the danger of underground industries, by detailing how Japanese officials are working out plans to safeguard all workers who are detailed to work in these underground plants.

4) Rumors could be circulated to the effect that the Americans are using islands off Iwo Jima and Okinawa as proving grounds for this theory; also, that the recently felt tremors, which occur constantly, were the direct effect of the last bombing by B-29s.

5) Counterfeit copies of letters alleged to have passed between members of the Imperial Earthquake Committee, commenting on the possible effects of heavy bombings on the potential earthquake conditions, could be left in strategic places, by agents, for the ready consumption and distribution by the Japanese people.

STRATEGIC GOAL:

If we were once able to create this negative flux we would then be in the position to channel it into a positive flux. Such a negative flux by a natural reflex, always attempts to find a positive hope. This positive hope could be supplied by the appearance of an alleged "Free Japan" movement. The activities of this group beamed into Japan by medium wave from Okinawa might be the medium for activating the liberal group in Japan, who could then offer a positive force for release from war's frustrations.

In 1905 physics genius Nikola Tesla submitted his US patent 787,412 which describes

“The Art of Transmitting Electrical Energy Through the Natural Mediums”, and includes a design for a series of worldwide generators. It is beyond doubt this patent led to the construction of the “Omega” network of radio transmitters erected around the world between 1963 and 1982, officially for the purpose of global navigation, though navigation is the least important function of the Omega network.

Tesla was eloquently misleading in some of his patents and this is probably the ultimate example. Although until recently Omega did offer very-low-frequency navigational services they were only a secondary function: a “security cover” for the network’s real purpose of subtly manipulating the resonant frequency of the earth itself, and the resonant frequency of the earth-to-ionospheric gap.

Anyone able to manipulate resonant frequencies between five and fifteen cycles per second, to three decimal places of accuracy, can influence every dynamic electromagnetic activity on the face of the earth and beyond, including global weather patterns, human thought and thus human behaviour. Put simply, Omega is the most powerful integrated global strike and C3i (Command, Control, Communications intelligence) network ever constructed.

In late 1968 a small group of men gathered in a rambling old house situated a few miles outside the German city of Munich. The weak afternoon sunlight was starting to fade as they sat down at the polished oak conference table, and despite a roaring log fire in the ornate fireplace there was a noticable chill in the air. These men were of no particular religion, nor were they politicians, bankers, bureaucrats or mainstream military personnel. To use their own self-effacing term they were "no-persons", just a group of intelligent men from all over the world deeply concerned about the looming probability of global thermonuclear war. The American Department of State, the British Foreign and Commonwealth Office, and the Russian Kremlin were brimming over with megalomaniacs quite capable of destroying all life on the planet in their blind quest for power, unless they could be persuaded not to do so.

Global thermonuclear war was not the only problem. Since the end of the First World War and the subsequent formation of the League of Nations, the same megalomaniacs had frequently expressed their determination to implement a "New Order", bureaucratic code for a one world government. If left to run unchecked, within a single century the megalomaniacs would remove national borders entirely, destroy delightfully diverse national cultures developed over thousands of years, and replace them in-toto with hordes of multicultural drones willing to slave for endless hours in "worker's paradises" for the exclusive benefit of a tiny but immensely powerful global elite. The first successful phase of the New Order exercise was at that very moment in full swing, less than a thousand miles away in the worker's paradise known as the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Faced with a completely unacceptable Orwellian future, the Munich Group had two objectives: stop the megalomaniacs from destroying all life on the planet with thermonuclear weapons, and at the same time protect the myriad national cultures existing around the world from extinction. The critical question facing its members was how to achieve these awesome objectives with strictly limited resources.

The politicians and mainstream military controlled more than 90% of the conventional and nuclear weapons so their use was not an option. Besides, if the Munich Group resorted to such methods they would risk triggering a global thermonuclear exchange, the very event they were determined to prevent. Many years later this and other groups would supplement their arsenals with micronized atomic weapons for use against specific targets, but the primary weapon system under discussion at the 1968 Munich meeting was quite different, and well beyond the comprehension of any professor of classical or quantum physics.

Rising from the table, each member of the group approached a small strongroom and removed a thick black file. The strongroom door remained open throughout the meeting. If the security perimeter of the house was breached the files would be placed back in the strongroom in less than ten seconds, and the strongroom's twelve inch-thick thermite filled walls would explode into searing white-hot flames, destroying the files, the safe and most of the old house in seconds. Group members might or might not have time to escape the blazing inferno but none worried about the lethal possibility. Omega project security was far more important than personal safety.

Each identical hand-typed file was titled "Omega - The Final Solution", and contained details of an advanced global electromagnetic system based on the work of Nikola Tesla, the little-known genius despised by physicists because he did not have the "correct" academic qualifications.Despite this notional impediment, around the turn of the century Tesla managed to invent alternating current, the sort of electricity we still use in our homes today, and invented radio as well.

Almost always working alone, this single man invented all of the basic electromagnetic devices which would later become essential to 20th Century civilization, from light bulbs and flourescent tubes to computers and television sets. Fortunately for the Munich Group that gloomy winter evening, Nikola Tesla also invented a great many other devices, some of them so advanced they had escaped meaningful scrutiny.

The introduction to each file focused on specific sections of Tesla's patent 787,412 dated 18th April 1905, titled "The Art of Transmitting Electrical Energy Through The Natural Mediums". During many thousands of hours of work the group had selected this patent as the core of its work, because it had allowed them to develop a global navigation network so advanced it had already proved irresistable to politicians and mainstream military alike.

What the politicians and mainstream military would never be told, however, was that the "navigation network" was in reality dual-purpose, with its primary electromagnetic functions designed to be accessed by the Munich group using undetectable remote control. Several passages from Tesla's patent 787,412 were included verbatim in the introduction for special attention:-

"In the course of certain investigations which I carried out for the purpose of studying the effects of lightning discharges upon the electrical condition of the earth ... attained in the displays of electrical forces in nature and which seemed at first unrealizable by any human agencies; but by gradual and continuous improvements of a generator of electrical oscillations, which I have described in my Patents Nos. 645,576 and 649,621, I finally succeeded in reaching electrical movements or rates of delivery of electrical energy not only approximating , but, as shown in many comparative tests and measurements, actually surpassing lightning discharges, and by means of this apparatus I have reproduced whenever desired phenomena in the earth, the same or similar to those discharges.

"With the knowledge discovered by me and the means at command for accomplishing these results I am enabled not only to carry out many operations by the use of known instruments, but also to offer a solution for many important problems involving the operation or control of remote devices which for want of this knowledge and the absence of these means have hitherto been entirely impossible.

"... For example, by the use of a generator [transmitter] of stationary waves and receiving apparatus properly placed and adjusted in any other location, however remote, it is practicable to transmit intelligible signals or to control or actuate at will any one or all of such apparatus for many other important and valuable purposes... [or] other features or property of disturbances of this character.

"... If several such generators [transmitters] of stationary waves, preferably of different length, were installed in judiciously-selected localities, the entire globe could be subdivided in definite zones of electrical activity, and such and other important data could at once be obtained by simple calculations or readings from suitably graduated instruments."

"... For the present it will be sufficient to state that the planet behaves like a perfectly smooth or polished conductor of inappreciable resistance, with capacity and self induction uniformly distributed along the axis of symmetry of wave propagation and transmitting slow electrical oscillations without distortion and attentuation [without loss of clarity and power].

"... three requirements are essential to the establishment of the resonating condition... The earth's diameter passing through the pole should be an odd multiple of the quarter wave length - that is, of the ratio between the velocity of light, and four times the frequency of the currents... the frequency [of the transmitter] should be smaller than twenty thousand cycles per second ...

"The most essential requirement is that irrespective of frequency the wave or wave-train should continue for a certain period of time, which I have estimated to be not less than one-twelfth or probably 0.08484 of a second and which is taken in passing to and returning from the region diametrically opposite the pole over the earth's surface with a mean velocity of about 471,240 kilometres per second [292,822 miles per second, a velocity equal to one and a half times the "official" speed of light]."

The rest of each file contained details of other Tesla patents and research work, carefully prepared and combined to enable the construction of the dual-purpose navigation network and global electromagnetic control system. When completed worldwide, to the viewing public the Omega network would appear as a series of rather boring radio-navigation masts situated at strategic points around the globe with aerial wires radiating out from the upper part of each mast, giving the appearance of a circus big top, though one of the group repeatedly insisted, with more than a little scientific justification, that the network should be called "Tesla's Electromagnetic Pyramids".

Publicity material already widely circulated claimed the Omega network capable of providing radio-navigation of such high quality that it would significantly enhance the safery of ships and aircraft. This was quite true. In its "security cover" role as a radio navigation network Omega could do this with ease, and with such overwhelming accuracy for submerged submarines that the group had swiftly sold the concept to the American and Soviet defence agencies, though in subtly different ways, because the two sides were bitter enemies busily engaged in a cold war.

As evening turned to night and group members were served dinner by a trusted retainer they discussed this initial strategy, for without the unwitting assistance already received from governments in arranging and building the huge aerial arrays, they would not have been able to use Omega for its primary though hidden purpose. However, once the global network of stations was complete, the group would access Omega by undetectable remote means during carefully designed "passive" time windows when navigation-transmitter power was not being applied to the aerial arrays.

Each Omega station would limit its navigation pulses to a strict staggered format controlled by dual caesium atomic clocks, ensuring that the "passive" time windows were always available to the group. This would enable them to communicate with each other at will, and issue warnings or initiate punitive strikes against recalcitrant individuals and nations, right under the noses of the two most powerful nations on earth, using their equipment without their knowledge.

As coffee and brandy were served after dinner, the American member of the group brought the others up to date on progress. His government had enthusiastically embraced the chance to gain an edge over the "Commies", and had quickly arranged covert funding for the construction of a global network of eight Omega stations. Plans had been completed for eight stations located in America; Argentina, Japan, Liberia, New Zealand, Norway, Hawaii, and on the French island of La Reunion, of which three were already operating.

All eight were needed to justify Omega's cover navigation role in the western world, but two locations, Norway and Hawaii, were inappropriate for full global coverage in the electromagnetic control role, which would require a further three stations built on Soviet territory, providing a network comprised of nine "real" Omega stations. The two stations to be built in Norway and Hawaii would therefore be smaller, less powerful and of an entirely different design, ensuring that their use in the western navigation role would not cause inadvertent jamming during periods when the nine "real" Omega stations were in use by the group.

The Russian member explained that as soon as was decently possible after the American plans were originally approved, he had leaked selected diagrams and other details to the Soviet Government, pointing out they could beat the Americans at their own game if his government was prepared to increase Omega's navigational accuracy by quietly building three more stations to exactly the same design at Riga, Irkutsk, and Sakhalin. His government thought this was a wonderful joke. Soviet submarines using an American system but with even greater accuracy! Funding was immediately approved, and all three Soviet stations were already on-air and operational.

Each "real" Omega station was sited on highly conductive soil, with multiple buried heavy-duty ground aerials 1115.5 feet long, radiating out every ten degrees of the compass from the central point. Tuning was accomplished by the primary helix, wound with special litz wire two and a half inches thick, capable of conducting colossal quantities of electromagnetic energy many thousands of times greater than that required for Omega's stated navigational role.There were six smaller variometers for fine tuning.

For the navigational role the main helix would be connected to the above-ground aerial array via a sulphur flouride-filled bush. The above-ground aerial array was very conspicuous, with a central mast standing 1,400 feet high, draped with sixteen aluminium and steel aerial cables radiating out to anchor points around the edge of the site, thus giving the characteristic "circus big top" appearance to the station as a whole.

Though the mast and above-ground aerials were essential for Omega's navigational role, they were not needed for its discrete electromagnetic control role. If at a later date one of the participating host nations wished to remove its Omega station and could not be prevented from doing so, the circus big top could be effectively "turned upside down", with a tuned steel-lined oil well substituting for the central mast, and shallower tuned steel-lined water wells at sixteen points around the edge of the site replacing the aluminium and steel aerial cables.

The "inverted" Omega station would still operate perfectly in the electromagnetic control role, but would be completely invisible to the human eye. All that was needed was a powerful oil drilling rig for the central well and a less powerful water drilling rig for the shallow radial wells, a cable laying machine for the underground aerials, discreet drilling crews, and local government permission to drill exploration wells in search of oil reserves "believed" to exist in the area.

Because every government on earth wants to believe it has oil reserves, and because the group would offer to drill the exploration wells free of charge as a goodwill joint-venture, success was assured. Promises of free expertise and free crude oil would prove an irresistable temptation to every politician on earth. When the rigs eventually failed to find the promised oil reserves and the crews apologetically departed the host country, they would leave behind them a buried but fully operational Omega station.

During the long hours of night that followed, the Munich Group earnestly discussed the fine details of Omega's electromagnetic control function, before eating a leisurely breakfast as the first hint of dawn lit the eastern horizon. Then they rose from the conference table and discreetly left the old house at five minute intervals, stopping only to deposit their files in the strongroom on the way out. By the time the first bus rattled along the street they had all vanished completely, which was entirely appropriate behaviour for no-persons. As Nietzsche once wrote, "We are unknown to ourselves, we men of knowledge."

As their files and discussions showed, Nikola Tesla alone had provided the core knowledge and experiments which allowed them to design Omega's hidden electromagnetic control function, for only Tesla had discovered and written about the true nature of physics. While academics sat in their ivory towers fiddling with theoretical equations which made sense only to themselves and their dedicated students, Tesla was continually out in the field, bucking the academic system by using hard physical equipment to create or evoke hard physical events and responses.

When Einstein "proved" theoretically that travel beyond the speed of light was impossible, Tesla proved that travel beyond the speed of light was possible, by the simple expedient of physically directing longitudinal waves of electromagnetic energy through and around the earth, later accurately measuring their velocity at one and a half times the speed of light. Nikola Tesla continually made the theoretical academic boffins feel acutely uncomfortable, and they hated and shunned him for it.

The theoretical boffins had carved the physical universe up into specialities controlled by several of their unconnected academic disciplines, and by so doing had succeeded in completely obscuring reality. For example, a man visiting his local university and asking for an explanation of exactly how he was able to see a hill five miles away, would be told that this was a very complex scientific matter.

The poor fellow would first be directed to the neuro-scientists and psychologists who would explain how his eyes worked, before being passed on to the physicists (and perhaps meterologists) who would explain about photons and the atmosphere between his eyes and the hill. Eventually he would probably be handed on to the geographers and geologists who would explain the physical appearance and composition of the hill itself.

Thus the simple problem of seeing a hill five miles away had been converted into several different packages of irrelevant academic rubbish, capable of providing a living for at least five theoretical boffins and their families.

Nikola Tesla knew it was rubbish, because he knew that everything in the universe is connected to everything else by an endless loop of electromagnetic particles, also known as energy, which Tesla proved resonated (vibrated naturally) within identical frequency ranges. If you hook a man up to a piece of medical equipment called an electroencephalograph or EEG, its chart will display Delta, Alpha, Theta and Beta "brain" waves vibrating through a range of frequencies from about one to twenty-five cycles per second, with most of the meaningful activity in a central band between five and fifteen cycles per second. But if you then remove the electroencephalograph sensors from the man and push them deep into damp conductive earth instead, you will find the EEG chart faithfully displays Delta, Alpha, Theta and Beta waves in identical frequency ranges.

Indeed, if the medical sensors could be suitably adapted they would detect identical vibrations in air and "outer space" as well. Thus man is merely an integral part of an electromagnetic whole which embraces his eyes, the apparently empty space between his eyes and the hill, the hill itself, and the universe. Remove or even deflect any of the billions of particles comprising this electromagnetic whole, and man would be rendered incapable of seeing anything at all.

The source for all of this electromagnetic activity is the universe itself, with billions of stars emitting incalculable amounts of energy, in turn used or replicated by the planets. Planet earth is a gigantic electrical generator spinning around two magnetic poles from which limitless energy can be tapped at will, provided appropriate tuning is used, which in the case of Omega means magnifying and applying appropriate resonant frequencies.

When the Munich Group designed the aerials for Omega's cover navigational role, they used Tesla's 787,412 which stated the frequency "should be less than twenty thousand [cycles]". So the group designed aerial arrays perfectly suited to transmitting at frequencies between five and fifteen thousand cycles per second. Man-made electrical generators provided power for Omega's navigation transmitters, which worked perfectly, allowing pinpoint accuracy for submerged submarines monitoring the standing waves emitted by at least three of the Omega stations, known to navigators as a "position fix".

What the group did not tell the politicians and the military was that aerials which can transmit at five to fifteen thousand cycles per second can also transmit on all other frequencies with direct mathematical relationships, known as harmonics. The secret of Omega's hidden electromagnetic control role was its ability to simultaneously or sequentially transmit on even numbered sub-harmonic frequencies between five and fifteen cycles per second, a range embracing the resonant frequencies of the earth itself and the earth to ionospheric gap.

And just as submerged submarines could fix their positions with pinpoint accuracy by monitoring the standing waves emitted by at least three of the Omega stations, the Munich Group could use the Omega network to direct sub-harmonic standing waves and thus resonant effects of virtually any magnitude to literally any point on earth, with equal centimetric accuracy. Exactly which effect was produced at that point on earth would be determined by the precise resonant frequency used, accurate to three decimal places.

Every material in the universe, organic or inorganic, has its own unique resonant frequency, allowing Omega extreme accuracy in its electromagnetic control role. The best known example of natural resonance is the soprano who shattered a wine glass twenty feet away by singing a particular note. She was singing a note at the unique resonant frequency of the glass itself, which vibrated in sympathy until it exceeded its stress tolerance, then shattered into hundreds of pieces. Using exactly the same principle, if Omega directed the resonant frequency of, say, basalt rock, at a precise point on the earth's surface at vastly increased magnitude, the effect would be identical in that the basalt rock would vibrate naturally with increasing force, until eventually a tremor or earthquake occurred at that precise point.

Destroying entire regions by earthquake or tempest would be a complete overkill for a network designed from the outset by the Munich Group to "persuade" a bunch of megalomaniacs to cease and desist from violence, threatened against whichever small sovereign nation was the chosen "Terrorist State of The Month", so the Omega network would normally be used to demonstrate the likely catastrophic punitive response if the megalomaniacs refused to heed warnings from the Munich Group.

Say, for example, that the American megalomaniacs were planning to bomb another hundred thousand Iraqis into instant bloody oblivion, the Munich Group might send a telex or facsimile to an unlisted number deep within the US Department of State, suggesting such action would be considered extremely bad manners, and if it was not cancelled immediately, the electrical supply to the entire eastern seaboard of America would be disrupted, causing incalculable damage to property and commerce in the megalomaniacs' own back yard.

Believing such a threat to be impossible, this first warning would normally be ignored by the megalomaniacs, in which case the Munich Group might send another cryptic message two or three days later: "Watch Auckland, New Zealand, very carefully". Exactly one hour after this message rolled off the facsimile machine Omega might direct a standing wave at the exact resonant frequency of copper, across the underground cables connecting the major power stations to the business districts of Auckland.

With the exact level of invisible resonant energy calculated in advance, the electromagnetic properties of the particles in the copper cables would change immediately, creating infinite resistance and blocking the flow of electricity to the city. Chaos would reign supreme. Weeks later when the world's top electrical engineers examined huge sections of the cable in the laboratory they would find nothing wrong with it, simply because there was nothing wrong with it. The resonant blocking effect used locally in New Zealand would leave no visible signs of damage. In this way the American Department of State might be convinced, solely by the grim demonstration in New Zealand, that it should spare a hundred thousand innocent Iraqi lives.

The two most crucial aspects of the Omega network are how the resonant frequencies are magnified to the point where they can cause incalculable damage up to and including earthquake and tempest, and the remote technology used to access the network itself. Both are extremely dangerous subjects to write about, even as fiction.

In 1985, not long after the Omega network started transmitting in its electromagnetic role, four very real Australians stumbled across a portable remote control facility at Cape Leveque, north of Broome in Western Australia. They asked the two no-persons manning the facility a lot of inquisitive questions about the pair of caesium atomic clocks and other specialized equipment they were operating, and the two no-persons in turn asked a lot of seemingly friendly questions about them, such as their names, occupations, where they lived and so on.

Within seven days of leaving Cape Leveque three of the four Australians had unusual fatal accidents, and the fourth, sensing her own possibly imminent death, changed names and went underground. To this day the surviving member of the group lives in constant fear, though she has no idea exactly what she is afraid of. No matter. In the view of the author living with a limited amount of fear is preferable to being dead. Nowadays this sole survivor says nothing about what she saw at Cape Leveque, which is very good. She may yet live to a ripe old age.

Long before this incident, the Munich Group encountered several delays in the construction of its nine "real" Omega stations. Though supposed to be on-air and operational by the early nineteen seventies, two stations in particular posed almost insurmountable problems. Peace groups in Norway and New Zealand, incorrectly identifying the Omega network solely as a command and control network for American nuclear ballistic missile submarines, mounted campaigns to block construction in both countries.

Because the Munich Group did not at that time have sufficient funds or access to either country enabling it to drill nverted Omega stations in their place, its members could do little more than seethe with impatience. The Norwegian station was of no real importance because it was only a dummy in the electromagnetic role, but the New Zealand station was critical to operations in the southern hemisphere. The Omega network would work without it, but not at 100% efficiency.

One year after the meeting in Munich the group decided that New Zealand was simply too hard, and opted for the critical southern station to be built instead in the Australian state of Victoria. Unfortunately there was now opposition from Australian peaceniks equally determined to stop this "dedicated ballistic missile guidance system" from being built. Several frustrating years followed and then in in the early seventies two things happened.

The Australian Government set up an inquiry into the control of Omega under the initial guidance of the Minister for Foreign Affairs, the Hon. Gough Whitlam, QC, MP. In turn this sudden use of a dreaded committee, likely to cause extreme delays simply because it was a committee, alarmed the Munich Group to the point where it later decided to send a no-person project engineer to Australia to examine the feasibility of building an "inverted" Omega station if all else failed. That no-person was an engineer using a passport in the name of John Friedrich, though he was known to the Munich Group only as "Iago".

Over the years that followed Friedrich visited several potential sites across outback Australia, earmarking three for future development, but then in 1977 confidential advice was received that the official Omega station to be sited at Darriman in Victoria would definitely get the green light. Friedrich was then quietly infiltrated into a little known organization called The National Safety Council of Australia (Victorian Division), as its engineer for emergency services.

By late 1981 the Omega project was well under way and John Friedrich was kept busy ensuring that it did not come under attack from a bunch of well-meaning peaceniks. During the same year three other no-persons, experts in oilfield and security operations, were quietly relocated to Sale and Port Welshpool, sites in Victoria that bracketed the Omega station and which would shortly become the two principal operational bases for the miraculously expanded emergency services section of the NSCA (Victorian Division).

The choice of oilfield and security experts was no accident. Over recent years the Munich Group had quietly acquired significant funding and was no longer prepared to run the risk of losing global Omega capability at the whim of any single national government. To counter this, five inverted Omega stations were to be built (drilled) to ensure global integrity. One inverted Omega would be drilled in Australia, another in America and three more elsewhere. The level of drilling expertise would need to be extremely high, as would security, hence the three extra no-persons relocated to Sale and Port Welshpool.

The Australian Omega station started transmitting in 1982 and the momentum of the peaceniks slowed considerably, until a few years later Omega was effectively forgotten by the demonstrators, who turned their energetic attention back towards more obvious and visually menacing threats such as Pine Gap and Nurrungar, harmless American bases used for electronic evesdropping and missile surveillance.

Unfortunately John Friedrich had the bit between his teeth and managed to upgrade the emergency services section of the NSCA (Victorian Division) from a low-profile security facility desired by the Munich Group to protect Omega from attack, to a very high-profile organization beloved by several branches of the Australian Government, many of whom found uses for the extraordinary skills of the NSCA emergency personnel, whose abilities, not surprisingly, surpassed those of the military.

This increased profile disturbed the Munich Group, and it also puzzled them. Although the group had discreetly arranged certain monies in the late seventies to allow the emergency services section to be suitably expanded, they had certainly not arranged the vast sums of money needed to expand the organization to the point where, by the mid-eighties, Friedrich alone controlled more than 400 personnel.

It later transpired that John Friedrich had exceeded his duties by borrowing vast sums of money from the banks, secured only by fictional sea containers filled with imaginary safety equipment. Whether he did this for reasons of personal aggrandisement, or because he genuinely thought that Omega was in need of vastly enhanced security, will probably never be known.

The bubble finally burst in early 1989 when the deception was discovered and the NSCA (Victorian Division) was disbanded, and along with it, Omega's discreet security cover. A year later someone fired several bullets into Friedrich's family home at Seaton from close range and this seemed to be a turning point for him. Under acute stress from the near misses on his wife and children he visited clinical psychologist Ian Joblin, but a year after that, on 26 July 1991, five days before he would be forced into open court in Victoria to give evidence under oath, John Friedrich alias Iago and several other names, was found dead with gunshot wounds to the head. A pistol was found nearby but John Friedrich, no-person project engineer, did not leave a suicide note.

In the years following 1981 the five "inverted" Omega stations were drilled as planned, and sit there to this day in the event that certain national governments decide to tear down any of the original nine "real" Omega stations. As late as 1986 contingency plans existed to drill another three inverted Omegas, so that the cover navigational role could be dispensed with entirely if required. Outside of the Munich Group itself, only a handful of people know where the invisible inverted Omega stations are located, and it is likely to stay that way.

It is extremely unlikely that the mainstream military of each host country will ever allow its Omega station to be dismantled, because the mainstream military is acutely aware that in the event of thermonuclear war, the electromagnetic pulses (EMPs) emitted by the weapons will have a devastating effect on all medium and high radio frequencies, and burn out the transistor junctions in every satellite in orbit around the earth. Under those conditions the only reliable form of communication left would be ground waves at very low frequencies, which in effect means Omega and a handful of other less powerful VLF transmitters.

In fact the Australian Omega station was recently stripped of its navigation title but the mast was not derigged, nor were its personnel dispersed. Instead, as the Omega website advises, the station was handed across to the Australian Navy and is now controlled from Canberra. Well, yes, a small part of the Australian Omega station is now controlled from Canberra.

The morality of whether or not the Munich Group should have the right to use such brute power to bring entire governments to heel is debatable, but perhaps no more debatable than the identical "right" of dictatorships sometimes masquerading as "representative democracies" to engage in wholesale murder across the globe to achieve their own geopolitical ends.

When the Soviet Government decided to use crop spraying planes to slaughter five thousand Afghans with binary angel dust it did not first seek approval from the Soviet people. When the Iranian Government decided to murder several hundred civilians in the Iraqi town of Halabja with phosgene gas, it likewise did not first seek the approval of the Iranian people. There are hundreds of other similar examples.

The essential difference between the Munich Group and the murderous megalomaniacs who constitute a substantial part of elected and unelected governments around the world, is that the latter are subject to direction from forces far more powerful than themselves. If politicians wish to be re- elected and thus retain their lavish perks of office, they are reliant not only on the people, but also on those who fund their advertising, and on the media who polish their images on national and international television.

On their proven track records the latter groups are dedicated to "globalism", another bureaucratic code word meaning a one world government, controlled by and for the sole benefit of a tiny global elite. Over the years the power base shifts backwards and forwards like the sands in a desert, but the core objective remains the same. Thirty years ago the global elite used communism as a cover and Moscow as their base. Nowadays exactly the same global elite use representative democracy as a cover and New York as their base. The more things change the more they stay the same.

In contrast the Munich Group is subject to no such pressures or objectives, and simply tries to check this headlong rush into cultural oblivion by use of threat alone, supplemented when absolutely necessary by punitive action against those individuals or nations perceived as being totally out of control. It requires, for example, completely unbiased and unemotional judgement to direct Omega to spin up a twenty trillion horsepower hurricane as a threat, and it requires equally unemotional judgement and a very steady hand to finally guide the awesome destructive power of that twenty trillion horespower hurricane to its target, if all other subtle warnings are not heeded.

With the wishes of most inhabitants of this planet completely ignored by the global elite, it might reasonably be argued that the Munich Group and Omega are indeed "The Final Solution", the only mechanism left which can invisibly but inexorably bring irresistable pressure to bear on the global elite, and thus prevent enslavement of the world. If this is the case, then there is one man to whom we all owe an enormous vote of thanks, a giant of a man who, at the end, died penniless and alone: Nikola Tesla.

Who Really Murdered Holly Wells and Jessica Chapman?

British Police torture least likely suspects Ian Huntley and Maxine Carr from Soham Village, while deliberately ignoring thousands of more likely suspects from nearby American Air Force bases

Staff Sergeant Frank Ronghi from Fort Bragg, North Carolina, pleaded guilty to forcibly sodomizing and then murdering an 11-year-old girl during early 2000

When British police arrested Ian Huntley and Maxine Carr [pictured left and right above] during the early hours of Saturday 17 August, on suspicion of the abduction and murder of Holly Wells and Jessica Chapman, they did so in the certain knowledge that absolutely no hard evidence existed incriminating either suspect. The reason for the rapid arrests was very simple: Just hours earlier, two small bodies had been found near the perimeter fence at USAF Lakenheath, and the Prime Minister at 10 Downing Street was terrified of a massive political scandal involving American servicemen based in, or transiting through, the United Kingdom.

Shortly after the arrests, British and American media organizations demonized Ian Huntley and Maxine Carr so successfully that public attention was diverted away from Lakenheath completely, and focused instead on the young couple from Soham who had earlier willingly spoken to television crews about their concerns for the well being of the two missing 10-year-old girls. Both knew the girls reasonably well. Ian Huntley was the caretaker at their school, and Maxine Carr was a former teaching auxiliary in their class.

Millions of viewers around the world watched Ian and Maxine being interviewed by the media, and most were impressed by the openness of their statements and their genuine willingness to help if possible. Experts in non-verbal communication also noticed that Ian and Maxine's involuntary body and eye movements perfectly matched what they were saying verbally to the journalists.

In other words, both appeared to be telling the truth both verbally and non-verbally, an almost impossible feat for even a trained liar to fabricate. It is critical to note here also that both came across on television as perfectly normal, sane individuals, a reality later to be inexplicably challenged by police and psychiatrists in Cambridgeshire.

If Huntley and Carr had been involved at all with the abduction and murder of Holly Wells and Jessica Chapman, would they have then been stupid enough to run the gauntlet of about 10,000 American servicemen en-route, and dump the two small bodies in a location clearly visible from Lakenheath Control Tower, taxi track, and main runway? A serviceman with detailed knowledge of activities and procedures inside the base might get away with it unseen, but certainly not two civilians from Soham in Cambridgeshire. So the perimeter would be an ideal dumping ground for American servicemen eager to return to “safe” territory at USAF Lakenheath, before either entering their barracks on the base, or catching a shuttle bus to USAF Mildenhall.

In an attempt to demonize Ian Huntley still further, police “leaked” the damning information that he had been arrested for rape a number of years earlier. Well, yes, almost. While still a teenager Huntley had consensual sex with his girlfriend, who was only 15-years-old at the time, an offence in the United Kingdom known as statutory rape. He was never charged with an offence however, and his former girlfriend [now age 21 years] recently confirmed it was a mutual crush [love affair], with enthusiastic sexual consent on both sides.

So for a while at least, police and media have managed to deflect attention away from the two massive nearby USAF bases at Lakenheath and Mildenhall, and the political minefield lurking just below the surface if the British public ever find out about the very large numbers of children abused, raped, and sometimes murdered by American servicemen on overseas duty. So let us properly consider the “American Connection”, before returning later in this report to the unbelievable ongoing psychological abuse of Ian Huntley and Maxine Carr.

Though earlier in the investigation police declared they would be interviewing “700 known sex offenders" of British nationality, there was no mention of interviewing the 10,000+ US servicemen based in close proximity to Soham Village, or determining which other American servicemen has transited through the two bases, and on which flights, since Holly Wells and Jessica Chapman first disappeared.

The simple fact that Holly and Jessica's bodies were found within yards of the USAF Lakenheath perimeter fence, which in turn provides access to the American barracks within, should have had British police knocking on Lakenheath's front door immediately. Unfortunately, any such action might have accidentally undermined Prime Minister Tony Blair's personal slavish dedication to George W Bush's "War on Terror."

Though most members of the American military are unquestionably nice people, the small number who are not, are invariably psychotic savages. It is a matter of public record that many American servicemen have habitually carried out sickening attacks against civilians while on overseas duty, happy in the knowledge that the serious assault or murder of women or girls in Japan, Kosovo or England, carries a lesser penalty than at home.

One such case is that of Staff Sergeant Frank Ronghi, who on 24 August 2000 pleaded guilty to sodomizing and killing an 11-year-old Kosovar girl in January the same year. A member of his platoon testified that Staff Sergeant Ronghi disdainfully claimed, "It's easy to get away with this shit in a third-world country."

The "shit" Ronghi referred to is described here by the US Army Pathologist for Europe. "Her right jaw was fractured, practically bisected," said Lieutenant Colonel Kathleen Ingwersen, "We found evidence of sperm and semen in her vagina, mouth and rectum," she testified to a hushed hearing. "There was trauma to the neck muscles, the trachea and the carotid artery," Colonel Ingwersen said, adding she had found evidence of "blunt trauma" as the child was apparently beaten, choked and forced to kneel, face to the ground, as she was sodomized.

But in a perverse way Ronghi was proved right about the overall American perception of the "lesser worth" of women and children, in what he and others continually refer to as the third world. At his trial the Staff Sergeant was sentenced to life imprisonment, despite the fact that an identical offence against an American woman in the USA, would have resulted in his execution.

It would be impossible to list here all such vile attacks against "locals" by American servicemen overseas because there have been far too many. However, in order to educate the British police [who mercifully are rarely exposed to similar atrocities in Cambridgeshire and Suffolk] it seems prudent to mention a handful, thereby proving that Staff Sergeant Ronghi is far from being an isolated case.

In 1955, an American soldier was sentenced to death for the murder of a six-year-old Okinawan girl, a sentence that was later commuted to life imprisonment. During 1966 a US soldier confessed to strangling a young waitress. Then in 1972, US soldiers were sentenced to life imprisonment for strangling local women. Later In 1975, a US soldier was sent to prison for raping two junior high school students. Local Okinawan police arrested two US soldiers during 1985 in the act of raping a woman.

During a spate of crimes in 1995, a US soldier was arrested for the hammering death of a young woman., two children were killed by a drunken soldier, and three US soldiers brutally raped a young schoolgirl. In January 2000 a US seaman was sentenced for sexually assaulting a 16-year-old Japanese girl. Remember this is only a small part of the overall list, nor does it include the many more alleged perpetrators who Japanese and other authorities claim were “spirited out of the country and back to the USA” before they could be apprehended and charged.

The last point to consider before returning to the plight of Ian Huntley and Maxine Carr, is the strange fate of four wives at Fort Bragg in North Carolina, the former home base of Staff Sergeant Ronghi. All four wives were allegedly killed by their Sergeant husbands when they returned from active duty in Afghanistan, during the same week that Holly Wells and Jessica Chapman went missing. US Army authorities are currently trying to establish whether or not an anti-malarial drug all were taking contributed to the murders. The drug is acknowledged to have extra-pyramidal psychotic side-effects, and is prescribed to all US Servicemen in Afghanistan.

There are no direct flights out of Afghanistan to the USA, meaning that all American servicemen including those seriously affected by the drug, and also affected by PTSD (Post Traumatic Stress Disorder) are obliged to change aircraft either in Germany or in England – normally at USAF Mildenhall. As a matter of urgency the British public should shame their local police into establishing accurately how many of these servicemen transited through USAF Mildenhall and USAF Lakenheath during the week that Holly and Jessica vanished.

Initially on Saturday 17 August, Ian Huntley and Maxine Carr were arrested “on suspicion” of being involved in the murders of Holly Wells and Jessica Chapman. Each was taken to a different police station in Cambridgeshire for interrogation, which is standard police procedure. However, this is also the point at which standard police procedure vanished completely. Obviously Ian and Maxine were determined to protest their innocence, and refused to provide police with a convenient “confession”, no matter how tired they were, and no matter how much extreme pressure was applied by the big burly threatening policemen. There was also a marked absence of defence lawyers making statements on behalf of the suspects.

In an extraordinary move, police then applied to a “Closed Court” for an extension of Huntley and Carr’s detention, though the reasons were not made public. There was actually no need for police to provide us with a reason, because it was blatantly obvious they still had absolutely nothing to connect the two suspects with the two murders. If at that stage police had any hard evidence linking Ian Huntley or Maxine Carr to the murders, or had managed to coerce a confession out of either, they would have been charged immediately.

Then on Tuesday 20 August, just twenty-four hours before the legally extended detention was due to expire at 6.19 am on Wednesday, a complete team of psychiatrists appeared as if by magic, and deemed that Ian Huntley was unfit to appear in court. He was then

"sectioned" under the Mental Health Act 1983 and remanded to Rampton high-security psychiatric hospital, at Retford in North Nottinghamshire, without being charged with any offence.

Now think about this carefully people, think about it! When we all saw Ian Huntley on international television he was entirely coherent and unquestionably sane. But apparently, after a mere three days in police custody, he became insane. How? Did the police deprive him of sleep and induce a [predictable and natural] nervous breakdown, or are the all-too-convenient government psychiatrists a pack of liars? You choose…

One thing is certain. We have all just watched the gross violation of Ian Huntley's legal and human rights on international television, and we have done absolutely nothing about it. Ask yourself: Is it even legal to section a man in England under the Mental Health Act before he is charged? When asked this precise question, Dr Harris of Rampton Psychiatric Hospital was evasive, replying, "It is not unheard of, but it is very unusual."

Once inside the terrifying Rampton building, a Victorian hulk originally founded as an asylum in 1912 under the Criminal Lunatics Act of 1860, police charged Ian Huntley with murder. He is now at the mercy of a five-man psychiatric team who will assess his "symptoms" night and day over the next month, and shove him full of God-knows-what medication. This is the Gulag Archipelago all over again, and Joe Stalin would have loved it.

If, after a full month at the hands of the medical nutters in Rampton, Ian Huntley should choose to "confess" to everything including the murder of the Princess of Wales, try not to believe him. Stalin's enemies used to confess all the time in the Gulag, but only after being pumped full of Reserpine by the shrinks.

The next problem for police was Maxine Carr. Clearly no-one would believe that two people had suddenly gone completely insane in police custody at the same time, so senior officers in Cambridgeshire [and at the Home Office] had to think of something a little more creative. They knew Huntley and Carr were both were innocent of course, but somehow Maxine had to be brought under control. In other words Maxine Carr had to be so badly frightened that she would be positively eager to "cooperate" with police when the drugged, perhaps electro-shocked and certainly docile Ian Huntley was finally paraded in front of the courts.

So police formally charged Maxine Carr with "attempting to pervert the course of justice", i. e. lying to police whether she had or not, and quietly arranged to have her incarcerated in the most brutal and terrifying of Britain's women's' prisons, at Holloway in London. "Attempting to pervert" is not a violent crime requiring a high security establishment of course, and there were certainly prisons closer to Soham, but only Holloway would have the desired devastating effect on Maxine, hopefully bringing her under immediate control.

Although the Victorian Holloway was replaced in a phased rebuilding programme between 1975 and 1985, it has managed to retain its brutal reputation. In 1995 Sir David Ramsbotham, then inspector of prisons, walked out in disgust at the conditions he found inside. He noted that 75% of women at the jail were suffering from some form of identifiable mental disorder, while one in 10 was suicidal. Almost half were drug addicts in need of immediate detoxification, while more than half had serious alcohol problems and nearly 95% were on sleeping pills.

Naturally enough, on its own this would be quite enough to send a quiet country girl like Maxine insane in weeks, but the British authorities wanted to make absolutely sure. So before she left for London, police arranged a court hearing for her in the local town of Peterborough, and made sure the media and “rent a mob” people knew about its exact timing well in advance.

As the police van approached the court, the commotion started for the innocent woman not yet convicted of any offence at all. Unseen hands banged on the metal van, and several females led an ugly chorus, jeering and shouting at a woman they could not see - a thick grey blanket had been placed over Maxine Carr's head - for a double murder with which she has not even been charged. "Evil bitch", screamed one. "Sick cow," spat another. In the melee, a woman and her two daughters unfurled a home-made banner. "Rot in hell forever", it said.

Orwellian media "Rent a Mob" frightening innocent Maxine Carr outside Peterborough Court

Trial by television media had well and truly started, and the trembling Maxine Carr had not yet even reached that special part of hell called Holloway. But a week or two in there with the deranged and the druggies should have her “cooperating” with anything and everything the Cambridgeshire Police Service wants.

But is that really the point here? The Chief Constable and all of his officers at Cambridgeshire Constabulary should be mortally ashamed of their blatant abuse of police powers, abuse of the judicial process, and abuse of the Mental Health Act. In turn it goes almost without saying that we the public should not believe a word of any subsequent “confession” that Maxine Carr is coerced into making, during or after her terrifying ordeal at Holloway.

Nor should we necessarily believe that the little Cambridgeshire Constabulary [1,307 proud officers and still recruiting] had the overall power to pull off these impressive stunts without some very heavy political assistance. Think about it carefully. The original players in a tight little Cambridgeshire county investigation have been scattered to the four winds. Ian Huntley is 100 miles away to the north in Rampton, Nottinghamshire, and Maxine Carr is 100 miles away to the south in Holloway, London. The bodies of the girls were actually found in Suffolk, directly involving a third force, the Suffolk Constabulary. And oh, yes, police investigators from the Norfolk Constabulary did quite a lot of the leg work on this case.

So the Cambridgeshire Holly and Jessica Case, is no longer really the Cambridgeshire Holly and Jessica case at all, is it? The only people who will know exactly what is going on in London, Nottinghamshire, Norfolk, Suffolk and Cambridgeshire in the future, will be the small group of powerful manipulators who set the scene. This is the same small group who had sufficient power to arrange special closed courts, send a truckload of wobbly shrinks to Cambridgeshire, subvert the Mental Health Act, and personally arrange the twin hells of Rampton and Holloway for suspects Ian Huntley and Maxine Carr. Believe me, only senior bureaucrats at the Home Office in London have sufficient raw power to arrange all of this.

There is a final point to consider about the case itself. A newspaper report states “The bodies of murdered 10-year-old girls Holly Wells and Jessica Chapman were discovered in a ‘severely decomposed and partially skeletonised’ state, and the pair were almost certainly not killed where they were discovered, a coroner’s inquest was told yesterday. Their remains were found last Saturday in woodlands outside a United States air base at Lakenheath, Suffolk.” Even now, the cause or place of death cannot be established, and the Coroner has released the bodies to the parents for burial.

The reason for the importance of this statement will be obvious to residents in the Lakenheath area, whose local newspapers have saturated them for weeks with the information that Ian Huntley and Maxine Carr once lived years ago in a house owned by relatives less than a half-mile away from where the bodies were found. So this information allowing police to “point the finger” at the pair has long been in the public domain, and would be of enormous value to anyone wishing to deflect attention away from the real killers. Adding real substance to this claim is the fact that the path beside which the bodies were located is well used by walkers, but the bodies were not “found” until the very morning of Ian Huntley and Maxine Carr’s arrests.

Now ask yourself what you would do if you were Ian Huntley and had really been involved in the murder of the two little girls. Would you deliberately move their bodies close to a residence that you had lived in some years before, thereby tacitly pointing the finger of guilt at yourself, or would you move the bodies well away from any such residence? You choose, though even a deranged person in Holloway should be able to select the correct answer to this elementary question.

Taking the opposite view, what would you do if you were a deranged American serviceman who managed to smuggle the two little girls inside USAF Lakenheath, and then murdered them at some remote location inside the very large airfield boundary, with its multitude of convenient empty buildings? Would you leave the bodies where they lay until the smell of putrefaction attracted the attention of the Military Police at the base, or would you toss the pathetic remains over the perimeter fence one dark night, as close as possible to the former Huntley residence you learned about in the local Suffolk newspaper, and then tip off police? Once again, you choose.

No matter what you choose and no matter what you think, it will probably make no difference to the final outcome. The atmosphere surrounding this case is so heavily laden with political fog that you could cut it with a knife. At the national level you cannot afford to rock the boat because of Tony Blair's "special relationship" with the White House, and all this entails for his personal prestige and the "War on Terror". That said, Tony Blair's wife Cherie is apparently a leading human rights lawyer, who might decide to take independent personal action where this gross abuse of human rights in her own back yard is concerned.

At the county level you cannot rock the boat because, as the Chamber of Commerce will eagerly explain, those thousands of nice American servicemen at USAF Lakenheath and USAF Mildenhall spend millions of pounds each year with local businesses in Suffolk, Norfolk and Cambridgeshire. You remember the people at the Chamber of Commerce don't you? Masons, Rotarians, Buffs and the rest, guzzling free Budweiser Beer at the Lakenheath Officer's Club, while looking down their noses at the Base Commander.

If you live in Britain and really care about legal and human rights for everyone including Ian Huntley, Maxine Carr, your own children and yourself, there is probably only one thing you can do: Call or fax the Chief Constable of Cambridgeshire Constabulary, expressing your disgust at the actions of his officers where this matter is concerned, and seeking his personal assurance that the illegal and immoral psychological assault on Huntley and Carr will be discontinued immediately.

Though it may seem pointless phoning or writing to a Chief Constable who is visibly not really in charge of events, he is nonetheless the only visible "front end" who can be directly and officially approached on the matter. If you keep pressing the right buttons often enough, you can and will make a difference. More than a decade ago matters were seriously mismanaged in a case involving myself, and I took exactly this action. The last time I bothered to check, I still held the record for receiving three written apologies in a single week regarding the same mismanaged case: The first was from the Home Office, the second from Special Branch, and the third from the Chief Constable of Suffolk Constabulary. If I can make a difference, so can you. Get on with it!

"T" Stands For "Torture" In The Brave New Gulag Archipelago

The illegal return of murder suspect Ian Huntley to secure psychiatric prison for another 28 days of drugs and "truth therapy", highlights the reintroduction of Witch Trials and Inquisitions in the "War on Terror"

There is a precedent for Huntley's psychiatric abuse. During 1996, Australian remand prisoner Martin Bryant was held in illegal strict solitary confinement for 150 days, and "helped" by psychiatrists and psychologists until he finally pleaded guilty to the Port Arthur massacre. At no time did Australian police ever try to corroborate Bryant's false "guilty" pleas

Ian Huntley, who stands accused of the murder of British ten-year-old girls Holly Wells and Jessica Chapman, was rushed from Rampton high-security psychiatric prison to a court at Peterborough in Cambridgeshire at noon on 10 September 2002. Having run the gauntlet of the obligatory media hate mob pre-positioned outside in the street, Huntley was rapidly processed through the Magistrates Court to the [higher] Crown Court in less that one hour, an all time record for the British legal system which normally allows eight days for this process.

Once in the Crown Court, Huntley was charged with attempted “Conspiracy to pervert the course of justice”, for allegedly lying to police during their investigations. Having been charged with this further startling offence, Ian Huntley was immediately remanded back to Rampton high security psychiatric prison for a further 28 days of psychiatric evaluation.

Not one single British newspaper or television network tried to explain this extraordinary move to the public, though some of the brighter reporters did note a change in Huntley himself, who has been completely at the mercy of the shrinks in Rampton Gulag since 20 August: “Huntley looked gaunt and has lost weight since his arrest just over three weeks ago. His face is spotty and he has grey steaks in his hair. He is a shadow of the stocky man who appeared on TV a month ago to say he was one of the last people to see the girls alive.” The ways in which Huntley has been psychologically tortured to bring about these dramatic changes in his appearance, will be explained in detail later in this report.

By using the Crown Court in this deplorable way to bring a further charge against Huntley, police have actually revealed plenty about their lack of progress in the case. If the shrinks had been able to force a false confession out of Ian Huntley, the police would have visited Rampton in a flash, obtained his signature and sent him to Wormwood Scrubs Prison for life. You see, under British law if a suspect pleads “guilty” there is no need for a trial. Such a result would be very useful in a politically supercharged case like this, where the naked bodies of the two little girls were actually found close to the boundary fence of the controversial USAF base at Lakenheath.

Technically speaking, the police and courts have also erred seriously in law. When Ian Huntley was first committed to Rampton on 20 September 2002 under the Mental Health Act 1983, it was for the express and sole purpose of evaluating whether or not he was psychologically fit to plead. The police “investigation” was thus completely suspended at that precise point in time. If police considered that Huntley had lied to them during their earlier investigation, they should have charged him with conspiracy when they charged him with murder. Period.

So unwittingly perhaps, senior officers of the Cambridgeshire Constabulary have demonstrated their total lack of evidence in the case, and also their earnest desire that the shrinks should wring a confession out of Huntley one way or the other. Remember, “guilty” pleas mean no embarrassing trial for the investigators. At the same time, girlfriend Maxine Carr has been remanded back to her personal hell in Holloway Prison, in order that she may be frightened and/or physically coerced into telling police the “new” truth about Ian Huntley. Remember, even the Spanish Inquisition liked to have a tame witness ready to denounce the prime suspect.

There is no doubt that Maxine’s treatment has already been used as a weapon against him in Rampton, and Ian Huntley is obviously very concerned about his girlfriend’s plight, a reality inadvertently noted by a reporter in the court: “He showed no emotion as Karim Khalil outlined the prosecution case, describing how the disappearance of the two 10-year-olds from Soham, Cambridgeshire, on 4 August had started a ‘growing and substantial hunt ... to discover their whereabouts’. Only once did Huntley seem to break his apparently trance-like state. He stared in the direction of the judge after Maxine Carr's name was mentioned.” And this from another reporter: “He [Huntley] became agitated when the name of Carr, charged with attempting to pervert justice, was read out. His eyes darted to a barrister, and he began to rub his nose and flick his head back.”

Less than a month ago we all saw Ian Huntley on television, confident and relaxed, talking to reporters about the two girls and the fact that [from the apparent timing of their disappearance], he may have been the last person in Soham to talk to them before they vanished. Exactly how such a confident man could be reduced to the dazed state exhibited in the court after a “mere” three weeks in a psychiatric institution, may at first seem difficult to understand, but please be patient, all will be explained shortly.

As a man charged with an offence but not yet convicted, Ian Huntley would have been held as a “remand” prisoner in a standard prison while awaiting trial. He would have been allowed to wear his own clothes, make telephone calls to the outside world and receive plenty of visitors. Clearly this relatively relaxed atmosphere could not be manipulated to bring extreme pressure to bear on Huntley, so the Cambridgeshire Constabulary and the Home Office in London conspired to have him committed under the Mental Health Act 1983. Once committed, the safeguards protecting a remand prisoner were completely removed, allowing the shrinks to have a field day.

Immediately after arrival at Rampton high security psychiatric prison, Ian Huntley was forcibly stripped of his watch, other personal possessions, and all of his clothing including his underwear. Thereafter he was allowed to wear only a knee length blue smock, and was then placed in an isolation cell on “suicide watch” with the lights burning brightly 24-hours every day. A team of five psychiatric personnel were assigned the duty of “observing” and “evaluating” Huntley, a man whose entire world had just been turned upside down by them personally.

Ian Huntley no longer had his watch, so he was unable to keep track of time. He had no outside window in the cell, so in turn could not judge whether it was night or day. He was forced to wear a knee-length women’s dress with no underwear beneath, designed to heighten his sense of vulnerability and thus compliance with commands issued by the Rampton shrinks. .

Would these deceptively simple procedures be enough to generate lasting psychological damage within a three week period? Oh yes, they certainly would, because the procedure used on Ian Huntley precisely mimics one of the most notorious psychological experiments of all time. Now known generically as “The Zimbardo Prison Study”, the experiment was conducted in the basement of Stanford University during late 1971, in the wake of the San Quentin and Attica prison riots.

Rare original photographs from the Zimbardo Prison Study, August 1971
Note the male "Prisoner" in the knee length smock, exactly the same as Ian Huntley in Rampton

In less than a week the experiment went catastrophically wrong, and from that day forward the procedures used became a complete “no go zone” for psychiatrists and psychologists alike. Rest assured that every lousy shrink, psychologist and mental nurse in Rampton knows about the Zimbardo Experiment, its consequences, and the fact that the procedures are banned from use in psychiatry and clinical psychology. They ignored and continue to ignore the bans where Ian Huntley is concerned. Just how devastating the Zimbardo Experiment was, and must be for Huntley now, is shown here briefly through the eyes of a participating psychologist:
“On Sunday morning, Aug., 17, 1971, nine young men were ‘arrested’ in their homes by Palo Alto police. At least one of those arrested vividly remembers the shock of having his neighbors come out to watch the commotion as TV cameras recorded his hand-cuffing for the nightly news. The arrestees were among about 70 young men, mostly college students eager to earn $15 a day for two weeks, who volunteered as subjects for an experiment on prison life that had been advertised in the Palo Alto Times.

“After interviews and a battery of psychological tests, the two dozen judged to be the most normal, average and healthy were selected to participate, assigned randomly either to be guards or prisoners. Those who would be prisoners were booked at a real jail, then blindfolded and driven to campus where they were led into a makeshift prison in the basement of Jordan Hall. Those assigned to be guards were given uniforms and instructed that they were not to use violence but that their job was to maintain control of the prison.

“From the perspective of the researchers, the experiment became exciting on day two when the prisoners staged a revolt. Once the guards had crushed the rebellion, ‘they steadily increased their coercive aggression tactics, humiliation and dehumanization of the prisoners,’ Zimbardo recalls. ‘The staff had to frequently remind the guards to refrain from such tactics,’ he said, and the worst instances of abuse occurred in the middle of the night when the guards thought the staff was not watching. The guards' treatment of the prisoners ‘resulted in extreme stress reactions that forced us to release five prisoners, one a day, prematurely.’ ”

On day six the entire experiment, planned to run for two weeks, had to be terminated completely because of spiraling violence among the guards and acute stress among the prisoners. One of the psychologists who was involved in the experiment as an observer, later wrote: “I was sick to my stomach. When it's happening to you, it doesn't feel heroic; it feels real scary. It feels like you are a deviant.”

Details of the experiment are well known. They are included in most basic psychology texts and in a public television psychology course, "Discovering Psychology," that Zimbardo wrote and narrates. Movie rights have been optioned, "60 Minutes" has filmed a segment on the experiment, and even a punk rock band in Los Angeles calls itself Stanford Prison Experiment.

As you might expect, Ian Huntley is not the only man to have these obscene techniques used against him in the 21st Century. Hidden from sight down in Cuba, hundreds of illegal prisoners are being subjected to almost identical treatment by US Government shrinks, psychologists and Military Police, the last of whom should be thoroughly ashamed of themselves. Also within federal American jurisdiction are more than 1,000 “disappeared” prisoners locked up after 9/11, whose names the White House refuses to release. Why the refusal?

Torture Victims in Camp X Ray, Cuba

In Australia during 1996 we had the famous case of Martin Bryant, the intellectually impaired young man accused of slaughtering 35 victims at Port Arthur. Police had not a single scrap of forensic or any other evidence linking Bryant to Port Arthur, so psychiatrists and forensic psychologists were tasked with forcing “guilty” pleas out of Bryant, one way or the other. Remember, as with Ian Huntley in England, guilty pleas mean no embarrassing trial for investigators who have no evidence.

Though spared the humiliating woman’s dress, remand prisoner Bryant got everything else they could throw at him. For nearly 150 days straight he was illegally confined to a small windowless cell, and deprived of all forms of contact and stimulation including television, radio and newspapers. After nearly six months of denying any involvement in the crimes, Bryant finally cracked during November 1996 and said “guilty” in return for a television set in his cell, and the promise of an early release. His lawyer and mother were not allowed to be present at his interrogation, despite his intellectually impaired status. For more on the Bryant story click here.

Disturbing for many is the rapidly expanding power of psychiatrists and psychologists in areas where they have no expert or even useful input, for example the police forces of certain western nations. In many jurisdictions these psycho-babblers have the authority to order serving officers to submit to “counseling” when the officers do not want or need it, and in other jurisdictions they have what can only be described as “awesome” powers.

For example, in one Australian police jurisdiction the Chief Psychologist has an absolute power of veto over any applicant who wishes to join the police service, and routinely fails nearly one third of all potential recruits, despite the fact they have already been security checked, and have passed their academic and physical examinations. Those he fails are frequently well qualified academically, high spirited, and have significant leadership qualities which later in their careers would be a marked advantage at senior rank level. To an outsider, the psychological ambition appears to be limiting operational police posts to those who can be relied on to carry out any and all orders, legal or illegal, without question.

Almost without us realizing it, over the past decade the western world has been steadily [and stealthily] moving towards a post-Orwellian environment, where white is black, or indeed any other color selected at will by the mandarins or senators in power. It is becoming increasingly obvious to everyday folk that Ian Huntley, Maxine Carr, Martin Bryant, and thousands of other people mostly incarcerated in American and Israeli prisons, are there for purely political reasons.

Ironically perhaps, this is much the same scenario that existed during the fall of the first Roman Empire. Some people had to be blamed for the catastrophes befalling the Empire, while others had to be blamed for bizarre political murders conducted on the orders of the Emperor and the Senate. The first few hundred “inquisitions” did not take place in Spain as most people fondly imagine, but in Rome. I need hardly mention that the destruction of the twin towers in New York on 11 September 2001, marked the beginning of the fall of second Roman Empire.

The plight of political prisoners should not be forgotten by any of us, and all readers should do what they can to secure the prompt release of Ian Huntley, Maxine Carr, Martin Bryant and all of the other prisoners in Cuba, America and Israel, whose names we do not yet know. It seems unlikely that shrinks will suddenly stop the abuse of their prisoners, and even more unlikely that politicians will ask them to stop.

Psychiatric control is all too convenient for those committed to the abuse of power, which is probably why Doctor Jose Delgado, Director of Neuropsychiatry at Yale University Medical School, was not thrown out of the US Congress back on 24 February 1974, for his unconventional [some might say insane] statements. It seems right to leave you here with what the “eminent” Doctor Delgado advised American politicians:
“We need a program of psychosurgery for political control of our society. The purpose is physical control of the mind. Everyone who deviates from the given norm can be surgically mutilated.

"The individual may think that the most important reality is his own existence, but this is only his personal point of view. This lacks historical perspective.

“Man does not have the right to develop his own mind. This kind of liberal orientation has great appeal. We must electrically control the brain. Some day armies and generals will be controlled by electric stimulation of the brain." … Congressional Record, No 26, Vol. 118

Police Officers from Soham Investigation Arrested on Suspicion of Child Pornography

According to the BBC, Detective Constable Brian Stevens and one other unnamed officer from the team investigating the murders of Holly Wells and Jessica Chapman, were arrested at 7 am yesterday on suspicion of child pornography offences, apparently detected by the child pornography monitoring American “Operation Candyman” run by the FBI with CIA assistance. Tips from Candyman are routed through the British police anti-pornography unit at the Home Office, code-named Operation Ore.

DC Stevens was one of four family liaison officers made available to the families 24-hours-a-day, from the time Holly and Jessica went missing on 4 August, and he also read out a poem at the memorial service for Jessica and her best friend Holly Wells. The other officer arrested, of unknown rank, also worked on the inquiry into the girls' deaths.

While only a fool would completely rule out possible guilt where either of these two officers are concerned, it must be said that the timing of the arrests was extremely useful for people in high places. With no case against Ian Huntley or Maxine Carr, and none likely in the foreseeable future, media attention might eventually wander towards the huge USAF base at Lakenheath, where the bodies of the two girls were found.

With Prime Minister Tony Blair psyching-up an unpopular attack on Iraq in which USAF Lakenheath and nearby USAF Mildenhall would play pivotal roles, the power brokers in London and Washington simply could not afford a scandal involving either base. Putting two local police officers in the frame, whether they are guilty or innocent, will certainly deflect attention away from Lakenheath and Mildenhall – at least for a while.

Though this analysis is obviously speculative, it is certainly no more speculative than suddenly arresting two officers on suspicion of child pornography offences, when the real shock-wave of “Operation Candyman” arrests in Britain and Australia took place more than four months ago, during May 2002.

Furthermore, if these two officers had been genuine suspects at that time, Operation Ore would have taken discreet steps to have them sidelined into non-operational work, certainly well away from any controversial investigation into the two missing ten-year-old girls, Holly Wells and Jessica Chapman.

Curiously perhaps, the two officers were apparently arrested “on suspicion of inciting others to distribute indecent photographs of children - an offence contrary to common law”. This does not necessarily mean that any such “incitement” would require the use of computer equipment located in their homes or offices. The officers could, for example, have been “framed” by an informant calling Operation Candyman in America on the telephone, or by anyone sending an email or facsimile.

Cambridgeshire's Acting Deputy Chief Constable Keith Hoddy - the man in charge of the Holly and Jessica operation – decided to call in an outside force to investigate, which is normal enough in these cases. West Midlands Police will conduct the investigation under the supervision of the Police Complaints Authority at the Home Office.

Check the timeline with me here. Large number of Candyman arrests were made in May 2002, but not these two officers. In August 2002 the same two officers were heavily engaged in the hunt for Holly and Jessica, without being discreetly excluded by Operation Ore. By late August and in early September both officers were heavily involved with the parents of the dead children, but were still not discreetly removed by Operation Ore.

On Tuesday 10 September Ian Huntley appeared in Peterborough court, and despite the psychiatric abuse he has suffered at Rampton, refused to plead “guilty” to the two murders. He was immediately remanded back to Rampton for another 28 days in La La Land, but essentially the game was up. Sooner rather than later the bored media would start looking around for other more likely suspects.

Wednesday 11 September was the anniversary of the attack on New York, with most people in America quietly sobbing into their handkerchiefs, so what were the FBI or CIA doing putting through a call to Operation Ore about these two “suddenly” suspicious officers, right in the middle of tear jerking ceremonies being held across the length and breadth of the USA?. Gee, it must have been important! Or perhaps it was just simple agency concern about the ongoing availability of the twin bases at Lakenheath and Mildenhall for George W. Bush.

Then very neatly at 7 am on Thursday 12 September, a mere two days after Ian Huntley stubbornly refused to take the drop for crimes he did not commit, Detective Constable Stevens and his colleague were arrested. The Police Complaints Authority became involved immediately, which from memory it normally only does if a complaint is laid before it by an individual, or by the Inspectorate of Constabulary at the Home Office.

With an independent constabulary involved, and especially the very heavy Police Complaints Authority, there is absolutely no chance of either officer being cleared overnight, so to speak. If only because of the onerous paperwork involved, the investigation of the Soham officers will take weeks rather than days. This page will be updated as and when there is something to report, but for the moment at least, and unless hard evidence is presented, my money is on the two officers being used as deliberate decoys.

Mossad Bombs Paradise Hotel in Mombasa

The precise anatomy of an attack that only "looked like" it was targeted on Jews

Copyright Joe Vialls, 30 November 2002
http://homepage.ntlworld.com/steveseymour/...ca/mombasa.html

On 28 November it was reported that “al Qaeda” had blown up the Israeli Paradise Hotel at Kikambala Beach near Mombasa, and synchronously launched a missile attack on an Arkia Airlines Boeing 757, taking off from Mombasa Airport en-route for Tel Aviv with 264 Israeli passengers on board. There was wild media talk of outstanding Israeli bravery in the face of these horrifying Muslim atrocities, but in reality the entire “dual attack” was a lookalike invented by the Mossad, designed to deflect attention away growing anger in Indonesia about direct CIA and Mossad involvement in the 12 October bombing of Kuta Beach in Bali. More about this motive later in the report, but first let us use real-time and photographic evidence to prove this deliberate Israeli illusion.

The first proof that the Kikambala Beach operation was a covert Israeli sting, came less than an hour after the massive bomb blast, with a tame television anchorman in New York repeatedly asking a reporter at the Paradise hotel about “the other attack on the Israeli airliner taking off from Mombasa.” The timing of these questions was impossible, because the pilots aboard the Arkia Airlines Boeing 757 had not reported any incident. Serving as proof of this critical omission, there is no record of any “Mayday” or “Pan” call on the Kenyan air traffic control tapes at any time on 28 November 2002. So now we know the New York media was deliberately telling us about a mid-air incident which never occurred.

Simultaneously at the Paradise Hotel, hordes of Israeli tourists were filmed sitting on top of their heavy suitcases more than 200 meters away from the building. Nearly every reader is conversant with hotel evacuation drills. You are told repeatedly that “human life is important, possessions are not”. This priority never changes, with standard emergency instructions worldwide urging patrons to “Stay calm, check the room to ensure no-one is left, leave your belongings where they are, and walk briskly to your assembly point – do not run.” Nowhere in the rules is there any instruction to risk the lives of your children and yourself, by slowly and laboriously dragging a fifty-pound suitcase more than two hundred meters towards the beach.

The tourists sitting calmly on their suitcases at the beach, is explained by the fact that the Paradise Hotel is a “turnkey” operation, one-hundred-percent owned by the Israelis and thus under their complete control. You cannot walk in off the street and book a room, because the entire hotel is reserved strictly for Israeli tourists, including a sizeable number of Mossad operatives on “Rest and Recuperation”. This was a controlled operation from the start, with nearly all of the Israeli guests cleared away from the buildings before the charges were detonated.

Next, Mossad agents led the compliant Kenyan media to a spot just outside the Mombasa Airport perimeter fence, and showed journalists the “discarded launch tubes” of two shoulder-launched surface-to-air heat seeking missiles, allegedly fired at the Arkia Boeing 757 as it passed overhead at 500 feet. They were real launch tubes complete with pistol grips designed to fire the SA-7b “Strela” missile, but minus the heavy battery packs which the “Arab terrorists” inexplicably decided to run away with. Believe me, there is no way you can fire the Strela without its heavy battery pack. The launch tubes had also been resprayed brilliant sky-blue, a color which provides excellent contrast for media location and recording on Betamax video, but is absurd for operational use. The only colors the Strela is issued in from the factory, are camouflage khaki or olive drab.

The SA-7b Strela is an infra red heat seeker that locks onto hot engine exhaust gases, and will rush off at Mach 1.75 to kill any aircraft [without active magnesium flare protection] that flies within its slant range of 3 miles. Immediately after launch the equipment operator becomes irrelevant, with the missile doing the rest all by itself. Sure it sometimes has a bit of a problem with helicopters which deflect their hot engine gases up through the rotor blades, but the huge gaping red-hot engine orifices of a Boeing 757 at point blank range, are the Strela’s ultimate wet dream.

If one of these rather phallic missiles had actually been fired at the Arkia 757 from the Mombasa runway overrun area, it would have automatically and immediately streaked inside one of the 757's irresistible orifices, and blown the entire engine pod off the wing with its powerful HE warhead. Two missiles would have blown off two engine pods, making the Boeing extremely difficult to control, to say the very least of it.

Fortunately you do not have to take my word for this. Look very closely at the Strela launch tube photographs shown on this page. The launch and propellant charges of the Strela are very messy, and always leave a lot of dirty residue on the muzzle and exhaust pipe of the launcher after a missile has been fired. There is not the slightest trace of residue on either Strela launcher at Mombasa, proving conclusively that they were never used for live launches, and were thus placed in the grass solely as stage props to reinforce the Israeli myth.

No doubt a few avid television viewers might retort, "What about the Israeli captain of the Boeing? He said he saw two smoke trails from the missiles". Really? It would be more productive to focus on exactly what the captain told the media, and whether his statement could be even remotely correct. The captain's exact words were, "We saw two white stripes coming up from behind the airplane on the left side a bit above us." As you will see from the photo of the Arkia Boeing 757 on this page, the aircraft is not fitted with rear view mirrors or a tail warning radar. No pilot sitting on the flight deck of a Boeing 757 can see "behind" the aircraft because rearward vision is severely restricted. With the "stretched" version of the Boeing 757 they were flying, the Arkia pilots would consider themselves lucky if they could twist around far enough to see their own wings. Nor would they have done so at this entirely critical point in the flight.

The aircraft had just rotated off the hot runway at Mombasa with a full load of fuel and passengers, and was at its most vulnerable. Lose an engine at this point, which means half your total thrust on a twin-engine Boeing 757, and you need to be a very slick pilot to get the airplane back on the ground in one piece at all. So beyond question, both pilots had their eyes glued firmly to the instrument panel at the precise time the captain subsequently claimed, “We saw two white stripes coming up from behind the aircraft…” You decide whether or not the captain was telling the truth, bearing in mind that he also claimed he “felt a bump”, inferring one of the “phantom” missiles had glanced off the airplane. On arrival at Ben Gurion airport in Palestine the airplane was checked for damage by television media, and not a single scratch or blemish was found on its immaculate paint work.

As previously stated, and apart from gratuitously trying to establish a direct link between Palestinians and the fictional “al Qaeda” in the form of CIA/MI6/Mossad “suspect” Abdullah Ahmed Abdullah, the motive for this staged Mossad “attack” was almost certainly to combat increasing dissent over the Bali bombing, with the intent of getting suspicious westerners back on side. The very nature of the covert operation provides several strong clues, as do the various stage props provided by the Mossad for local and international media networks

Imaginative computer graphics issued to the media by Mossad in the wake of the scam, to help viewers "understand" how this impossible attack was [not] launched. Note the two "al Qaeda terrorists" without guidance systems or battery packs!

At the basic subliminal level, you were supposed to acknowledge this “cowardly” attack by “al Qaeda” on “Israeli civilians” who were simply on holiday having a good time at “Kikambala Beach”, where the blasts were caused by a “suicide bomber” and a “car bomb”. You were repeatedly shown hundreds of feet of video film reinforcing this myth, with lots of waving palm trees, and distraught Jewish survivors sitting on the beach.

Surely the covert Kikambala operation subliminally reminds you of another “cowardly” attack by “al Qaeda” on “Australian civilians”, who were simply on holiday having a good time at “Kuta Beach” in Bali on 12 October? It is remarkably similar in many ways, right down to the fine details of a “suicide bomber” and “car bomb” The entire operation was designed to [hopefully] prove that poor Israelis on holiday suffer as much as poor Australians do, at the “ruthless” hands of “al Qaeda” and/or the interchangeable “Jemaah Islamiyah”.

Well, perhaps not exactly. More than one hundred Australians died at Kuta Beach, but only three Israelis died at Kikambala Beach. As if to make up for this inferior body count, you were told that “al Qaeda” had also fired two SA-7b “Strela” heat seeking missiles at an unarmed Israeli airliner. Poor brave Israelis, huh?

I am not callously ingoring the loss of life where local residents are concerned, it is simply a matter of not having accurate figures to use. To the best of my knowledge, approximately 100 Indonesians perished at Kuta Beach, while at least 15 Kenyans were killed at Kikambala Beach. Sadly perhaps, this heavy death toll will be regarded by the CIA and Mossad as irrelevant "collateral damage."

During the ten days immediately preceding the Kikambala operation, things had gone from bad to worse for American and Australian investigators trying to prove that “al Qaeda” and “Jemaah Islamiyah” were responsible for the Kuta Beach atrocity. On Monday 18 November, Indonesian Parliamentary Speaker Amien Rais said he questioned the validity of the police conclusion that "Amrozi" was the main perpetrator of the Bali bombings. Rais was supported by Deputy House Speaker A.M. Fatwa, who stated, "`My conscience says that he is not a key actor. I don’t believe that Amrozi has the capability to make all kinds of the preparations for the bombings, like setting off a kind of micro nuclear bomb in Bali."

These pointed observations by two of the most powerful politicians in Indonesia caused a storm of discontent across the entire nation, with most Indonesians justifiably claiming that the CIA and Mossad were responsible for the outrage in Bali. Then events accelerated rapidly, with politicians from Jakarta personally visiting Kuta Beach. This was followed by the sudden recall of the police general in Bali, who for weeks prior to this had managed to produce endless “Muslim suspects” for the Americans and Australians, at the same staggering speed a conjurer might pull rabbits out of a hat. But just like the rabbits, the Muslim suspects were just clever illusions. And so it was that quite suddenly, with their tame police general removed from the island and escorted back to Jakarta, the CIA and Mossad knew the game was up.

The risks involved in Bali finally being exposed as a joint CIA-Mossad operation are awesome, and far more dangerous in their own way than the multiple allegations about 9/11. Though many investigators including myself have proved with ease that nearly half the named 9/11 “hijackers” are still alive and well today, and that forged evidence was deliberately planted at the crime scene in New York, none individually or severally have sufficient hard evidence to prove that 9/11 was a premeditated scam launched by Judeo-Christian crusaders, rather than by fictional Muslim “al Qaeda terrorists”.

Bali is quite different. Because it is known that the only possible source for the weapon named by Deputy Speaker A. M. Fatwa is Dimona in Israel’s Negev Desert, this single atrocity has the easy ability to unravel the entire carefully-constructed post- 9/11 “War on Terror”, and its more recent oil-rich cousin, the “War on Iraq”. If you successfully unravel the Bali atrocity, and correctly pin the blame on the CIA and Mossad, you automatically expose both “al Qaeda” and “Jemaah Islamiyah” as organizations deliberately invented by these two related western intelligence agencies. Indeed, using this process you prove that the CIA and Mossad ARE THEMSELVES “al Qaeda” and “Jemaah Islamiyah”. Then, and only then, can you use modus operandi and due legal process to prove beyond doubt that the same two agencies were also responsible for 9/11.

This frightening possibility was a risk the agencies were not prepared to take, and the Kikambala operation was swiftly arranged to deflect attention away from the increasing anger in Indonesia. Unfortunately, there is a remote but worrying possibility that the lookalike Israeli attack on Kikambala, might have been designed to deliberately include propaganda enabling future “more sophisticated” attacks on the west.

So far as I know, this is the first time that either the CIA or the Mossad has actually brought you real television footage of an [unfired] surface-to-air missile launcher, with the obvious intent of convincing you that the fictional “al Qaeda” and “Jemaah Islamiyah” not only have access to such equipment, but are also willing and able to use it against unarmed civilian airplanes. The big problem, of course, is that this decoy missile equipment was deliberately placed in position by the Mossad, rather than any “Muslim terrorist” group.

Though I normally go out of my way to avoid causing public panic of any kind, now might be a good time to reevaluate just how necessary it might be for your wife, children or yourself to fly on commercial airplanes. If the CIA or Mossad feel the need to reinforce hatred and fear of “al Qaeda” or “Jemaah Islamiyah” at some time in the indeterminate future, there is now an odds-on chance that at least one of the future “terrorist atrocities” will involve a pair of [live] Israeli SA-7b Strela missiles hurtling up from the ground to join with your airliner in a deadly embrace, immediately after take off from New York, London or Sydney.

Israel Tries To Steal Mombasa "Evidence"

Collateral damage Israeli style. Mossad deliberately left these welcoming dancers in the lobby of the hotel to take the full force of the blast. All twelve members of the dance troupe were killed instantly.

Perhaps realizing that they had left fatally flawed evidence lying around Mombasa airport, more than a hundred heavily armed Israeli soldiers landed at the East Coast port on December 1, and demanded that the Kenyan Police hand over the "evidence". By all accounts they were particularly anxious to get their hands of the unfired sky-blue "Strela" missile launching tubes left near the end of Runway 21. To their astonishment and considerable anger, the Israeli demand was met with a point-blank "NO".

The Kenyan police had already worked out for themselves that the Strela launchers had not been fired, and were still trying to establish exactly why the crew of Arkia Airlines Flight 582 had ignored standard airport procedures on November 28, and taken off from the wrong runway. Instead of using Runway 03 [heading 030 degrees] where the overrun is the Indian Ocean, Flight 582 had deliberately ignored instructions and taken off in the opposite direction, i.e. from Runway 21 [heading 210 degrees], which rather conveniently took them inland, directly overhead the decoy Strela launchers hidden in the long grass.

Not only that. Because of the prevailing winds, ninety nine percent of all flights out of Mombasa from August thru January take off from Runway 03, and two had done so immediately prior to Arkia Flight 582 taxiing out from the terminal on November 28. So if you were a bunch of bona fide Hollywood "al Qaeda" terrorist fanatics, you would of course shout "Allah Akhbar!" [God is Great], and ride your horses down to the overrun area of Runway 03 on the beach.

Drawing curved daggers to ruthlessly butcher any surfers who got in your way, you would then line your trusty Strela heat seekers up on Flight 582, blow its engine pods off, and carelessly throw the spent launch tubes into the ocean. This is exactly how it is done. I know, because just like all of Hollywood's top Zionists film producers, I too have been to the local video store and rented "Lawrence of Arabia".

Think about it people, think about it. How did the Mossad agents who planted the Strela launchers, know in advance that the crew of Arkia Flight 582 would be the first aircraft to directly violate standard procedures in three years? Put another way, how did they know exactly where to leave the dummy launchers for the media to find? Clearly the Mossad agents had outstanding extra sensory perception, or they arranged the whole illusion with the aircrew, long before Flight 582 taxied out to the runway. You choose whichever you would prefer to be the truth.

Of course, it helps that you now know that the overrun area of Runway 03 is located in ten-feet-deep water, and therefore a very difficult place to expect even the most compliant of media crews to locate and film the sky-blue decoy launch tubes. No, for the Mossad scam to work properly they had to break the rules, and with typical Israeli arrogance, assumed no one would notice the "minor" deception.

But the deception was noticed by Kenyan authorities, who also noticed the launch tubes had not been fired. When they arrived back in Tel Aviv and realized they'd screwed up big time, the Israelis rapidly starting leaking another ingenious tale to the media, which discreetly hinted that the Arkia Boeing 757 "might have been fitted with top secret missile warning equipment", which had somehow miraculously prevented the airplane from being hit by two deadly heat seekers, allegedly fired at point-blank range. As you will see from the pictures below, this was also a complete lie.

Arkia Flight 582 immediately after landing at Ben Gurion airport in Palestine on November 28. Note the total absence of missile warning aerials or magnesium flare dispensers on the tail, wings and belly.

In the last few days, the media has started repeating "grave" Israeli warnings that "al Qaeda" will probably use one of these weapons against you or your family when you take off from New York, London or Sydney, so now might be a good time for a mercifully short lesson in shoulder-launched missile capabilities. Of course, the Mombasa scam was contrived to prepare you for "friendly fire" CIA or Mossad "false flag" heat seekers, which they can then blame on the naughty "al Qaeda", but the lesson might still be useful at the personal level. After all, it doesn't really matter exactly who fires the heat seeker, if one of these nasties homes in on the engine or engines of your holiday flight to Florida, Mallorca or Fiji, it could ruin your whole day. But imagine the personal pleasure of being able to watch the missile launch against your own passenger jet, and just have time to brag to the passenger sitting next to you, "Look, that's a Mossad missile!"

The main part of the lesson here, is that there is no such thing as a "secret warning radar" that can protect you from a heat seeker at very low speed and very low altitude, as was [laughably] claimed with Arkia Airlines Flight 582. There are missile warning devices which operate quite well against radar-guided and infra-red missiles at medium and high altitudes, but we won't waste time with these here. The CIA and Mossad can only credibly fire a false flag missile at you that "al Qaeda" might reasonably have access to as well, which limits the field to shoulder-launched heat seekers like the Strela, Stinger, or a handful of others. There are minor differences, but they all work in the same general way.

The decoy Strela launch tubes positioned in the overrun area of Runway 21. Note the total lack of blowback residue on the sky-blue launchers. The small "finned" objects in the center and right pics are not "five inch missiles" as someone suggested. They are coolant catridges [one per shot], used to chill the infra-red seeker lens in the missile, allowing sufficient thermal contrast to detect and lock onto the target aircraft's jet exhaust.

In basic terms the shoulder launched heat seeker is strictly up close and personal, with its overall slant range limited to about three miles. This means that it only has three miles total in which to kill you, from the point at which it first leaves the launch tube to the point at which it flies up your hot jetpipe and blows the engine pod off your wing. In turn this means that shoulder launched heat seekers can really only kill your aircraft very close to the airport, either immediately after take off, or immediately before landing.

There is only one defence, I repeat only one defence, against such weapons at close range, which is to actively and continuously fire magnesium flares from your own airplane. You can't wait for some mythical "secret radar" to warn you of a Strela in the runway overrun area, and then pop a single flare. By the time you [or the "secret radar"] actually reacted to such an attack, you would already be dead, and cremated in mid-air at no extra charge.

Because magnesium burns much hotter than your jet engine exhaust, the heat seeker normally considers one of your multiple popping magnesium flares a really sexy target, instantly falls in love with it, and is thus [hopefully] decoyed away from your comparatively dull jetpipes. Sadly, this is not one-hundred-percent guaranteed.

Military aircraft in combat zones pop flares all the time on take off and approach, because they know full well that there is no "top secret radar" in service that can warn them quickly enough to save their hides. Please note that military aircraft normally do this in someone else's country [Afghanistan for example], and therefore don't give a damn what the falling magnesuim flares might set fire to. A sizeable number of them do hit the ground still burning.

Now the trick here, before you allow your local government to squander $5 million [each] fitting flare dispensers to every airliner in your national fleet, is to remember that what you can do with impunity at Bagram airport in Afghnistan, you most certainly cannot do at John F. Kennedy, London Heathrow or Sydney Mascot. Start firing multiple flares on the take off run at one of these prestigious establishments, and you will very likely set fire to everything from the control tower to the sleek passenger bus taking you and your family to the transit lounge. Put bluntly, counter measures like these are useless for a civil airliner in a civil environment, which is why the CIA and Mossad know they can drop your airplane, yes, your airplane, whenever they feel the need to drive a bit more hatred towards "al Qaeda", or whichever other luckless Muslim group that New York might nominate as "Terrorists of the Month.". .

Two Hercules transport planes "popping" magnesium flares. Ask yourself, do you really want one of these bouncing off the roof of your automobile in the airport car park, or landing in little Johnny's stroller?

Because Israel started this whole thing with the decoy operation in Mombasa, it seems suitable that I should leave you with the [very] recent words of a bona fide media-accredited Israeli spokesman, apparently offering a kindly word of warning to the world, on behalf of that outstanding Israeli humanitarian, Ariel Sharon.

Boaz Ganor, head of Israel's International Policy Institute for Counter-Terrorism, said the appearance of missiles, while not entirely new, pointed to a new approach in the "evolution of terrorism."

In the 1960s and early 1970s, terror groups hijacked planes, which led to the introduction of metal detectors and sky marshals. The 1980s and 1990s saw terrorists sneak bombs onto planes, but that has become more difficult with sophisticated detection equipment, Ganor said.

"Now I think you'll see these groups use missiles to try to shoot down planes from the ground," he said.

Uh Oh! Now repeat after me: "Do I really, really need to fly this week, or month or year?

At 11.05 p.m. local time on Saturday night, a giant blast scattered pieces of the Sari Nightclub right across Kuta Beach in Bali, Indonesia. Though two other synchronized blasts shook the American Consulate and a Philippines travel agency office a few seconds earlier, there were no injuries or deaths at these other locations, both of which served as mere “flash cards” to reinforce the unexpected presence of “Al Qaeda” in this beautiful tourist paradise.

Al who? So far as I am aware, the Muslim world does not yet have access to a sophisticated “Special Atomic Demolition Munitions [SADM]”, one of which certainly went critical in a sewer more than four feet below the road bed outside the Sari club. Within five microseconds of detonation the awesome million-foot-per-second shock wave hurled two tons of road bed and sand particles upwards and outward in a deadly fan, cutting tourists to bloody ribbons and hurling body parts for several blocks. The body count is currently 187, with more than 300 injured.

The blast from this weapon was so severe that its detonation terminally damaged 27 buildings in the immediate area, and trashed more than one hundred vehicles. In the words of a tourist who earlier survived attacks on London during the nineties, “I felt my hotel shake violently and ran to look out of the window. In the distance I could see a large white mushroom cloud, and knew I wasn’t looking at an ordinary attack.”

Photographic evidence proving the use of an unconventional weapon was edited out almost immediately by the major media, though not from the amateur video cameras which provided the pictures above. The very presence of the crater itself proves the weapon was detonated sub-surface, while the crater’s depth in combination with its diameter, prove the depth at which the weapon was initially placed.

Flash Burns on Kuta Beach victim and bodies

[dohtml] [/dohtml]

Anyone doubting the nuclear identity of this weapon should take a look at the biggest car bombs detonated in Northern Ireland during the thirty years of trouble, which ranged in size up to 1,000 pounds of conventional explosive. None of them left craters in the road, because simple physics dictate that shock waves always takes the line of least resistance – largely outwards and upwards to atmosphere. Nor am I aware of any 1,000 pound IRA car bomb trashing 27 buildings and 100 vehicles.

[dohtml] [/dohtml]

This thousand-pound IRA car bomb was detonated in Omagh during August 1998, killing 29 people but leaving no crater.

[dohtml] [/dohtml]

An equally valid example would be the Israeli destruction of Arafat’s compound in Ramallah. Overall, Israel took more than a week to trash significantly fewer than 47 buildings, despite the fact they were brazenly attacking every day with multiple 120-mm tank guns and Hellfire missiles.

It is factual information like this that helps us to analyze the available evidence at the crime scene, in order to determine which weapon or weapons were used, and hopefully by whom. At the very minimum the damage caused in the Kuta Beach area would require an 8,000 pound HE blast-bomb of the sort used on Hamburg during the Second World War. Problem! How on earth do you squeeze 8,000 pounds of very bulky low-specific-gravity HE into a twelve-inch diameter sewerage pipe, located nearly five feet underground?

Obviously what you need is a specialized weapon significantly less than twelve inches in diameter, but with a blast capability significantly in excess of 8,000 pounds of conventional explosive. Believe me people, there is only one weapon for the job, which explains why you will probably never see the damning crater picture at the top of this page anywhere else.

The actual photograph of SADM shown below is of an early version nominally rated at 10 tons TNT equivalent. More recent variants are as small as a coffee mug, though still very heavy, and have explosive yields ranging from 2 to 100 tons TNT equivalent. Nations possessing such weapons include America, Britain, France, Israel and Russia, with China a distinct possibility. In turn, under top-secret defense agreements with one of more of the above nations, certain Commonwealth and other countries maintain a strictly limited stock of “proxy weapons” on their own sovereign territory.

Bearing in mind the fact that Bali is a hugely popular destination for Australians, many of whom were killed in the blast, the attack seems aimed at shifting Australian public opinion towards an attack on Iraq, or even an attack on Islam in general.

Until now most Australians have been loudly opposed to any premeditated strike on the Middle East, to the point where the only people in Australia blatantly playing “Rambo” and apparently obeying the American Zionists without question, are the Australian Prime Minister and Foreign Minister, plus a loose group of obsequious followers. In fact their blatantly subservient behavior recently offended a member of the opposition so much, he felt moved to publicly call the Prime Minister an “Arse Licker”.

To suggest that Australian politicians actually caused the attack on their own citizens in Bali, and now have Australian blood on their hands would be technically inaccurate and probably unfair. But it is certainly fair to say that a limited number of politicians have led the American Zionists to believe they have the full support of Australia and its military forces, when this is demonstrably untrue.
Playing silly little political games like these can be dangerous. Do doubt the Zionists initially believed the “full support” statements gushing out of Canberra, and only found out later that the Australian Government would not be able to deliver on its rash promises. XXXX

[dohtml] [/dohtml]
No, The Indonesian Air Force didn't do it, and no they didn't find traces of C4...

Desperate to deflect attention away from the micro-nuke outside the Sari Club, Australian officials and journalists have been frantically peddling stories about an Indonesian Air Force lieutentant colonel “confessing” to making the bomb which exploded on Saturday night. They are also claiming that traces of the powerful American explosive Composition 4 [C4] have been found at the “scene of the attack”. Both claims are fatally flawed and deliberately misleading.

Former Indonesian Air Force Lieutenant Colonel Dedi Masrukhin was interviewed two days after the blast, but did not “confess” and would be incapable of manufacturing even a standard chemical bomb. Discharged from the service two years ago for drug abuse, Masrukhin was an armaments officer tasked only with handling ordnance and fitting it to military aircraft. That is all. After his brief interview with investigators, Lieutenant Colonel Masrukhin was allowed to return home unhindered.

The explosive residue detected by Indonesian investigators was not C4, and it was not found at the site of the massive explosion outside the Sari Club. What investigators actually found were traces of RDX explosive in the immediate vicinity of the “decoy” blast, triggered further down the street at Paddy’s Bar several seconds before the primary critical charge was initiated outside the Sari Club.

Bearing in mind the sheer magnitude of the operation, there is every chance this synchronized decoy blast [along with another radio-detonated outside the American Consulate at the same time], was designed specifically to provide “forensic evidence” of conventional weapons being used in the attack.

Remember both decoys were deliberately detonated several seconds BEFORE the primary charge, ensuring that investigators would be led in the “right” direction when conducting their inquiries after the event If the two decoys had been triggered AFTER the massive blast outside the Sari Club, nobody would have noticed them.

Before explosives “junkies” swarm all over me, yes I do know that RDX is one of the compounds used in the manufacture of C4 plastic explosive, but it is used far more widely in other explosives including [but not limited to] Compositions A and B, Cyclotol and HBX. These compositions have wide ranging applications such as land mines, shaped-charges, missile warheads, underwater ordnance, and special fragmentation projectiles generally known as cluster bombs.

During the last few hours, Australian officials say they fear that "as many as 89 more Australians may have perished in the blast". Let us be optomistic here and half that figure down to 45 more dead Australians, over and above the bodies that have already been discovered and removed from Ground Zero.

Now ask yourself what class of weapon has the ability to literally vaporize forty-five full grown human beings, to the point where the remaining body parts as so small they cannot be detected by search and rescue crews with the naked eye. Believe me, there is only one class of weapon capable of developing the intense heat and blast pattern needed for the job.

Bali Micro Nuke - Lack of Radiation Confuses "Experts"

"The bomb flashed and exploded like a micro nuke, but our Geiger counters don't show any radiation"

Zionist Nuclear Attack on Bali Officially “Buried” by Western Mediai - scroll down to brown update for details

The delivery of American and Israeli micro nukes is always by swimmer to maximize security. You can watch the official American Special Atomic Demolition Munition training film via your Real Media Player by clicking the left link. Allow about one minute for download and automatic playing. If you do not have Real Media Player , click right link to download and install a free copy.

It was precisely 11.30 p.m. on Saturday 12 October 2002, when someone somewhere pressed a button that sent a single coded radio-squirt to an underground aerial located in a monsoon drain outside the Sari Club in Bali. An unseen circuit closed and a primer fired, then one-millionth of a single second later, a terrible fireball formed under the street. Less than six inches in diameter and burning at a staggering 300,000 degrees centigrade, the fireball was a perfect shimmering sphere, made possible by 99.78% Plutonium 239 manufactured at the Dimona nuclear facility in the Negev Desert.

Five microseconds passed while this fission monster from hell expanded, then the already-cooling fireball tore its angry way out into the street above, vaporizing all victims standing within thirty feet while simultaneously spreading two tons of deadly microscopic roadbed shrapnel in a lethal arc across Kuta Beach. Every survivor standing in direct line-of-sight of its awesome ultraviolet emission received terrible flash burns, the like of which three eminent Australian burns surgeons would later claim on TV they “had never seen before”.

Less than ten-millionths of a second after the monster achieved critical mass, its searing thermal wave set fire to twenty-seven buildings in the immediate area, and spontaneously ignited automobiles parked two blocks away from ground zero. But as you will read later in this report, no ordinary Geiger counter from any nation could detect radiation from the weapon.

This atrocity was the “punishment” meted out to Australians and others opposed to the Judeo-Christian Crusade against Islam. Ordinary everyday people, Australians in particular, who had earlier been sensible enough and brave enough to speak out against their Prime Minister’s slavish obedience to Ariel Sharon and George W. Bush in their ruthless quest to loot and destroy the Middle East. But the fission monster from hell was also designed to send a very clear and unmistakable message to like-minded dissidents in Britain: “Jump on the crusade bandwagon quickly, or our Dimona thought-reform folk will pay you a visit.”

Political and paid “academic experts” were quickly thrust in front of television cameras to explain the inexplicable. How and why the bombing happened in the first place, and increasingly as harsh reality kicked in and facts became clearer, why dozens of full-size human victims had vanished completely without trace.

Every bomb expert in the world knows that conventional explosives lack the heat and velocity to “vanish” complete bodies in this manner, except perhaps when crushed into total oblivion by a million tons of masonry as happened at the World Trade Center. When the dust from the biggest IRA bomb ever detonated in Northern Ireland finally cleared, the victims were still in the local area. Many were disassembled into large bloody body parts, but they were still generally recognizable.

When a diminutive member of Hamas recently detonated thirty pounds of TNT strapped tightly around his own chest in Palestine, emergency services still had to remove large recognizable chunks of his dismembered body from the area. Believe me people, believe me, conventional explosive cannot “vanish” citizens without trace, and Bali simply did not have a million tons of masonry available to fall on their heads. Only a critical nuclear weapon has the heat needed for instant cremation, combined with the incredibly fast shock wave needed to completely remove the resulting cremated particles from the local area.

Next big problem for the politicians and “experts” was the large crater in the street outside the Sari Club. Five feet deep and twenty-two feet in diameter, the crater served as proof that the weapon was detonated underground rather than on the surface. The only way any explosive can cause a crater is if it is first dropped from an aircraft and penetrates sub-surface before exploding, or if it is physically positioned sub-surface in advance. The thousand-pound Omagh bomb detonated in Northern Ireland by the IRA during 1998 did not cause a crater, nor has any nuclear weapon ever detonated above-ground regardless of TNT equivalence yield.

Kuta Beach, Bali
22 x 5' Crater

Omagh, Northern Ireland
No Crater

Politicians and “experts” alike had less of a problem than they originally thought with the crater. The helpful media folk simply refrained from showing it on television or in the newspapers, and the brainwashed public soon forgot about the crater altogether. However, there were considerably more problems with the savage blast and horrific burns “never seen before” in Australia. Knowing that even the public would not believe these could have been caused by a large packet of runaway Chinese firecrackers; it was time to start dishing out some serious disinformation.

Less than 48 hours after the blast, media outlets claimed that investigators at the crime scene, “had found traces of C4”. This was a lie but nonetheless devastating news, because everyone with a television set and a Sylvester Stallone or Bruce Willis video knows how awesome C4 is [supposed to be]. Stallone sticks blocks of the stuff on every enemy installation in sight, and Willis uses it to knock down skyscrapers. In every case the resulting television blast is accompanied by a giant fireball designed to impress the hell out of you, to the point where C4 has become television’s “most powerful explosive on earth”.

Unfortunately C4 is no such thing, and it is probably time to put this magic bullet down once and for all, and along with it all the other media myths surrounding Bali. Composition 4 [C4] is pretty dull stuff. Only 1.2 times as powerful as TNT, this plastic explosive gained its reputation primarily because of its flexibility in use. You can shape it anyway you like, and stick it wherever you want including underwater with little personal risk. Composition 4 is a stable and boring compound made from 91% RDX and 9% non-explosive Polyisobutylene plasticiser.

Think about the formulation people, think very carefully. Could this possibly mean that 100% plain old everyday World War II RDX actually has more explosive power than the Stallone and Willis magic bullet? Sadly, yes it does. In fact about nine-percent more.

The media in Australia were reminded of C4’s shortfalls, and further advised the giant oily fireball that always accompanies its detonation on television is not real. The giant oily fireball is a special pyrotechnic effect designed specifically to satisfy the “armchair soldier” lurking inside many television viewers. Real C4 contains no incendiary materials at all, and has a brisance [velocity of detonation] of just over 26,300 feet per second, tending to extinguish fires rather than light them.

This caused the media to swiftly put their heads together with their paid “experts” to find an explosive device that the public could really believe in, short of a micro nuke of course. Less than 24 hours later the revised media fiction went to air as, “a minivan full of gas bottles, with explosives on top”. Evidently the aim was to force the public to believe the weapon was a FAE [Fuel Air Explosive] commonly known as the “Poor Man’s Atom Bomb”, which was successfully dropped by American aircraft on both Vietnam and Iraq.

A "perfect" Fuel Air Explosive [FAE] burst, one-hundred feet above ground level

Several telephone calls later, the media were forced to admit that a Fuel Air Weapon must be “burst” at least 100 feet above the target in order to create a stable ethylene oxide gas cloud suitable for ignition. They also learned that even air-launched FAEs cannot make craters because they do not penetrate the earth, and the suction force developed by the weapon when it grabs oxygen for combustion, is sufficient to drag a victim’s lungs out through his or her mouth. Horrific though the injuries were in Bali, there were none even remotely like this.

By now the media and their paid “experts” were getting quite angry, finally suggesting in Australia that the blast and horrific burns were caused by high explosive “laced with napalm”. The fact that napalm leaves dirty stinking residue and soot all over the place, and produces burns quite different from those on the victims appeared not to disturb them.

The napalm story failed to impress the public, and the media lead was taken over by ITN in London on 18 October, in the aloof haughty way that only a British television station with ‘real contacts’ can manage: “ITV News correspondent Julian Manyon, in the Indonesian capital, Jakarta, has been told by a highly placed western source that there was no plastic explosive and the bombers used a home-made brew similar to that which the IRA has relied on in the past in Northern Ireland and Canary Wharf.

“The ingredients are readily available in Indonesia and experts suggest that they were almost certainly mixed together on the island of Bali itself.” Oh, really? The IRA used one thousand pounds of the stuff in the Omagh photo shown above, which killed nearly 30 people but made no crater, and failed dismally in its feeble efforts to create an instant fiery war zone.

The perception of most members of the public where a critical nuclear weapon is concerned, was shaped decades ago in the wake of the American bombing of Hiroshima in Japan. An atomic bomb with a Uranium 235 core, nicknamed “Little Boy”, was detonated overhead the city with a TNT equivalence of 15,000 tons. For nearly two generations thereafter, members of the public were ‘taught’ that this was the text book interpretation for use after any and all nuclear detonations, despite the fact that nothing could be further from the truth.

Little Boy was one of the ‘dirtiest’ fission weapons ever detonated in the atmosphere, with less than 1% of its critical mass undergoing true fission. Thus what remained after the explosion was a giant blizzard of lethal neutron, alpha, beta and gamma radiation. For practical [amateur] purposes we can forget the short-range neutron, alpha and beta radiation, which has trouble penetrating the human body.

Over time it was to be the gamma radiation that would inflict such terrible injuries on the survivors of Hiroshima, including necrosis and ulceration. It is this gamma radiation that a standard Geiger counter detects, warning users that they are entering a hazardous zone. The standard Geiger counter can also detect significant quantities of beta, though this is more difficult. In summary, every Geiger counter within miles of Hiroshima clicked furiously for weeks after Little Boy went critical, primarily because of the gamma radiation.

Time passed and by the late fifties these fission weapons were being “micronized” because they were needed as “core weapons” for hydrogen bombs. Incredible temperatures are required to start the fusion reaction in a hydrogen bomb, with the atom bomb the only device capable of providing them. So for a while at least, the text books accurately referred to the hydrogen bomb as a “fission-fusion” weapon, meaning the heat from the core fission weapon [atom bomb] started the fusion reaction in the larger weapon encasing it [the hydrogen bomb].

It was not long before the scientists realized that in creating the tiny “core weapon” for the hydrogen bomb, they had also created a relatively lightweight micro nuclear weapon that could be carried by a single soldier for various uses against high value targets, including hydroelectric power stations and bridges.

Less than two years later, the first of the SADM [Special Atomic Demolition Munition] series shown at the top of this page was pressed into operational service. The “standard” SADM that evolved would eventually have a core of Plutonium 239 encased in a thin shell of non-fissile Uranium 238 known as a “neutron reflector”.

Plutonium and Napalm flash burns - but can you tell which are which?

When the 10-ton TNT equivalence SADM went critical, it obviously created far less radiation than the huge and inappropriately named “Little Boy” at Hiroshima, but still produced dangerously high levels of residual radiation. Most of this came from SADM’s very “dirty” Uranium 238 reflector, which along with its Plutonium 239 core, exploded into millions of particles at the point of criticality. This same non-fissile Uranium 238 material still causes serious illnesses today, after being fired by American tanks and aircraft as sub-critical Depleted Uranium [DU] shells or missile warheads. Ask anyone in southern Iraq and Kosovo how sick this stuff can make you.

The years rolled by and top-secret projects were initiated in America and Israel to replace the old SADM with its overly heavy weight and excess radioactivity, culminating in the successful development and testing at Dimona during 1981 of the “new” micro nuclear device. Using advanced nuclear physics, the scientists found a way of detonating the new “suitcase” bomb without the use of a Uranium 238 reflector, and further refined the Plutonium 239 in its core to 99.78%. These measures resulted in a weapon considerably smaller and lighter than SADM, which also had another enormous advantage.

The new Dimona micro nuke was the very first critical weapon that could be used in “stealth” mode. Gone was the dirty Uranium 238 reflector, and up went the purity of the smaller Plutonium 239 core. You see, Plutonium emits only alpha radiation, which for all practical purposes is “invisible” to a standard Geiger counter. If you do not believe me then ask the American Environmental Protection Agency, whose staff will confirm this.

In direct contrast with its more deadly cousins beta and gamma, alpha can travel only a few feet and is incapable of penetrating human skin. If you can afford an incredibly expensive and highly specialized Muller tube or similar, you may be able to detect tiny amounts of alpha directly outside the Sari Club, though you will more than likely be defeated in this quest by the Bali environment.

Remember that this micro nuke was a tiny weapon in terms of critical mass, with its limited number of particles distributed over a very wide area. You will have to be within five feet to detect a single particle, and most may have already washed away. Bali lies in the Monsoon Belt with frequent heavy showers, and the Sari Club is located less than 200 yards away from the surf at Kuta Beach, which is where the monsoon drains in Kuta main street flow into the ocean. One week on from the blast, detection may already be too late.

Though the alpha particles cannot penetrate the skin, such radiation is extremely hazardous if inhaled or ingested, because Plutonium is the most toxic substance known to man. If you breathed in a mouthful immediately after the blast you would be dead in less than an hour, perhaps within minutes. If instead you breathed in a single microgram, you might last for as few months. Anything in-between is on a sliding scale.

The most dangerous time for burns victims as I understand it, is known as the “golden hour” immediately following the burn event. It is in this short critical time period that medical staff have the best chance of stabilizing the victim and hopefully accelerating his or her recovery. Nobody was helped medically this quickly in Bali because the resources simply did not exist. Thus those suffering excessive burns and/or shrapnel wounds alone, would certainly have perished during the waiting period.

The next most critical period is when being physically manhandled from the scene and eventually evacuated to hospital in another country. If you manage to survive this second critical period and are suffering only burns and shrapnel injuries, your chances of long-term survival are extremely high. An air-conditioned hospital with every facility available in a western country, is a far cry from lying without help in the bomb debris of Kuta Beach.

Despite this intensive care in a variety of different western countries, several of these victims have died quite suddenly and inexplicably under the latter favorable circumstances. Just how many in total we will probably never know, because governments in general have a common interest in preventing their citizens from ever finding out they were exposed to a critical nuclear weapon. It is not difficult to imagine the panic this news would induce in the general population, and even less difficult to envisage the torrent of legal actions against government from survivors and bereaved relatives alike.

The distinctive pattern of the “vanished” victims, and the later sudden inexplicable deaths, provides a match for those following the Nagasaki Plutonium blast in Japan. Of particular note is the total number of “vanished” citizens, for those who vanished were certainly not restricted to westerners. Earlier this week a single Balinese kampong [village] buried seven empty coffins, and this was only one of at least a dozen different kampongs that provide labor to the clubs and shops in Kuta Beach.

It was a moving ceremony barely covered by the western media, at which the headman of the village told an Indonesian journalist, “We know that we will never be able to find any parts of their physical bodies, but this ceremony will help their families to live in peace.” So a crowd of simple Balinese villagers know that their loved ones had been 100% vaporized, but the western public is deliberately left in the dark for political reasons.

On a more encouraging note, it must be emphasized firmly here that very few of those survivors burned in the blast will actually die from internal alpha inhalation or ingestion at this late stage. Common sense dictates that ninety-percent of those close enough to ground zero to inhale or ingest an appreciable quantity at or immediately after the point of criticality, are most probably already dead.

This is particularly good news for hordes of political and law-enforcement idiots, who could be seen wandering around the heavily contaminated Bali crime scene without even the basic precaution of paper face masks covering their noses and mouths. Paper face masks are not designed solely to prevent the inhalation or ingestion of alpha radiation. Paper masks should always be worn during the first week at any major crime scene when parts of decomposing bodies and associated vermin are present, especially in the tropics. Any deaths which later result from this criminal negligence, will be the direct responsibility of their supervisors.

Indonesian police investigators wear correct facemasks and gloves, while unprotected Australian and British "investigators" stand around inhaling and ingesting residual contamination at the crime scene

After this "Terrorist" attack on Bali, the Judeo-Christian road show predictably shifted up into high gear, with American newspapers reporting generically, “In the town of Solo, about 100 students from the school run by Islamic cleric Abu Bakar Bashir briefly blocked access to the Muhammadiyah Hospital where he is being treated for cardiac and breathing problems. Armed policemen stood by, but did not intervene" ..."Authorities accuse Bashir of being linked to al-Qaida and said that his right-hand man, known as Hambali, was behind many of the country's terrorist bombings. The two men are accused of being leaders of Jemaah Islamiyah, believed to be al-Qaida's main ally in Southeast Asia.

“Bashir was arrested Saturday for a series of church bombings across Indonesia on Christmas Eve 2000, in which 19 people died. He has previously denied involvement in those attacks as well as the Bali bombings — and insists the CIA invented Jemaah Islamiyah and al-Qaida as an excuse to persecute Muslims and foment religious violence”. Bashir is obviously correct in his claims, for no fictional member of “al-Qaida” could ever penetrate the massive security surrounding Israel's Dimona in order to steal a critical nuclear weapon.

Update 3 November 2002

As further horrifying details of its illegal armed attacks on Muslims in their own homes reach local media, the Australian Government has been desperately trying to deflect attention back towards the “Muslim Terrorists” allegedly responsible for the Bali bombing. On the home front, Australian lawyers have revealed that during the pre-dawn raids last week, armed goons from the Federal Police and Security Service ASIO forced unarmed women and children to lie face-down on the floor, handcuffed them, and in some cases conducted strictly illegal full-body strip searches of the defenseless women without their consent.

This last-named abuse is identical to the actions of the American 82nd Airborne in Afghanistan, who recently deliberately strip searched Muslim women in their own homes in order to dishonor their husbands. Further details of this obscene and illegal activity can be read by clicking on the “Australian Gestapo” link at the bottom of this page.

Were it not so serious, this latest attempt by Australian authorities to pin the blame for the Bali bomb on “Muslim Terrorists” would be laughable. Officials are now claiming that the staggering blast which vaporized dozens of victims at Kuta Beach, was caused by a bomb “made from between 50 kg and 150 kg of chlorate”, the only quasi-explosive conveniently stolen from an Indonesian warehouse in Java during September. This new claim is in stark contrast to information posted on the official Australian Government web site less than one week ago:
“Within 10-15 seconds of the first explosion at Paddy's Bar, a devastating explosion was detonated in front of the Sari Club … The explosion resulted in a tremendous release of energy in the form of gas, heat and light. This essentially caused a pressure wave, fragmentation and fire - all of which contributed to the devastation seen at the Sari Club. As a measure of the force of the blast, the sound from the explosion was heard up to 15km away.”

To claim that the Bali bomb was made from potassium chlorate [the variant stolen in Java] is pure idiocy, and the fact that such a claim was made at all, highlights increasingly desperately American and Israeli pressure on Australia to formally declare that “The Muslims did it”.

Yes, you can manufacture a crude weapon from 90% potassium chlorate and 10% paraffin, but it is an incredibly slow and entirely unpredictable low-explosive. Provided the weapon did not detonate prematurely [a real risk with this unstable compound], four hundreds pounds of potassium chlorate & paraffin slurry with a Power Gel initiator might make a mess of Kuta Beach high street, but it could manage little else.

At best, crude potassium chlorate & paraffin slurry has a pathetic velocity of detonation of 3,500 feet per second, compared to 12,000 fps for Ammonium Nitrate & Diesel, and 27,800 fps for RDX. Thus in simple terms, at any given distance from ground zero these different explosive compounds will exert ascending pressure in pounds per squuare inch on the target. Forget the impressive bang, which is simply the pressure wave from the weapon travelling at supersonic speed, and has no bearing on actual damage. The level of damage inflicted on the target is always directly proportional to the overpressure exerted in pounds per square inch, i.e. pressure over and above the standard atmospheric pressure of fifteen psi.

Absolute proof that this Australian myth is a structured lie, can be seen in these photographs of a reinforced concrete structure located more than fifty feet away from ground zero. Every fragment of hard concrete has been completely stripped away by overpressure, leaving only the ductile reinforcing rods or bars, known in the trade as “rebar”. The critical significance of this is best explained by General Benton K. Partin USAF (Ret), who had overall responsibility for all research, development, testing, analysis, requirements generation and acquisition management of weapons systems in the United States Air Force.

Concrete completely stripped from Reinforcing bar "rebar", 50+ feet from ground zero

In an official rebuttal to media and executive branch claims that the source of the awesome damage to the Alfred P. Murrah building in Oklahoma was a single truck bomb consisting of 4,800 pounds of ammonium nitrate & diesel low-explosive, General Partin wrote:
“The detonation wave pressure (1,000,000 to 1,500,000 pounds per square inch) from a high detonation velocity contact explosive sweeps into the reinforced concrete structure as a wave of compressive deformation. Since the pressure in the wave of deformation far exceeds the yield strength of the concrete (about 3,500 pounds per square inch) by a factor of approximately 300, the concrete is turned into granular sand and dust until the wave dissipates to below the yield strength of the concrete.

“This leaves a relatively smooth but granular surface, with protruding, bare reinforcement rods, a distinctive signature of damage by contact explosives. The effect of the contact explosive on the reinforcement rods themselves can only be seen under microscopic metallurgical examination. (The rods are inertially confined during the explosion and survive basically intact because of their much higher yield strength and plasticity.)”

Note here that General Partin is referring to explosives “in contact” with the reinforced concrete structure requiring between 1,000,000 and 1,500,000 pounds per square inch to strip the concrete away, leaving only the bare reinforcement rods. Think about this people, think about it. The stripped reinforcement rods in Bali were more than fifty feet away from the weapon, and thus not in contact at all.

Because blast through a fifty foot air gap is a very inefficient energy coupling mechanism against heavily reinforced concrete, four hundred pounds of the fastest chemical explosive so far touted by the Australian Government, RDX, would exert [but would not exceed] approximately ten pounds per square inch, fifty feet away from the point of criticality at ground zero. An equal weight of Potassium chlorate would be lucky to exert two pounds per square inch at the same range.

The problem here is obvious, and the only accurate conclusion about Kuta Beach is impossible for the Australian authorities to simply wish away with wild tales about potassium chlorate detergent all too conveniently "stolen from Java". To cause the actual damage photographed at the crime scene in Bali, we must have a weapon with a compound yield, and velocity of detonation fast enough to ensure one million pounds per square inch of retained pressure fifty feet away from ground zero. There is only one weapon in the world compact enough to perform this staggering trick: A micro nuke from Dimona in the Negev Desert. .

Update 10 November 2002

On the morning of 6th November, my claims about a micro nuclear weapon in Bali were published on the front page of a major newspaper in Java. Apparently the claims were enthusiastically embraced by Indonesians already deeply suspicious of Australia’s unseemly and entirely unnecessary involvement in the Kuta Beach investigation. To understand the level of outrage and mistrust, ask yourself how angry you would be if a bunch of uninvited Indonesian police turned up to "investigate" a crime in New York, London or Sydney.

Early the next morning, members of the Indonesian Government in Jakarta became involved and called urgently for further details about the nuclear device. And so it was that by 10 a.m. on 7th November, the ludicrous Australian-American myth about “Jemaah Islamiyah” and “al Qaeda” attacking Bali, was rapidly starting to unravel across Indonesia.

According to a well-placed government source in Jakarta, firm action was then taken to reverse the situation, and restore the Australian-American myth in the eyes of the public. Sometime around noon an Indonesian general connected to TNI, ordered that a man called Amrozi be ‘strongly’ encouraged to confess.
To quote the Jakarta government source, Amrozi “was hooked up to 220 volts, given a cup of Scopolamine, and thirty minutes later was ready to swear he was George Bush”. Our brave Australian and American investigators neatly sidestepped direct involvement in this torture, by lamely telling television viewers at home that they had “no need to interrogate the suspect personally”.

In reality Amrozi is a motorcycle mechanic from east Java, whose wife and neighbors can prove he never left his home island, but this awkward truth was of no concern to the general, nor to his western paymasters. By early morning on the 8th of November, the western media obediently started parroting claims that Amrozi was a “known associate of Jemaah Islamiyah”, with indirect links to “al Qaeda”.

By late afternoon the same day, al Jazeera television, the nice folk who brought you the blatantly forged video footage of “Osama Bin Laden” last year, issued a press release stating that, “al Qaeda has accepted full responsibility for the Bali bombing”. Wrong! The web site on which this bogus claim was made, is owned and discreetly operated by a 'blind' company in Qatar, the home base of al Jazeera.

It was perhaps on this date that we finally slipped seamlessly into a post-Orwellian media world, where those who control the present ignore the past, and don’t give a damn about the future. As if bewitched, journalists worldwide jumped on the Thought Police band wagon, telling us to believe that an imaginary terrorist organization had motivated a motorcycle mechanic in Java to kill nearly 300 people in Bali, using only a van full of Potassium chlorate detergent. As George Orwell foresaw in his famous novel “1984”, there seems to be little we can do at present about this blatant media disinformation:
“At present nothing is possible except to extend the area of sanity little by little. We cannot act collectively. We can only spread our knowledge outwards from individual to individual, generation after generation. In the face of the Thought Police there is no other way.”

No matter the level of direct and indirect media control, the vexing problem of a newly alert Indonesian Government had still not been completely resolved. What if a suspicious minister [or ministers] managed to slip the right scientific equipment into Bali, and detected residual traces of slow alpha radiation from the micro nuke at Kuta

Beach?

Help was soon on the way to deal with this possible contingency. On the morning of Saturday 9th November, just three days after my claims were published in the Indonesian newspaper, Intelligence services in London used the British Home Office as a 'front', and issued a dire warning that “al Qaeda might be planning to attack the west with a dirty radiological weapon”.

For those not fully conversant with this dreadful technology, it was helpfully explained that a radiological weapon is a conventional explosive bomb with nuclear waste wrapped around it. When the bomb explodes it hurls radioactive material outwards, causing terrible injuries to the victims of the blast. Of course, the Home Office warning was swiftly “retracted’ six hours later by Minister of Home Affairs David Blunkett, who said it was a “clerical error”, but not before the bogus warning had been peddled to the public by every television network in the western world.

This is not the first time that British intelligence has used this technique to subtly deflect attention away from a real micro nuke. The same claim was peddled back in 1993 after micro nukes were used on the City of London, as indirect warnings for the City to fall in line behind New York. I recorded this earlier intelligence leak in a report first published in 1993, and posted on the Internet six years later.

“During early May 1993, ITN World News from London carried an interesting feature in which it was explained that due to thefts of highly-radioactive Uranium 235, terrorists would now be able to contaminate conventional bombs with 500 grams of Uranium, thereby forcing the police to stay away from the area for days. Exactly why experienced terrorists would risk detection & death by transporting deadly unshielded Uranium around in their pockets was not explained.

“There is no credible reason for keeping the police and other authorities away from a bombsite after the weapon has been detonated. However, the rumor could form the basis of a government defence in cases where American or British citizens located positive traces of radiation, near the World Trade Centre or in the City of London, for example.” The original 1993 report can be read here.

The British Home Office never makes “clerical errors” of this magnitude, especially on a Saturday when its civil servants are at home for the weekend, and the only people left in the Home Office building are duty spooks and cleaners. The bogus story was released specifically [and only] to cover any future discovery of radiation at Kuta Beach.

Now if an Indonesian minister manages to establish that traces of slow alpha radiation are still present in Bali, all the deranged General has to do is collect a few more “suspects”, hook them up to 220 volts, pour Scopolamine down their throats, and urge them to “confess” that the mythical “al Qaeda” provided nuclear waste to wrap around their homemade bomb constructed from potassium chlorate detergent.

Update 18 November 2002

Indonesian Parliament Claims Micro Nuke in Bali

Amrozi - Bali's Alleged Psychedelic Nuclear Bomber

On Monday 18 November, Indonesian Parliamentary Speaker Amien Rais said he questioned the validity of the police conclusion that "Amrozi" was the main perpetrator of the Bali bombings which claimed more than 187 lives. Rais was supported by Deputy House Speaker A.M. Fatwa, who stated, "`My conscience says that he is not a key actor. I don’t believe that Amrozi has the capability to make all kinds of the preparations for the bombings, like setting off a kind of micro nuclear bomb in Bali."

These pointed observations by two of the most powerful politicians in Indonesia, designed to counter deliberate Australian police & media disinformation about the bombing in Kuta Beach, were then recorded verbatim in the official Indonesian parliamentary transcripts. A wide range of media outlets in Asia and the Middle East reported Rais and Fatwa’s comments, which were predictably ignored in Australia and America.

It was late on Wednesday 15 November, just one day before the special Hindu cleansing ceremony of the Bali bombsite in Kuta Beach, that the local Indonesian police chief thoughtfully paraded "prime suspect" Amrozi in front of the assembled media pack. The fact that Amrozi was clearly disoriented, rambling, as high as a kite on drugs and separated from western journalists by a thick glass wall, was apparently not a problem for our sacred guardians of the truth.

Despite the obvious audio impediments and complete lack of direct access, Australian and Singaporean media outlets were nonetheless able to “accurately” interpret Amrozi’s muffled and garbled mixture of Javanese and Indonesian, to mean that he confessed to killing nearly 300 people at Kuta Beach, with a minivan full of potassium chlorate detergent stolen from Java.

Not only that, but as Amrozi peered hopefully through a thick psychedelic haze to wave cheerfully at the television cameras, we were further asked to believe he claimed to enjoy killing people, wanted to kill some more, and in particular wanted to kill lots and lots of Americans. So thick was the psychedelic fog surrounding him, Amrozi completely forgot that the punishment for “confessing” to such crimes in Indonesia is death by firing squad.

Needless to say, the entire media event was contrived rubbish, but it served the purpose for which it was mounted, i. e. to drive increased levels of Australian hatred against Amrozi, and through him against all Muslims across south east Asia. Australian relatives of the dead at the Hindu ceremony understandably shouted “kill him”, while Australian politicians at home took the opportunity to increase religious and ethnic division with comments including “ugly sneering Indonesian attitudes”, and “these people are vicious and dangerous.”

To establish exactly who arranged and paid for the Amrozi charade in Bali, we need only look at exactly where the story was covered and broadcast in excessive detail by the western media, and who benefited most from staging the charade in the first place. Australians were beyond doubt the prime media target audience, with Indonesians following a close second. There was also significant coverage in Great Britain, but virtually none at all in America.

Think about it people, think about it. Here was the alleged Bali “culprit” confessing to one of the biggest civilian mass murders in history, and apparently linked to the very same alleged “terrorist organizations” peddled incessantly by the American media. On its own track record, New York should have snapped the story up immediately, and used it relentlessly to further promote its fictional “terrorist” groups.

The only possible or plausible reason for this spectacular event not hogging American television prime time for the same three long days it did in Australia and Indonesia, is that US authorities already knew it was a pathetic scam, quite probably funded by its own shadowy agents in Bali handing out thick wads of crisp $100 bills to corrupt officials. Beneath that lies the 99% probability that Judeo-Christian Americans arranged the Bali attack themselves, in order to “socially engineer” Australian public support for the forthcoming oil crusade in the Middle East.

Subject as always to political pressure, members of the Australian Federal Police in Bali cheerfully threw their questionable weight behind the Amrozi “confession”. When AFP forensic chief Royds was asked whether he believed Amrozi was telling the truth to police, Mr Royds said: "I believe so". Unfortunately for the Australian Government, members of the AFP also appeared to confirm that earlier claims identifying the so-called “chemical explosives” in the Bali bomb, were at best pure guesses, and at worst outright lies.

It was explained to assembled journalists that because evidence at the crime scenes had been washed away by fire hoses, investigators had this week acted on British advice to “climb up light poles and take forensic swabs from roof tiles, signposts and other places that had not been wet.” Oh dear, if you tell enough lies for long enough, you will surely be found out.

So, are members of the Australian investigative team now prepared to say exactly which explosives were used to make the Bali bomb? Well, no, they have now fallen atypically silent, apart from making irrelevant and inane remarks about the bombers having “amazing chemical skills” and “the ability to build very sophisticated weapons.” And for the first time in many weeks, these same investigators have suddenly decided to wear full-length protective clothing, including facemasks and airtight hoods.

Claiming “amazing chemical skills” for the bombers is seriously understating the case. Any alchemist out there who could transmute potassium chlorate detergent into a critical plutonium nuclear weapon of the kind detonated at Kuta Beach, would instantly win the Nobel Prizes for chemistry and physics, before being politely but forcibly inducted into the American nuclear program at Los Alamos Laboratories.

Although providing no details about the bomb personally, the AFP representative who spoke to the media stood right next to a large board, on which was clearly written the word “Semtex”. Oh no! The Bali bomb was surely not made from the deadly Czechoslovakian plastic explosive allegedly used in tiny quantities by “Muslim Terrorists” to blow up Pam Am 103 over Lockerbie? No, because that would be impossible, but the board was certainly placed next to the AFP representative to subliminally suggest that you, the viewer, should believe Semtex was the probable villain.

In reality, the most powerful version of this “terror” explosive, Semtex–H, is only 1.104 times as powerful as TNT, and thus substantially weaker than either C-4 or RDX. Manufactured by the Semtin Glassworks in Czechoslovakia, the most common version of Semtex-H contains 42% RDX and 41% PETN, with the balance made up of antioxidant, plasticizer and binder. Semtex had nothing, I repeat nothing, to do with the blast outside the Sari Club. Nor did any other "chemical" explosive.

Yesterday it was discreetly announced that the contents of the crater, and other debris from the bombsite would be disposed of far out to sea, as a final step in the "Hindu cleansing process". The fact that no Hindu cleansing process known to man requires that nuclear-contaminated waste be buried far out to sea, seems to have escaped media attention. Dumping your nuclear waste in an ocean trench and then blaming it on the Hindu religion is an ingenious idea, in this case based on pure desperation.

. Late yesterday the diggers started work, frantically removing structures from Kuta high street before they could be subjected to proper examination by suspicious politicians in Jakarta. The first target of this combined mechanical assault was the building shown in the pictures above with the exposed reinforcing bar, an embarrasing monument perpetually proving the nuclear nature of the blast. Not any more it isn't, with trucks swiftly removing the rubble for a tasteful religious burial far out to sea.

Immediately after the Hindu cleansing ceremony, diggers and wrecking balls were sent in to remove the crater contents and other material for burial "far out to sea"

Removing the physical evidence will heighten rather than diminish the controversy, and it will certainly not stop those determined to prove that this was not an attack by Muslims on Indonesian, Australian, and British soft targets. Perhaps more significant now that the dust has literally settled, is determining exactly how many people are still officially missing: critical numbers that are currently some of the best-kept secrets in the west.

You see, by allowing the diggers and wrecking balls to move in yesterday and demolish the site, authorities have made it clear publicly that they have now recovered every available body part from the crime scene. If they had not recovered every available body part, international convention would require that the crime scene remain a crime scene for as long as it takes to effect full recovery, normally several months for an incident as huge as this one.

Jakarta politicians may not yet be aware of the fact, but a nuclear event can be proved not only by available evidence at the crime scene, but also by evidence that should have been recovered and stored away from the crime scene, but was not. Because a nuclear weapon is the only device capable of generating sufficient heat and pressure to completely vaporize human bodies, a substantial deficit of human remains at the site, or in correct storage afterwards, is as convincing and damning in the nuclear sense as finding slow alpha radiation lurking in a monsoon drain.

As stated these figures are very hard to come by, and your help is needed to track them down in your own country. It seems likely on present estimates that the actual death toll is not 182 as claimed by Australian authorities, but much closer to 300. If you live in Indonesia, Britain, Germany, France, New Zealand, or any other country affected by the blast, do your best to obtain your own country’s total number of confirmed dead, and those still unaccounted for. Note here that it is the "unaccounted for" figures that western governments are desperately trying to conceal, because they and they alone have the easy ability to blow the Bali "body scam" wide open. Please send a copy of your results to joe.vialls@ntlworld.com

Crude figures available at present indicate that a minimum of 40 Australians are still missing, 30 British, 7 German,

3 French and possibly 6 New Zealanders. I know this sounds gruesome, but if these figures are even close to accurate, then the authorities in Bali must have 86 x 120 lbs average weight of body parts in storage, before we make an allowance for dehydration and decomposition. Let us be generous and allow a full 30% deduction for dehydration and decomposition, meaning the authorities must currently have a minimum of 7,224 pounds [3.61 TONS] of body parts in storage awaiting identification.

If the current figure in storage is much lower than that, as I have been repeatedly assured it is by Balinese contacts, then a large number of human beings were turned into heat and light at the micro nuclear weapon’s point of criticality. If we can accurately determine the total number of “unaccounted for" victims, then we can apply simple arithmetic to calculate how many of them vanished in the first five microseconds of the 300,000 degree centigrade fireball.

It is already being rumored [but has not yet been confirmed], that authorities have been speeding up the process by “cheating” on the body parts. Put simply, and mostly in order to give the affected families rapid “closure”, coffins containing as little as a single DNA-identified arm have been buried, with the balance of the body weight made up with sandbags. Normally such a procedure is used for genuinely humane reasons, and provides the family with a physical grave to mourn over. Nothing wrong with that so far as it goes, because the procedure hurts no one and helps relatives get over the tragedy. Nor is it unusual. The procedure has been used countless times in the past at major disaster sites.

The problem we face is that of forensic authorities trying to use this procedure to “cover” for the deficiency in body parts, by suddenly “speeding up” the identification process in a bid to camouflage the huge deficit in stored body parts. Fifty quick funerals with only twenty pounds of body parts in each coffin would certainly help to do that. We therefore need to establish the total weight of body parts in storage TODAY, and make a note of it for future reference. Any Indonesians reading this please do the best that you can, and send the accurate figure to the email address above.

Update 13 February 2003

Zionist Nuclear Attack on Bali Officially “Buried” by Western Media

Colonel Zainuri Lubis
Indonesian Police Expert
"Chlorate, black powder & TNT"

Amrozi, Alleged Bomb Supplier

Written Police "Confession"
"Chlorate, aluminium powder & fuze"

Tim Morris, Counter-Terrorism
Australian Federal Police
"Chlorate, detonator cord & TNT"

Alarmed by new evidence which points directly at the real villains behind the atrocity in Bali, commercial and government-owned western television networks worked together last week to finally “prove” that an unlikely bunch of poor and ill-informed Muslim villagers from central Java, were responsible for the exotic million-foot-per-second nuclear blast that killed more than 200 people at Kuta Beach on 12 October 2002.

Western governments and media alike have become especially nervous about three renegade American investigative journalists, who managed to penetrate Denpasar Airport, and establish that certain aircraft movements on 12 and 13 October have been deliberately deleted from the control tower logs, though details still exist in the aircraft handling logs, i.e. those kept by the ground crew responsible for refueling the aircraft, checking its tires, and so on.

At least two of the deleted aircraft were wearing “false number plates”. All altered tower log pages, and those pages of the handling logs which prove the arrival and departure times of the three “mystery” aircraft, have now been meticulously photographed and stored for future use. More details about this later.

Painfully aware that poor Muslim “terrorists” from small villages in central Java simply cannot afford very expensive jet and prop-jet aircraft, the collective western media was ordered to put the Zionist boot in before the airport deception became more widely known. The Bali bombing has always been a big problem for western governments. Prove that Bali was initiated by murderous Zionists solely to “encourage” more Australian support for an attack on Iraq, and at the same time you prove that almost every other “Muslim Terrorist Attack” on the west was conducted by the same Zionist fanatics. Such a revelation could not be allowed under any circumstances.

So the media rushed in where only fools dare to tread, and managed to make a complete cock-up of the entire exercise. Despite the fact that everyone has allegedly already “confessed” to the bombings at Kuta Beach, and despite the media trying desperately to avoid mentioning the pathetic potassium chlorate “detergent bomb”, details did finally emerge. Unfortunately, the Indonesian police cited one formulation for the bomb and the Australian Federal Police cited an entirely different formulation for the bomb, neither of which matched the ingredients written down in suspect Amrozi’s “confession”.

These conflicting statements were made on exactly the same day to different western media interviewers! According to the Australian Government, the AFP has been working “closely with the Indonesian Police” ever since the atrocity on 12 October 2002, when manifestly the Indonesian Police have not been cooperating with the Australian Federal Police at all.

No doubt assisted by Sodium Pentathol and probably while hooked up the mains electricity supply, suspect Amrozi originally “confessed” to supplying potassium chlorate, aluminum powder and fuze wire, which could not explode no matter how you mixed it together. Remember here that potassium chlorate crystals are not explosive, and need sophisticated treatment and augmentation to even contribute to a low-explosive blast. Translated to Kuta Beach, Amrozi’s “bomb” would have been no more dangerous than a child’s firework.

Australian Federal Police Director of Counter Terrorism, Tim Morris, was a little more inventive. Tim claimed the bomb was composed of “chlorate, detonator cord [cordex] and TNT”. Getting better here, Tim, getting better! The TNT would certainly trigger the cordex, or the cordex trigger the TNT, but neither would do anything to the inert potassium chlorate detergent crystals, which must first be blended very carefully with an exact quantity of paraffin wax [fuel] before they can augment anything. Translated to Kuta Beach, Tim’s bomb would have killed a few people from blast alone, while simultaneously bleaching the shirts of hundreds of survivors.

Indonesian police explosives expert Colonel Zainuri Lubis, blandly claimed the bomb was composed of “chlorate, black powder and TNT”, which were “mixed together”. Colonel Lubis is a genuine explosive expert [unlike Amrozi and Tim], who smiled broadly throughout his media interview, and seemed to be deliberately misleading the pathetic western media lobby confronting him. For many months now, most Indonesian media and the official Indonesian Parliamentary Records in Jakarta, have recorded the reality of a nuclear blast at Kuta Beach, NO details of which have managed to find their way into the western press. So Colonel Zainuri Lubis gave the latest idiot western media pack an idiot composition to pass on to its idiot viewers.

Alleged "Bali Bomber" Ali Imron demonstrates how he assembled the chlorate-black-powder-TNT device, but conveniently forgets to explain why he wasn't blown sky-high when trying to mix it!

Along with every other explosive expert on earth, Colonel Lubis knows very well that you cannot mix sharp potassium chlorate crystals with sensitive black powder particles. Well, you can try of course, but not if you wish to live long enough to go home for dinner. The split-second “the bomber” started mixing, the sharp chlorate crystals would create immense friction across the surface of the black powder particles, which would then react violently by either exploding or burning furiously, depending on particle size.

At the same time, an exothermic [heat] reaction would start between the two compounds. If the friction didn’t get “the bomber”, the exothermic reaction would, instantly transforming :the bomber” into a white-hot Roman Candle. So Colonel Lubis’s chosen bomb cannot be translated to Kuta Beach, because the mythical bombers would already have been burned to death in their mythical “secret bomb making laboratory”.

It seems that all of us in the west owe a big vote of thanks to Colonel Zainuri Lubis. Unable to comment on the true nature of the nuclear device in Bali because of severe political constraints placed on him by Bali Police Chief General Made Pastika, Colonel Lubis nonetheless managed to find a way of leaking the absurdity of the western media “Muslim witch hunt” to tens of millions of western viewers, using the increasingly desperate western media lobby as a willing though pitifully unwitting conduit!

Parallel investigations in Bali by three “renegade” American investigative journalists, have thrown up some interesting and potentially damning facts about events on the night of 12-13 October 2002, in which the air traffic control logs have been deliberately “edited” to exclude some highly suspicious aircraft movements in and out of Denpasar. Most suspicious of course is the editing itself. Why would anyone go to the trouble of breaking into the control tower and deleting the flight details, if the aircraft in question were engaged in legitimate operations that could be easily explained at a later date?

Most interesting is a Canadian De Havilland Dash 7 carrying the registration C-FWYU, which landed in Denpasar four hours before the explosion at the Sari Club, and took off again for an unknown destination one hour after the weapon exploded. This flight was “whited out” of the control tower logs, but can still be identified by shining a bright light on the back of the log page in question. Full details of the flight are shown in the aircraft handling logs, which someone presumably forgot to delete, and which have now been photographed for future legal use if required. Denpasar ground crew members remembered this particular aircraft well, because it was in their words “very distinctive”, an observation that deserves explanation.

Only about 100 Dash 7 aircraft were ever made, which ensures that any one of them is a curiosity at any airfield in the world. The only four engine STOL [Short Take Off & Land] aircraft produced in the last thirty years, the Dash 7 is easily identified by its four jet-prop engines and thick-bladed props, high “T” tail and huge landing flaps. Even when fully loaded the Dash 7 can take off with zero wind assistance in 600 yards. The aircraft is excellent for low flying reconnaissance and radar evasion, as proved by the American Special Operations version known as ARL-C [Airborne Reconnaissance Low – Model C]. When carrying a light payload and only 50% fuel, the Dash 7 is also the only four engine STOL plane in the world that can take off and land on an aircraft carrier deck, without external steam catapult or arrester hook assistance.

The photo is for illustration only, and shows C-FWYU in the colors of Conair Aviation of Canada, who flew it many years ago in the remote Canadian north. It must be stressed that at the time of the Bali bombing, the Dash 7 in question was not in any way involved with Conair or any of its subsidiaries. Checks reveal that C-FWYU was sold and removed from the Canadian Register in August 2002, and was thus no longer entitled to display this Canadian registration on its fuselage. So bearing in mind that we do not have the actual aircraft’s documents and thus a corroborating hull number, and also bearing in mind that painting a set of false registration marks on any fuselage is child’s play, exactly which Dash 7 was really present in Bali that night, and why the absolute secrecy?

Where “C-FWYU” came from and where it went remain a mystery. Despite its dazzling STOL performance the Dash 7 is extremely limited in both speed and range, for all essential purposes limiting its operating base to Singapore, Darwin, or perhaps to an aircraft carrier at sea. We do need to find out exactly what C-FWYU was doing that night, and we do need to establish the current owner. I have so far failed in my attempts to find this information, so anyone who can establish these points is asked to copy the details to joe.vialls@ntlworld.com

There were two other aircraft deleted from the control tower logs, though they seem less important. Both are Lear Jet 45 fast business jets listed on the Australian Register, but their landing and take off times are not as precise as Dash 7 registration C-FWYU. For this reason I am not at this stage publishing their registration numbers, for fear the information might prove both distracting and misleading. The bottom line is that the pathetic suspects from central Java could not under any circumstances have acquired sophisticated aircraft such as these, and we now need to backtrack the “real” bombers using this fresh information.

Biggest Newspaper in Indonesia Denies Conventional Explosives Were Used in Bali

By Robert S. Finnegan - National News - January 03, 2003

On October 12, 2002 the Indonesian island of Bali experienced a terrorist attack that rocked the world. It was unquestionably well-coordinated and executed, the largest in the country's history.

Investigators and forensics experts from both national and international teams that had quickly been assembled flocked to the crime scene, ostensibly to begin what should have been a long, drawn out exercise in forensics and investigative sleuthing to identify and capture the foot soldiers, coordinators and masterminds behind the attack that has left over 190 known dead, scores missing without a trace and hundreds more wounded It has turned out to be anything but that.

The Indonesian government immediately vowed to unite in the hunt for the bombers. The U.S. government along with the international community seized the opportunity to point the finger at the shadowy al-Qaeda group along with Muslim cleric Abu Bakar Ba'asyir as the culprits. In hindsight, it would appear that perhaps these individuals, given their apparent intimate knowledge of the perpetrators immediately following the bombing should have been included on the investigating team. Perhaps if they had we would know more than we do today, which is very little despite the volume of information (or disinformation) being vomited out by the spokesmen for the investigative teams on a daily basis.

A creeping sense of foreboding began soon after the forensics people and other investigators (inclusive of Insp. Gen. I Made Pastika and his army of hundreds of supposedly top-notch investigators with virtually unlimited resources at their disposal) announced after only a week and a half that they were wrapping up their on-site work and retreating to the labs to analyze their findings. Astounding work, as it must have set a world record for crime scene forensic analysis.

Given the scope of the bombing and the sheer size of the primary and secondary blast areas - where trace from a plethora of different explosive compounds were swabbed from - this was a feat that escaped even the vaunted investigators working the World Trade Center crime scene in New York, who spent nearly a year literally sifting by hand for evidence at the site. It would appear that the teams on Bali possessed far superior skills and techniques ... or was there something else responsible for their haste in wrapping up so quickly and then sending the rest of the evidence as quickly as possible to the bottom of the ocean off Bali?

At this point in their investigation National Police Chief Gen. Da'i Bachtiar states for the record that "traces of a chemical powder used in the bomb" were found in the van allegedly used to transport the large device. What powder? Even a cursory examination of the crater and primary site immediately following the bombings would make this statement laughable were it not for the circumstances.

If indeed the Mitsubishi L300 van was used in the large blast, the five-foot deep by twenty-foot wide crater indicates that it would have been completely vaporized, including the engine block which they apparently found intact - along with the victims who instantly vanished. Indeed, this begs the question: Where did the investigators obtain this evidence in relation to the crater? Is it possible that if the van survived the large blast it was because it was parked at the edge of the primary blast zone, packed with small amounts of all the explosives - whose traces were found at the sites - in order to throw off independent investigators?

In addition, there is the Memorandum of Understanding (MoU), allegedly signed jointly by the National Police and the international investigation team, specifically restricting the scope of the "investigation links" and prohibiting international inquiries. Could this at least partially explain why Pastika has continually stonewalled, intimidated and generally obstructed independent investigators during the course of their work?

During the first weeks of the investigation, notables such as State Intelligence Agency (BIN) Chief Hendropriyono, Susilo Yudhoyono, Assembly Speaker Amien Rais and Pastika focused or pretended to focus on foreigners - without specifying "which" foreigners - who they said were behind the attack. Somehow this twisting, turning trail dried up and disappeared into thin air without explanation, along with the former retired Air Force Officer who allegedly confessed to police his involvement in the bombing and was then released. To this day his whereabouts remain unknown and police investigators either cannot or will not release any information on this man, an officer who was allegedly trained in America in explosives and is an incredible lead that should have been followed-up on aggressively and thoroughly. Why was it not?

Are these the statements and actions of professional investigators - or the actions of individuals engaged in a cover-up? Let's look at the myriad of explosive traces found at the site and subsequently cited individually off and on by investigators and police as "the explosive" used in the bombings. First it was C-4, then RDX. These two are actually the same, the difference being nine percent mallable plastic used in C-4. So, which is more powerful? RDX - nine percent more powerful than C-4.

Day after day, investigators trotted out a different explosive and combinations of explosives purportedly responsible for the blasts. In addition to C-4 and RDX there was now TNT, Ammonium Nitrate, HMX, Semtex, PETN, Chlorate and napalm. Everything but the kitchen sink. Was this gross ineptitude? Or another ploy to throw independent investigators off the trail?

For example, had the originators of the napalm theory studied up on the material before opening their mouths they would have known that napalm leaves a sticky, smelly residue on everything, including victims. This was not in evidence at the blast site or at the Sanglah burn ward and morgue, where the burn victims were taken. Therefore, in the absence of any physical evidence, napalm must be excluded and the originators of this farce be awarded a grade of "F" in "explosives analysis."

In other words, if you are going to lie, be professional about it, at least know what you are lying about and have the mental capacity to remember what you said when you said it. This single evidentiary template could easily be applied and extended to the entire "official investigation" of the Bali bombings where deceit, obstruction and obfuscation are and have been the name of the game.

To put this in perspective, let us look at three of the explosives claimed by official investigators to have been used in the bombings, starting with the compound that has the lowest velocity of detonation in feet per second (FPS) which is Potassium Chlorate at 3,500 FPS; compared to 12,000 FPS for Ammonium Nitrate and diesel and finally 27,800 FPS for RDX. In simple terms, at any given distance from ground zero these different explosive compounds will exert pressure in pounds per square inch. Damage to people and structures are a result of this pressure in varying degrees depending on the velocity of detonation. Even if RDX were used, the amount needed to cause the level of destruction in evidence at the crime scene should have been in excess of anything available through even the military, who denied possession of the explosive. There is also the delivery of the device to be taken into account.

Each of the explosives cited by investigators (with the exception of napalm) have unique and individual characteristics that vary for usage, stability and explosive yeild. They require specific detonators for each in order to obtain maximum effect. Also now at the bottom of the ocean off Bali is the reinforcing bar (rebar) located more than fifty feet from ground zero that had been completely stripped of concrete as a result of the blast. Documented military estimates of the force required to accomplish this is roughly 1 million to 1.5 million pounds per square inch.

What kind of weapon or device could accomplish this? And for that matter leave a crater of that size? Why was it filled in? This arguably could have been one of the most important pieces of evidence available to investigators not only for the trace explosive in evidence, but from which also could have been determined (roughly) the size and composition of the device.

With the police claiming (off and on) that Amrozi, Mukhlas and Samudra (who allegedly at one point denied involvement in the Bali bombings) were the perpetrators of the blasts, then why do the official investigators not know EXACTLY the type of device used in the main bombing and its precise composition? To put it quite simply, how can we have a bomber or bombers in the absence of a bomb?
Why were Amrozi and Samudra so quick to confess and finger their "accomplices"? Were these the actions of dedicated, radical, Islamic fundamentalists? "Professionals"? Did they expect to further their cause by eviscerating their own organization? Does it make sense that they were willing to kill and maim hundreds of innocents - including many fellow Indonesians - and yet implicate their comrades to save their own skins?

Given this dismal investigative performance, exactly what role did the international investigating team play in this debacle? If indeed there is one thing that has been glaringly apparent throughout this investigation, it is that perhaps nothing close to the truth has been told as of today. It is also apparent that something is very, very wrong not only with the procedural aspects of this case, but also with the suppression and outright destruction of evidence. The international investigators bear a heavy responsibility for this, and should be held accountable

Bali Micro Nuke - Army Officer Reported Accurate Details

Then the Australian Government demanded that his report be removed!

Copyright Joe Vialls, 5 November 2002
http://homepage.ntlworld.com/steveseymour/nuke/army.html

" It was an absolute war zone, it was just out of control."
Captain Rodney Cox, Kuta Beach, 12 October 2002

Australian Army officer Rodney Cox was less than fifty meters from ground zero when the bomb exploded, but survived presumably because he was in the "null zone" below the rising diagonal blast vector from the buried weapon. Captain Cox was then put in command of operations to evacuate the injured. He tells a harrowing tale, with some of his most chilling and revealing statements including, ""Then the power cut... all the power went out. I didn’t think bomb, I didn’t think anything at that stage. And then, probably, I’d say two seconds later... not even two seconds later, there was just the huge flash, and I was just covered in glass, put on the ground, and it just started ... it was like hell on earth.”

By stating that the power cut preceded the flash, Captain Cox unwittingly confirmed the critical nuclear identity of the weapon. We know that the small bomb in Paddy's bar ten seconds earlier caused only localized damage, and we now know that all of the electrical circuits in Kuta Beach were disrupted by the Source Region Electromagnetic Pulse [SREMP] emitted by the micro nuke at the point of criticality. The pulse travels through all mediums at the speed of light, and Cox noted the power cut immediately before witnessing the "huge flash" of the fireball as it burst up through the road surface. Captain Cox's recollections were printed on the front page of the Australian Army Newspaper, which in turn was placed on the Australian Army web site.

This did not please the Australian Government [for obvious reasons], and reliable sources state that the Army was ordered to remove the web page on ministerial orders, which it did. Then apparently less than 12 hours later a very senior officer countermanded the order, and insisted the page be restored. It was... Not being sure who will ultimately win this battle of the titans, I have reproduced this important story below, with correct credits and a link to the Army web site. If in the end the politicians win, there will always be a copy of the story here to fall back on.

Hell on Earth

‘It was an absolute war zone, it was just out of control’

One man’s story of how he and other soldiers in Bali leapt into the devastation

By Cpl Jonathan Garland

AN AUSTRALIAN soldier standing less than 50m from the bomb that exploded outside the Sari nightclub in Bali escaped unhurt.

Capt Rodney Cocks, a UNMO in East Timor, was enjoying his last night of leave before flying out of Indonesia the next morning.

He had just left his companions, a New Zealand, a Portuguese and a British national, also uniformed personnel serving in East Timor, inside nearby Paddy’s to walk to the Internet café a short distance away.

“I got about 30m down the street and then I heard one blast and I thought, ‘What was that?’,” he said.

[There was a ten-second separation between the explosion at Paddy's Bar and the micro-nuke, Ed]

“Then the power cut... all the power went out. I didn’t think bomb, I didn’t think anything at that stage.

“And then, probably, I’d say two seconds later... not even two seconds later, there was just the huge flash, and I was just covered in glass, put on the ground, and it just started ... it was like hell on earth.”

As he picked himself up and shook off the shards of glass that covered him, he saw flames from the blast and the devastated buildings climbing 50m into the air.

He recognised the second explosion as a bomb but was staggered at the amount of damage caused in the blast.

“I’ve done demolitions courses with the Army and it was bigger than anything I’ve ever blown up in my time, and I’ve done a bit.

“I was very lucky. I think I got a few cuts on my feet but nothing major. I was wearing shorts, T-shirt and thongs at the time. I consider myself one of the luckiest people alive, I really do.”

Prompted by his military training, his first reaction was to find the friends he had left in the bar and evacuate them and as many others as possible.

“By the time I picked myself up there were already people moving out away from the scene.

“I picked one girl up there - she had burns all over her body, so I grabbed her.

“I later heard she’d been assessed as having burns to 95 per cent of her body and that she hadn’t survived her injuries.

“We regrouped, got our people, helped the people we could, which, you know, was just bloody impossible, there were just so many people injured.”

“My main concern at this time was the girl I had in my arms, who was the one who had all the burns.”

The group took some of the injured back to their hotel and organised the hotel truck to take them to hospital, before going back to the scene of the explosion.

“I grabbed my phone, my head torch, my passport and my Army ID. The other guys did as well.

“From there... we started treating other people. At that stage I came across an Australian Army sergeant from 1RAR, he was on leave from Butterworth.

“He was pretty badly injured and we got him off to hospital and later evacced back to Townsville.”

Capt Cocks made contact with his family, telling them there had been an incident and that he was uninjured, before calling his headquarters.

They woke the force commander, who gave orders that Capt Cocks was to remain in Bali to render assistance where possible and to account for UN personnel.

“I was told to cancel my flight out the next morning and that I was the man on the ground.

“I had ambassadors calling my phone, all the UN crew, the Portuguese commanders, and I was just dealing things out from there.”

Capt Cocks said there were about 12 hospitals treating blast victims and he visited all of them several times searching for personnel.

“Initially no-one really knew how many people were here, so I had to go to all the hospitals trying to find out did we have any people there, how many injured we had - ADF, PKF, UN police, the whole lot.

“That was just an absolute nightmare. There’s just bodies everywhere, blood everywhere, just death and destruction everywhere and just so many Australians ...”

He was taken to the morgue at Denpasar General Hospital, where he searched the dead to locate missing soldiers.

“The bodies were just... the floor was littered with burnt corpses. It was just awful... some of these bodies you couldn’t tell, you know, whether they were male or female, young, old, Indonesian, Australian...”

He returned to the scene of the blast the next morning, trying to locate missing personnel, and was shocked at the devastation he saw.

“It was an absolute war zone, it was just out of control. I was outside the Sari club, where the blast was ... I reckon this hole would have been about probably a metre and a half deep and three metres wide.

“You need a lot of bang to get through and make that sort of hole. That second bomb was huge.

“By that stage they’d already started pulling the bodies out and... there were nearly as many bodies as I saw that night in the morgue... probably even more, sitting on the footpath outside the Sari club.”

Capt Cocks then went back to the hospital searching for the missing personnel among those being evacuated to Australia by Hercules.

Capt Cocks said he couldn’t believe how lucky he had been to escape injury in the explosion.

“The other thing that’ll stick with me is the tragedy of the people I saw that... I could well have been in their place.

“The dead and the injured at the hospital... they were just guys like me. They’re young Australians having a good time out.

“My card didn’t get drawn, which my family and I are so thankful for, but a lot did.”

The Hypnotic Foot Grenade

Joe Vialls

The Strange Case of the Loaded Shoe

Passengers have learned to accept the unorthodox on airliners nowadays, from sky marshals idly twiddling with their Glock semi automatic pistols, to bottles of free champagne designed to restore your good humor if the sky marshal accidentally squeezes the trigger and shoots you instead of a hijacker. But hey, you asked for it really didn't you? Slashing away at your steak on an aircraft with a plastic knife, is nowadays grounds for lawful homicide.

But what if you decide to change your routine for a while, and do something unexpected though perfectly legal. Say, for example, you decide to light a sulfur-based match and wave it around near your own shoe. Remember, lighting a match on an airliner is perfectly legal until the precise point at which the flame comes into contact with a banned and lethal (sic) Lucky Strike or Marlboro cigarette. What then? Will the sky marshal shoot you full of holes on mere suspicion of random guilt, or will you simply be treated like any other bored and eccentric passenger on the flight?

Recent events on American Airlines Flight 63 from Paris to Miami indicate that if you try any such thing, you will be beaten to the floor by a bunch of furious passengers, tied to a seat in row 27, then be heavily "sedated" by two doctors who just happen to be on the same American Airlines flight. This is exactly what happened to a man on board Flight 63, despite the fact he did not suddenly shout: "I have a bomb and you're all going to die!" In fact the man did not say anything until long after he was wrestled to the floor, whereupon he apparently muttered, "You'll see. Just you wait and see." Despite the FBI trying to attach all kinds of sinister implications to this statement, a more likely explanation is that the man was probably referring to the legal suit he intended to take out against the barbarians who suddenly mishandled him.

The man, identified far too quickly by the FBI as Richard Colvin Reid a.k.a. Tariq Rajah a.k.a. Abdel Rahim, boarded Flight 63 quietly enough at Paris Charles de Gaulle, took his seat and later ate his in-flight meal. Then Richard (let's call him Richard for now), lit his sulfur-based match and the sky suddenly fell on his head. Why? From the passenger viewpoint there was absolutely no evidence that Richard was a potential "suicide bomber", nor any visible evidence that he was armed with anything more dangerous than a sulfur-based match.

Ask yourself a simple question here. Would you as a normal passenger on a normal airliner recognise a covert terrorist weapon concealed in someone's shoe, then raise the alarm? Of course not. Most airline passengers are not anti-terrorist specialists and would have no idea what they were looking at. Perhaps the man had some chewing gum stuck to the sole of his shoe? Few travellers watching the free in-flight movie would take it any further than that.

We know from his fellow passengers that Richard said nothing at all, which means that in order to generate the required and resulting extreme level of activity and panic, someone else sitting near him must have quietly told the cabin crew that Richard had a bomb. There is no other possible explanation. The next question is whether or not Richard actually knew he had a bomb in his shoe, and whether or not the alleged bomb was actually armed.

Remember, all we know for certain at this stage is that Richard allegedly had a bomb in his shoe, and the FBI has stated that the bomb in question was an "improvised" device consisting of a combination of det cord and C-4 grade plastic explosive, where the det cord was the "fuze" and the C-4 the "main charge". But how could the FBI have possibly known this so quickly? Det cord looks very much like the white plastic washing line you hang in your garden, and C-4 plastic explosive looks and smells very similar to the less powerful C-3 and Semtex varieties. To be sure of the materials, a full chemical analysis would be required, or the FBI must have known the exact chemical composition of the materials in advance of the incident.

The most critical point here is that neither Richard nor his assumed minder had a detonator cap. Thus for the following reasons, there was less than a one-percent chance of the alleged bomb exploding. As already stated, det cord (known to most as "Cordex"), looks like white plastic washing line with a black core. Though a high explosive in its own right, Cordex needs a detonator to initiate an explosion. If you light the end of a piece of Cordex with a match it will start to melt, and eventually drip all over the floor. A welding torch might have more disastrous results, so please do NOT try this at home!

The C-4 plastic explosive, known intimately to everyone who has ever watched a Steven Segal movie, is one of the most overrated explosives of our time. Sure, it is far more powerful than C-3, and sure, only limited stocks are allowed to be kept at individual US military bases, but it does not possess the magical powers sometimes attributed to it by filmmakers. For example, 334 grams of its Czech equivalent “Semtex H”, packed in a Toshiba radio, is supposed to have destroyed Pan American 103 at Lockerbie in 1988. Rest assured this is impossible

The primary reason C-4 is so prized is because it is easy to shape and relatively hard to set off by accident. C-4's main ingredient is RDX, which is also used in fireworks. The puttylike substance can be easily molded by hand. Its shape can dictate the force and direction of its blast. It is relatively insensitive to impact, friction or fire.

Could simple Richard with the sulfur match have located and acquired the Cordex and C-4 unaided? Doubtful, unless he had some very useful contacts, especially for the C-4. And remember that any expert setting the device up for Richard in advance, would certainly have included a proper detonator and discreet trigger. Believe me, those with direct access to C-4 know how to make bombs that work.

Media reports that Richard was travelling on a “forged” passport are completely untrue and deliberately misleading. Our pretend “suicide bomber” was travelling on a valid British passport in the name of Richard Colvin Reid, issued on 7 December 2001 by the British Embassy in Brussels, Belgium.

The British are very fussy about issuing passports, and normally require reams of supportive paperwork, signed photographs and so on, proving the applicant is who he claims to be. True it is possible to obtain even a British passport by deception, but it is a job requiring considerable expertise and access. As with the “designer” high explosives in the dummy bomb that could not possible have been detonated on the aircraft, this attention to detail points towards the direct involvement of a person or persons who knew exactly what they were doing.

With the hard evidence available to date, it is perfectly reasonable to conclude that the entire incident on Flight 63 was set up as a psychological reinforcer, designed to re-sensitize Americans and others to air travel, especially over the Christmas period and in the run-up to the Winter Olympic Games. This conclusion is supported by the choice of an American Airlines Boeing 767, one of which also ripped through the Trade Center in New York. After this, who would travel “American” or to “America”?

If this is the case then repeat incidents, lethal and non-lethal but always different, will take place during the next few months. The American Economy is already on its way down to rock bottom, a process that can only be accelerated by incidents such as these.

The Hypnotic Foot Greande: Update
Joe Vialls

Discreetly ignored by the establishment media, the Metropolitan Police in London has confirmed Richard Colvin Reid is indeed British. “Tariq Rajah” is complete fiction and “Abdel Rahim” might (or might not) be the name he used to allegedly worship at the Brixton mosque in south west London. In a rare and quite extraordinary “coincidence”, Mr Reid is now alleged to have “known” Zacarias Moussaoui, a Frenchman of Moroccan origin who lived in Brixton, and who has been charged in America with conspiracy over the September 11 attacks, and suspected of organising the hijacks of the planes (sic) which destroyed the World Trade Center.

Well now! Here we are with the American Government furiously trying to convince a skeptical public that physical “Arab Hijackers” flew the remotely-controlled jets into the World Trade Center, when along comes a convenient nutter loaded up with C-4 and Cordex, conveniently “proving” a link between Arab Terrorists and American Airlines, and between Zacarias Moussaoui and American Airlines. This is the sort of “lucky break” that intelligence officers have wet dreams about...

This fantastically convenient link was made by Abdul Haqq Baker, 35, chairman of the Brixton mosque in south west London, who “issued his warning” two days after Briton Richard Reid appeared in a Boston court. Mr Baker said: “If they have got the likes of Rahim, there are a lot more and we are very concerned about that.” Mr Baker added “Mr Reid may have known another worshipper at the mosque, Zacarias Moussaoui.” He said there was a period at the end of 1998 when the two men attended the Brixton mosque and may have come into contact with each other.

The entire Flight 63 incident now bears all the hallmarks of a fumbled CIA black operation, in this case aided and abetted by its junior subsidiary British MI6, located on the south bank of the River Thames in London. It is no big trick switching someone's shoes for another similar pair either on the aircraft while the passenger is asleep, or earlier in his Parisian hotel room. Then all you have to do is strike a sulphur match, shout: “he's got a bomb”, and your unwitting Patsy is in the bag. The FBI would do well to check the passengers seated in the immediate proximity of Richard Reid on Flight 63.

This claim is not made in ignorance. During 1996 I was invited to travel from Australia to Libya on a diplomatic visa, in order to discuss my fresh evidence in the WPC Yvonne Fletcher case, which proved conclusively that Policewoman Fletcher was killed outside the Libyan Embassy in London in 1984 by shots scientifically backtracked on video and audio to 8 St James Square, a building occupied by two American multinationals and the CIA. That story can be read at http://geocities.com/vialls/yvonnefletcher.html . As will be obvious, The CIA and MI6 did not approve of this trip to Libya and said so discreetly, but I proceeded anyway.

On arrival at Frankfurt in Germany aboard a Lufthansa jumbo, for transfer to a flight bound for Malta and then Libya, I found my shoes had been replaced while I was asleep with a similar (but slightly different) pair. Assuming a mistake but unable to locate anyone wearing my own shoes, I walked to the terminal in my socks for the simple reason I considered wearing second hand shoes unhygenic. As my old credit card records show, I then had to pay $200.00 for a new pair of shoes purchased just outside Frankfurt Airport, at which point I threw my “replacement” shoes from the Jumbo into a garbage bin.

In isolation this incident proves nothing of course, but a precursor tends to. When I joined the Lufthansa flight in Jakarta, the aircraft had a passenger load of about 320 souls, most of them Germans speaking German and returning from holidays in Bali. In what was almost a statistical impossibility, I sat down in my allocated seat, and found myself sitting next to the only other Englishman on the flight, a “jolly nice chap” who owned a travel business in southern England, and whose son “was in the Special Air Services at Hereford [England]”, or so he claimed. At Frankfurt my new chummy friend was first off the plane and I never saw him again. The visiting card that he handed me on the Lufthansa jumbo, later turned out to be false. What a surprise!

Do I believe or fear that my “replacement” shoes contained a thin layer of C-4 between the inner and outer soles, and that I was a make-believe bomb waiting to be arrested? Hell no! But I do believe that the replacement shoes probably contained a thin layer of cannabis resin or opium or cocaine in the same area, and that Maltese customs would have been tipped off in advance about the “drug smuggler”. That would have automatically got me twenty or more years in a Maltese prison, where I would no longer have been even a minor threat to American or British intelligence. Western intelligence agencies are famous for black operations like these, and there are dozens of other documented examples.

Where Flight 63 is concerned, the Agencies effectively killed two birds with one stone. A false connection was established between Arab hijackers and American Airlines, and between Zacarias Moussaoui and American Airlines. Secondly but importantly, fear of flying was reintroduced and reinforced greatly, frightening the public and politicians alike. When frightened, you tend to be far less critical of intelligence agency “advice” about what to do next. The bottom line is that the CIA and MI6 engineered the Flight 63 incident to put themselves firmly back in the driving seat.

Electronically Hijacking the WTC Attack Aircraft

By Joe Vialls, October 2001

On Sept. 10 2001, just 24 hours before the WTC attack, The Washington Times ran an article quoting intelligence sources who described Israel's Mossad as "Wildcard. Ruthless and cunning. Has capability to target US forces and make it look like a Palestinian/Arab act." Moreover, they said, it was generally known in the intelligence community that the Mossad had penetrated every Muslim organization and would have little problem in finding any number of fanatics to carry out a suicide mission in the belief they were serving Allah. Ed.

In the mid-seventies America faced a new and escalating crisis, with US commercial jets being hijacked for geopolitical reasons. Determined to gain the upper hand in this new form of aerial warfare, two American multinationals collaborated with the Defense Advanced Projects Agency (DARPA) on a project designed to facilitate the remote recovery of hijacked American aircraft. Brilliant both in concept and operation, "Home Run" (not its real code name) allowed specialist ground controllers to listen in to cockpit conversations on the target aircraft, then take absolute control of its computerized flight control system by remote means. From that point onwards, regardless of the wishes of the hijackers or flight deck crew, the hijacked aircraft could be recovered and landed automatically at an airport of choice, with no more difficulty than flying a radio-controlled model plane. The engineers had no idea that almost thirty years after its initial design, Home Run's top secret computer codes would be broken, and the system used to facilitate direct ground control of the four aircraft used in the high-profile attacks on New York and Washington on 11th September 2001.

Before moving on to the New York and Washington attacks, we first need to look at the ways in which an aircraft is normally controlled by its pilot, because without this basic knowledge, Home Run would make no sense. In order to control an aircraft in three-dimensional space, the pilot uses the control yoke (joystick) in front of him, rudder pedals under his feet, and a bank of engine throttles located at his side. Without engine thrust the aircraft would not fly at all, so the throttles are largely self explanatory: For more speed or altitude increase throttle, for less speed or altitude decrease throttle.

In order to raise or lower the nose of the aircraft, the pilot pulls or pushes on the control yoke, which in turn raises or lowers the elevators on the horizontal tailplane. To bank the aircraft left or right, the pilot moves the control yoke to the left or right, which in turn operates the ailerons on the outer wings. Lastly, to turn left or right at low speed or “balance” turns at high speed, the pilot presses the left or right rudder pedals as required, which in turn move the rudder on the vertical stabilizer.

Back in the early days of flight, the control yoke and rudder pedals were connected to the various flight control surfaces by thin cables, meaning the pilot had direct physical control over every movement the aircraft made. This was no great problem for an average man flying a small biplane, but as aircraft grew ever bigger, heavier and faster over the years, the loadings on the control yoke and rudder pedals became huge, certainly well beyond the ability of a single pilot to handle unaided.

By the late fifties we were well into the age of hydraulics, where just like the power steering on your automobile, hydraulic rams were placed in line between the pilot’s control cables and each individual control surface. Now when the pilot moved the control yoke, the cables activated sensors, which in turn activated one or more hydraulic rams, which in turn moved one or more control surfaces. For the first time since Bleriot and the Wright brothers, pilots were of necessity being steadily distanced from direct control of their own aircraft.

When the multinationals and DARPA finally came on the scene in the mid-seventies, aircraft systems were even more advanced, with computers controlling onboard autopilots, which in turn were capable of controlling all of the onboard hydraulics. In combination these multiple different functions were now known as the “Flight Control System” or FCS, in turn integrated with sophisticated avionics capable of automatically landing the aircraft in zero visibility conditions. In summary, by the mid-seventies most of the large jets were capable of effectively navigating hundreds of miles and then making automatic landings at a selected airport in zero-zero fog conditions. All of this could be accomplished unaided, but in theory at least, still under the watchful eyes of the flight deck crews.

In order to make Home Run truly effective, it had to be completely integrated with all onboard systems, and this could only be accomplished with a new aircraft design, several of which were on the drawing boards at that time. Under cover of extreme secrecy, the multinationals and DARPA went ahead on this basis and built “back doors” into the new computer designs. There were two very obvious hard requirements at this stage, the first a primary control channel for use in taking over the flight control system and flying the aircraft back to an airfield of choice, and secondly a covert audio channel for monitoring flight deck conversations. Once the primary channel was activated, all aircraft functions came under direct ground control, permanently removing the hijackers and pilots from the control loop.

Remember here, this was not a system designed to “undermine” the authority of the flight crews, but was put in place as a “doomsday” device in the event the hijackers started to shoot passengers or crew members, possibly including the pilots. Using the perfectly reasonable assumption that hijackers only carry a limited number of bullets, and many aircraft nowadays carry in excess of 300 passengers, Home Run could be used to fly all of the survivors to a friendly airport for a safe auto landing. So the system started out in life for the very best of reasons, but finally fell prey to security leaks, and eventually to compromised computer codes. In light of recent high-profile CIA and FBI spying trials, these leaks and compromised codes should come as no great surprise to anyone.

Activating the primary Home Run channel proved to be easy. Most readers will have heard of a “transponder”, prominent in most news reports immediately following the attacks on New York and Washington. Technically a transponder is a combined radio transmitter and receiver which operates automatically, in this case relaying data between the four aircraft and air traffic control on the ground. The signals sent provide a unique “identity” for each aircraft, essential in crowded airspace to avoid mid-air collisions, and equally essential for Home Run controllers trying to lock onto the correct aircraft. Once it has located the correct aircraft, Home Run “piggy backs” a data transmission onto the transponder channel and takes direct control from the ground.

This explains why none of the aircraft sent a special “I have been hijacked” transponder code, despite multiple activation points on all four aircraft. Because the transponder frequency had already been piggy backed by Home Run, transmission of the special hijack code was rendered impossible. This was the first hard proof that the target aircraft had been hijacked electronically from the ground, rather than by [FBI-inspired] motley crews of Arabs toting penknives.

The Home Run listening device on the flight deck utilizes the cockpit microphones that normally feed the Cockpit Voice Recorder (CVR), one of two black boxes armored to withstand heavy impact and thereby later give investigators significant clues to why the aircraft crashed.

However, once hooked into Home Run, the CVRs are bypassed and voice transmissions are no longer recorded on the 30-minute endless loop recording tape. If Home Run is active for more than thirty minutes, there will therefore be no audible data on the Cockpit Voice Recorders. To date, crash investigators have recovered the CVRs from the Pentagon and Pittsburg aircraft, and publicly confirmed that both are completely blank. The only possible reason for this, is data capture by Home Run, providing the final hard proof that the attack aircraft were hijacked electronically from the ground, rather than by “Arab terrorists”.

Many readers might by now be indignant; convinced this is incorrect or misleading information because of “those telephone calls from the hijacked aircraft”. Which telephone calls exactly? There are no records of any such calls, and the emotional claptrap the media fed you in the aftermath of the attack was in all cases third-person. We had the media’s invisible “contact” at an airline who “said” a hostess called to report a hijacking, and we had a priest (?) who “said” he received a call from a man asking him in turn to call his wife and tell her he loved her. Presumably this man would have had his wife’s name filed in his cellphone, and faced with imminent death would have called her direct. The FAA helped out by claiming that it had “overheard” a heated argument from a cockpit where the radio transmit switch had been left in the “on” position. When push came to shove, the FAA was forced to retract, and admit that the mythical argument was not on the tapes at all.

Whether more information will be forthcoming about Home Run is unknown, but nowadays there are large numbers of people apart from the author privy to the basic data. As long ago as the early nineties, a major European flag carrier acquired the information and was seriously alarmed that one of its own aircraft might be “rescued” by the Americans without its authority. Accordingly, this flag carrier completely stripped the American flight control computers out of its entire fleet, and replaced them with a home grown version. These aircraft are now effectively impregnable to penetration by Home Run, but that is more than can be said for the American aircraft fleet. A casual count indicates around 600 aircraft in the USA and elsewhere are still vulnerable and could be used in further attacks at any time, which might help explain why America has lately been bombing the Afghans primarily with bags of wheat. For the first time in US history, American officials appear to be genuinely fearful of future reprisals, and justifiably so with 600 giant bombs parked on the wrong side of their missile defence shield.

It is a “Catch 22” situation. In order to make all of the aircraft safe, the flight control systems would have to be stripped out and replaced, at a cost of billions of dollars the airlines cannot afford because they are going broke. Nor is there enough time. The most innovative anti-hijacking tool in the American arsenal, has now become the biggest known threat to American national security.

For the purpose of public reassurance I would like to publish a complete list of aircraft which cannot be affected by Home Run, but I cannot do so for legal reasons. Any aircraft manufacturer not on the list might feel inclined to sue me for defamation and I can’t afford that. However, there is nothing to stop me publishing my personal choice of aircraft for a flight from, say, Atlanta to Singapore via JFK, Frankfurt, and Kuala Lumpur.

From Atlanta to JFK I would probably travel on a Boeing 737, and connect with a Boeing 777 for the onward flight to Frankfurt. At Frankfurt I would probably board an Airbus A340 for Kuala Lumpur, and finish the journey to Singapore on a DC9 or a Fokker 100. Naturally I might be unlucky enough to pick an aircraft with an intoxicated pilot, or an unrelated mechanical problem, but apart from those minor risks I'd feel pretty safe.

The Falklands Alternative - America's motive for invading Iraq

Copyright Joe Vialls, 1991 – 1995, Edited 16 February 2003
http://homepage.ntlworld.com/steveseymour/.../falklands.html

Although most of this long report was first written in the aftermath of the first Gulf War, it is still valid today in terms of explaining America and Israel's apparent obsession with "Ridding the World" of Iraq's "Evil Dictator" President Saddam Hussein, plus his alleged [and apparently unique] "weapons of mass destruction".

Very few people know or even care that until 1971, all of the oil reserves in Iraq were owned and completely controlled by American and British interests. At that precise point in recent history, the Iraqi people were regarded by the "Western Powers" merely as serfs, who were graciously allowed to keep three cents out of every three dollar barrel of their own Iraqi oil. The balance of US$2.97 per barrel went straight into the New York and London bank accounts of western "investors".

Then suddenly in 1972, the young Saddam Hussein peacefully nationalized the Iraqi Oil Company, and told its American and British employees to recognize this new reality or leave the country. Most decided to leave, and horrified western investors then found "their" oil reserves in Iraq were no longer paying the rent on luxury apartments in Manhattan and Mayfair. >From a Wall Street perspective it was Fidel Castro and Cuba all over again, and the bankers quietly vowed to take revenge on Saddam Hussein for his "reckless insubordination".

As each year rolled by, Hussein ordered that all of Iraq's recovered oil wealth be invested in irrigation, infrastructure, education, medicine, defense and other essentials. Within a decade Iraq became easily the most advanced secular Muslim country in the world, with large numbers of women in the professions, and a free health service that could only be marveled at by less fortunate nations.

Predictably perhaps, Saddam Hussein became a national hero: the man who "Kicked the Americans and British out" and catapulted Iraq into the 20th Century. Even today in 2003, all Iraqi citizens are free to carry loaded automatic weapons on the street, because President Hussein has nothing to fear from his own people.

As recently as last October, an Iraqi woman on a balcony in Baghdad saluted her President as he passed less than fifty yards away, by a firing a three-shot burst from a fully-automatic AK-47 assault rifle up in the air. Saddam Hussein, standing erect and unprotected in an open Jeep, merely smiled and nodded his acknowledgement. If any woman in Washington, London or Canberra had dared to salute President Bush, Prime Minister Blair or Prime Minister Howard in this way, she would have been shot dead immediately by government snipers.

By the late eighties, the western powers decided to take action against Iraq and in particular against the charismatic Saddam Hussein. It was time to lure President Hussein into a trap cunningly laid by Ambassador April Glaspie of the US State Department, and take back “their” oil reserves. Within two years the western media thoroughly demonized Saddam Hussein as the man who “killed his own Kurds at Halabja [he did not], whose troops ruthlessly butchered helpless babies in incubators in Kuwait [they did not], and who collectively terrorized the defenseless Kurds and Shiite Muslims in the south of Iraq [they did not].

For many years the real truth behind these structured western lies was available on the Internet as the original “Falklands Alternative”, which was suddenly hacked and destroyed a few weeks ago, curiously in company with all my work on the sabotage of Air France Concorde 4590. For those interested in why Iraq was invaded in the first Gulf War, and why American and British troops are once again assembling in Kuwait today, here is the original “Falklands Alternative” again, edited only for context and spelling.

“For decades the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) has coveted global domination, not with the consent of the American people but rather by directing the actions of the American President as a child pulls the strings of a limp puppet. The term 'New World Order' was coined back in the late sixties by the CIA, not by a democratically elected leader of the American people. With the collapse of the USSR the CIA saw its chance and pushed for global domination by manipulation of world oil reserves.

Its prime objective of developing the vast but little-known oil reserves in the British dominated Falkland Islands had been frustrated since the early 1980s by oil prices too low to finance expensive Falklands exploration. Intending to 'bounce' oil prices high enough by forcibly reducing Middle East production, all the CIA needed was an excuse, which was miraculously provided in 1990 by President Hussein of Iraq.

Thomas Reeve Pickering, U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations and the Bush Administration's champion for compulsory democracy, cut a dashing figure. Tall and urbane, he looked the perfect statesman as he hurled vitriolic remarks at the countries of the Middle East during 1990 and 1991. There is no doubt that after sustained exposure, most television viewers believed Pickering's carefully structured UN presentations.

Enter `Thomas Reeve Pickering' into any counter-intelligence computer and the machine groans with agony as it struggles to flood the screen with an overwhelming mass of data. Tanzania? Jordan? Washington's war on Nicaragua? Pickering was around for all of them and many more. He was even in El Salvador during the period the CIA supervised the `Death Squads' responsible for the torture, assassination and disappearance of more innocent people than could be counted.

It is possible, though unlikely, that the numbers who died in El Salvador might have exceeded those who died at the hands of the Shah's hated `Savak' secret police in Iran. As with the death squads in El Salvador, Savak had its torture and assassination techniques honed to perfection by the CIA. Back in 1974 Victor Marchetti, formerly an Executive Assistant to the Deputy Director of the CIA, wrote of the `New Order' then being planned at Langley headquarters. He explained in chilling terms why resignation was his only honourable choice:

" And there was a diabolical invention that might be called a mini-cannon" ... "There were a number of uses for the mini-cannon, one of which was demonstrated to us using an old army school bus. It was fastened to the gasoline tank in such a fashion that the incendiary projectile would rupture the tank and fling flaming gasoline the length of the bus interior, incinerating anyone inside. It was my lot to show the rest of the class how easily it could be done. It worked, my God, how it worked. It was, I guess, the moment of truth. What did a busload of burning people have to do with freedom? What right did I have, in the name of democracy and the CIA, to decide that random victims should die? The intellectual game was over. I had to leave. "

Victor Marchetti resigned before the CIA decided to target the Middle East in its attempt to shift primary oil production from the Persian Gulf to the Falkland Islands. However, evidence the CIA maintained its vicious determination to murder random innocent victims by the thousand was soon to be provided in the Middle East with sickening massacres in both Iraq and Kuwait.

The CIA's first priority was `putting men on the ground' in the Middle East as intelligence operatives. Despite the sophistication of reconnaissance satellites there was no substitute for human beings capable of infiltrating and undermining foreign sovereign governments: the Agency's normal method of operation.

>From the outset the CIA recognised two countries in particular would be very difficult to undermine easily: Iraq and Libya. The Agency infiltrated the Kurdish population in the north of Iraq but failed to gain the influence it needed. Sceptical readers should note that all Kurds inside Iraq are now known as `Freedom Fighters' while their brethren north of the border in NATO Turkey are labeled `Terrorists'.

The governments of Iraq and Libya managed to foil dozens of CIA attempts aimed not only at infiltration but also assassination of the Iraqi and Libyan heads of state. One CIA report written in 1985 referred to a failed attempt to murder Colonel Al Qadhafi, stating the hired killers were `inefficient'. Ex. CIA Deputy Director John McMahon echoed the criticism.

If Middle East oil production was to be drastically reduced to increase world oil prices to the point where the Falklands oil reserves could be exploited, the timing of the CIA's Gulf "war" was critical. Equally critical was the need for large numbers of sneak bombing attacks on Middle East civilians in order to shatter public morale as quickly as possible.

On 12 July 1990 during a small ceremony at the Lockheed `Skunk Works' in California, the last of 59 deadly F117A stealth bombers was handed over to its new owners: the 37th Tactical Fighter Wing, normally hidden deep in the remote Nevada desert at its secret `black' Tonopah air base.

Though the F117A was labeled the "Stealth Fighter" in order to deceive American taxpayers, it was no such thing. The F117A was designed using low-visibility data provided by the CIA as a black project killing-machine capable only of slaughtering under the cloak of darkness, very much in the tradition of assassins of old. Nor was the F117A very accurate: during the only operational mission before the Gulf debacle, two stealth bombers attacked an army barracks in Panama where both missed their targets completely. There would be many more `misses' in the densely populated city of Baghdad.

Three weeks after the last stealth bomber flew into Tonopah, Iraqi forces invaded Kuwait and the 37th Tactical Fighter Wing was given a new commander, Colonel Alton Whitley. Within four hours of Whitley taking command the stealth bombers were ordered to fly to Saudi Arabia via Langley air force base in Virginia under cover of darkness. The United Nations had not yet responded to the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait, but the stealth bombers were already being positioned for their attack runs.

The CIA was well aware of President Hussein's armed forces massing to the north of the Kuwaiti border during 1990. Despite the fact it had many days of advance warning the CIA failed to tell the Kuwaiti government of the forthcoming attack. With all the sophisticated communications at its disposal it was a truly damning omission that escaped western media attention, pointing directly at CIA manipulation of the invasion itself.

Millions of television viewers watched the most damning evidence of CIA premeditation but most failed to recognize it. though European troops were rushed to the Gulf in out-of-date ill-fitting desert camouflage there was no such problem for the US forces. Despite the fact America has never fought a large-scale desert campaign, nearly a quarter of a million US troops arrived in Saudi Arabia wearing well fitting post-Vietnam pattern desert camouflage. Someone somewhere had done a vast amount of covert advance planning and purchasing for the desert campaign, because no nation of earth keeps a quarter million uniforms on hand for every different climate zone in the world.

From that point forward white became black and black became white - courtesy of the CIA `Psychological & Paramilitary Staff' unit operating under the direction of the Deputy Director Plans (DDP). For decades the unit has specialized in deception and abuse at the psychological level, fitting it perfectly for the role of turning both President Hussein and Colonel Al Qadhafi into "non-democratic dictators" in the eyes of the west.

The most memorable (and successful) of the ploys used was to turn President Hussein into the man who `gassed his own Kurds' at Halabja. The same devastating images of dead women and children lying in the streets were shown thousands of times on all western television channels, placing President Hussein well beyond western `rehabilitation' under any circumstances.

Unfortunately the entire exercise was a complete lie. The CIA knew very well that a February 1990 US Army War College report concluded Iraq was not responsible for the Halabja attack, stating it was the Iranian bombardment that had actually killed the Kurds.' The War College findings were hardly surprising: the Kurdish people of Halabja were killed by a war gas known as "Phosgene" used by the Iranians but not the Iraqis. Though Iraq did use war gas on the battlefield it was "Mustard", an entirely different chemical which causes death in a visibly different way, enabling US Army chemical warfare experts to easily identify the attack as Iranian in origin.

Though many readers may say "so what?" the distinction is important in identifying CIA media techniques used to deliberately distort the perception of the western public. When the US Administration was looking for an excuse to use ground forces to finish off the people in Kuwait, the CIA flashed a story round the world about Iraqi soldiers ripping new-born Kuwaiti babies out of their incubators and throwing them on the floor.

As with the Kurds of Halabja the story was proved totally false, though not before US tanks had buried 8,000 Iraqi soldiers alive in their bunkers and destroyed half the ground installations in Kuwait and southern Iraq. Disinformation is critically important to the CIA, for without it the Agency would be unable to whip up sufficient public outrage to justify its savage attacks.

For an alert western public there were other indications that neither President Hussein or Colonel Al Qadhafi were dictators who habitually murdered their own citizens. If that was the case there would be no point in both of them training huge numbers of doctors, for doctors cure people - they do not kill. While Saudi Arabia and Great Britain (two of the coalition partners) have only one doctor for every 4,321 and 4,632 people respectively, Iraq has one doctor for every 2,303. Colonel Al Qadhafi has trained a stunning one doctor for every 757 people. Facts like these were considered counterproductive to the CIA's aims and were ruthlessly suppressed.

Boosted by CIA lies and disinformation the Bush Administration pushed with indecent haste for military action against President Hussein. After successfully applying pressure to the United Nations Security Council, the Bush Administration ordered its stealth bombers to attack the capital of Iraq instead of the forces occupying Kuwait.

Under cover of darkness during the night of 16-17 January 1991 the first F117As flew out of Khamis Mushait in southern Saudi Arabia to start the killing in Baghdad. The `black' stealth bombers were to fly a total of 1,271 missions in less than six weeks, dropping more than five million pounds of bombs on populated areas.
The total bombardment was awesome and sickening: 88,000 tons of bombs, 97% of which flew wide of their targets, ripping more than 70,000 innocent women and children to bloody shreds and maiming countless thousands more. Sadly, the dead and maimed women and children were only a sideshow for the primary CIA objective of manipulating world oil reserves.

Around 16 February 1991 American AV8B Harrier ground-attack jets started flying with wing-mounted napalm pods. Less than a week later on 22 February President Bush accused Iraqi forces of lighting 140+ oil wells in Kuwait. If the Iraqi forces had done so they managed it while under continual attack by about 2,500 coalition aircraft: an act of crass stupidity or outstanding bravery in the face of stupefying American firepower.

Somehow the western media missed the point that napalm burns at a temperature high enough to melt the side-pipes on oil wellheads and is capable of setting fire to the crude oil which then blasts out under high pressure. Most of the public also remained unaware that CIA pilots are cross-trained to fly a large variety of both military and civilian aircraft.

During this precise period Kuwaiti Air Force pilots were grounded in Saudi Arabia on the orders of the American Commander in Chief. It is left to the reader to speculate why the U.S. high command ensured that no native Kuwaiti pilot be allowed to fly over his own oil fields during this specific phase of the operation.

Within 24 hours of the Bush accusation the Iraqi government denied setting fire to the oil wells and urgently called on the United Nations Security Council to send a team to "Investigate the destruction of non-military installations in Kuwait": a curious response from the Iraqi government if it was guilty of the alleged crime. The American-dominated Security Council dismissed the request out of hand.

When the Iraqis retreated from Kuwait, American forces violated mutually agreed cease-fire terms by shooting more people in the back with radioactive 30mm Depleted Uranium (DU) shells than Joe Stalin could have imagined in his most vivid dream. Unluckily for its human targets, the CIA was out to prove Joe Stalin a mere simpleton with a strictly limited imagination.

American Fairchild A10 `Thunderbolt II' ground-attack jets criss-crossed the highways of death in Kuwait spitting radioactive 30mm shells at the rate of 4,200 per minute per aircraft. Anyone left alive after the strafing runs, the CIA reasoned, would probably die a terrible death much later from the effects of toxic uranium poisoning. Over time the same highly-toxic radioactive waste would slowly kill large numbers of the civilian population in both Iraq and Kuwait. Though larger 120mm DU shells were used by battle tanks, the US administration claims "only" 5,000 of the 120mm version were fired.

There is only one gun capable of firing the special high-velocity radioactive 30mm DU shells: the GAU-8A seven-barrel Avenger Gatling cannon, specially designed for the Thunderbolt. Even at a range of two miles the 30mm DU shells are known to be travelling at almost one mile per second, hitting each target with almost half a million foot-pounds of energy. With impact forces that high, very few 30mm DUs ricocheted and stayed in one piece, most exploding into toxic uranium dust which was strewn far and wide across the land.

The awesome Avenger Gatling is capable of firing Depleted Uranium at the rate of nearly 12 tonnes per minute per gun. Small wonder the US Administration remains acutely anxious the total number of 30mm DU shells fired should remain `Classified'.

{Authors note 04/94: By January 1994 the total number of 30-mm DU rounds fired from the air by A10s became common knowledge. In all, 980,000 rounds were expended during the Gulf War, littering Kuwait and southern Iraq with 2,000 tonnes of nuclear waste.}

Shortly after driving the Iraqi forces out of Kuwait the American government handed total control of Kuwaiti oil operations to Bechtel Corporation: an American multinational giant originally founded by CIA Deputy Director John McMahone. Former Bechtel corporate presidents and vice presidents include George Schultz and Caspar Weinberger. It was an odd choice. Bechtel excels chiefly in the area of civil construction. Unfortunately the problem it faced was `upstream' oil technology involving oil well blowouts raging at up to 11,000 p.s.i.

By June 1991 the co-ordinator of the well control teams, T.B. O'Brien of Midland, Texas, complained of Bechtel slowing down the rate of damage control by going through a long slow bidding process for equipment that could be had "off the shelf" in Dubai, a short distance away down the Persian Gulf. " In the meantime, about US$40 million to US$50 million in oil burns a day, but nobody looks at that," Mr. O'Brien told the author, "These things are not an emergency to them."

After months of increasing pressure from world environmentalists about the smoke then circling the globe at high altitude there was an apparent acceleration in well control efforts. On 6 November 1991 Sheikh Jabir-al'Ahmad al-Jabir al Sabah was shown on television throwing a lever that put out the last of the fires which had raged since February. It was a public relations masterpiece and most world environmentalists immediately stopped worrying about possible global environmental effects. They were wrong to stop worrying, for their worst nightmares are probably yet to come in the Falklands.

During late 1981 an obscure document was circulated around the senior staff of a large British multinational oil company. The data it contained was staggering and details swiftly leaked. In a recently completed comprehensive seismic survey of the Falkland Islands continental shelf, realistic estimates indicated oil reserves more than ten times larger than those in Saudi Arabia. For anyone with the wealth to exploit the reserves, the magnitude of the prize was almost beyond comprehension.

That the seismic was accurate was proved beyond doubt by the mid 1980s,by which time Argentina had proven reserves of more than four billion barrels on its Patagonian coast directly opposite the Falkland Islands. With the continent shelving downwards out to sea, calculations indicated Falkland Islands reserves easily as massive as those predicted in the 1981 document.

During 1982 many Britons wondered aloud at the sheer compassion of their government, which sent an entire battle fleet to evict the Argentines who, it was rumoured, were indecently assaulting a few hundred Falklands sheep farmers. It was democracy at its best and countless thousands of patriotic Britons cheered the QEII as she cleared the harbour at Southampton laden with troops for the fight in the South Atlantic.

Democracy? The British government had probably forgotten the sheep farmers a generation before, but it knew about the oil reserves, as did the Argentines. Those oilmen familiar with the startling contents of the seismic report watched the display of patriotic fervour with stunned amazement. Did the British public really believe a massive battle fleet was being sent to rescue a few thousand sheep, and the Falklands' sagging economy?

The British oil multinational was excited at the prospect of total oil self-sufficiency and the resulting ability to bypass the Middle East completely. But what if the nations of the Middle East tried to compete? The shorter shipping distance from the Persian Gulf to most world markets would still undermine prices. Clearly strategic controls had to be placed on the Middle East first.

The problems the British multinational faced was twofold: the Falklands were so far away it could never hope to explore with-out American multinational assistance. Second, the availability of Middle East crude at low prices would make exploration a financial impossibility. Despite the predictions of some analysts during 1981 that crude oil prices might rise as high as $80 per barrel by 1985, there was no way of telling if those predictions would become reality. (By 1985 oil prices had in fact slumped dramatically to $10 per barrel, well below the $28 minimum needed for Falklands exploration.)

Proof the Arab nations had `noticed' the Falklands survey was provided in 1982 when OPEC suddenly kicked the bottom out of the price of crude oil. For nearly ten years following the famous price-hike of 1973, western oil multinationals had been using their windfall to build many more oil rigs to drill more and more wells. So frantic was the activity that the total number of rigs drilling under western multinational control rose from around 1,500 in 1973, to just over 4,600 by late 1981.

Disaster swiftly followed the 1982 price collapse with more than 3,000 western drilling rigs suddenly idle due to a lack of funds. In other words, the number of active drilling rigs went into reverse gear, dropping from 4,600+ down to 1,600 in less than nine months from late 1982 to mid-1983. For the oil industry it was a total nightmare with drilling contractors going broke overnight, while hundreds of multimillion-dollar oil rigs sat quietly rusting in the deserts and mountains.

If evidence was ever needed proving the size (and danger) of the Falklands reserves, this was it: the nations of the Middle East flooding world markets with crude oil from massive over-production, and halving their own revenues in order to halt western moves to exploit the massive South Atlantic oil fields. The size of the catastrophe for the western oil multinationals was barely noticed by the public, who responded with ill-concealed glee to cheaper petrol prices at the pumps.

Vast oil reserves in the western hemisphere were not simply tempting but becoming a strategic imperative in the minds of those who were frustrated by their inability to raise world oil prices. Reducing Middle East production significantly was the only way to achieve the objective but how could it possibly be done? After all, the Arab countries might object to the controls placed upon them. Personnel at CIA headquarters in Langley went to work eagerly searching for a solution.

And so it was that a mere ten years after the Falklands seismic survey of 1981, weary firefighters walked away from hundreds of smoking wellheads, leaving behind them two shattered Arab oil producing nations: Kuwait and Iraq. Not bad for a first strike.

Combined Arab output before the Iraqi slaughter began was about 13.17 million barrels per day, excluding Iran. Within 40 days both Kuwait and Iraq had stopped production completely, theoretically reducing the daily output by 4.36 million barrels, or 33% of balanced Arab oil output.

The world barely noticed as Saudi Arabia took up the slack and increased output to compensate for lost Kuwaiti and Iraqi pro-duction capability. The CIA strategic planners noticed though. What they had done was reduce the number of Arab producing nations by two. If they could also eliminate Libya there would be another fall of 1.36 million barrels per day, creating a further drop in balanced Arab oil output equalling 10.3%. With all three countries wiped-out the total drop would be more than 43% - nearly half of the total. The three other Arab producing countries considered to be `friendly' to the U.S. administration could be left for treatment at a later date, as could Iran.

The masses of environmental scientists who swarmed to the Gulf to examine the carnage were skillfully shown slick damage in the Gulf, mines on the beach at Kuwait, smoke in the sky and some low pressure blowouts in the Burgan field. None, including Greenpeace, was allowed to stray into the real problem areas to the north of Kuwait city, or the areas of southern Iraq subjected to carpet-bombing by American B52 heavy bombers from Diego Garcia in the Indian Ocean.

Blowout pressures in the north were up to ten times as high as those in Burgan field, a very good reason for keeping unwanted spectators away. John McMahone's old company, Bechtel, subtly directed the flow of traffic away from the `dangerous' areas. Huge lakes of crude oil no longer burning to atmosphere in-creased in size to the point where some roads were impassable.

Within days of Sheikh Jabir-al'Ahmad al-Jabir al Sabah throwing the lever that `capped' the last of the burning wells, the British World Conservation Monitoring Centre commented on the blowing wells the media cameras somehow missed: "Burning wells cause less pollution damage than non-burning gushers."

It was a factual statement, entirely accurate but understating the case. When an oil well blows out the primary task is to stop the flow of oil from the underground reservoir. Most wells that blow out but fail to light spontaneously are lit as quickly as possible by well-control specialists, in order to keep the volatile oil and explosive gas away from workers in the immediate area. Failure to light the well swiftly can lead to a situation where lakes of oil entrained with explosive gas pose a deadly risk for the well control specialists themselves.

How were the specialists to control rogue wells surrounded by huge oil lakes, growing larger all the time as they were continually fed with more underground oil & gas? The British New Scientist of 9 November 1991 painted a grim picture of the massive problem the environmentalists had chosen to forget:

"The lakes vary in size and depth but are usually no more than a metre deep. In the northern oilfields, small lakes have run together to form rivers that stretch for many kilometres." Horrifying stuff and it got worse. Middle East contacts advised that one of the lakes measured about 8 kilometres by 5 but was `only' about a metre deep. Only? The capacity of that lake alone to a depth of one metre is 230 million barrels.

How many lakes are left, what is their combined capacity and how many rogue wells are still feeding them? Alas, the CIA and NSA are being coy and sitting on the satellite images, so details may be withheld until a complete cure is impossible. One thing is certain: the western public will never be told the truth.

From the CIA's viewpoint Kuwait and Iraq were oil cripples with savage sanctions `punishing' the entire civilian population of Iraq by slowly starving women and children to death while deadly toxic uranium dust worked even more slowly in the south of Iraq and in Kuwait. Put simply the CIA was responsible for the clearest case of genocide since Pol Pot butchered more than a million unarmed civilians in Cambodia during the 1970s.

Next the CIA turned the United Nations Security Council through about five points of the compass and pointed it at Libya. The third card in the deck was scheduled to fall before the November American presidential election. That way there would be a double bonus with decreased Arab production and more `gung-ho' votes for the hawkish extremists. President Bush was starting to need votes badly. During the U.S. slaughter of 70,000 innocent Iraqi women and children his popularity rating rose as high as 90%, but the glitter and glory was fast wearing off as decent Americans became aware of the tragic events in the Middle East.

Once again the tall urbane Thomas Reeve Pickering went about his job with astonishing vigour, drumming up support for full blown sanctions after failing to convince Libya that it should illegally hand over its citizens for a `fair' trial in America or Scotland on the accusation of bombing Pan Am 103. Seemingly the western intelligence agencies had suddenly found critical evidence that Libya, rather than new coalition partner Syria, was responsible for the outrage. The Security Council was stretching the publics' imagination to breaking point.

In its haste, the Security Council completely ignored such trifling matters and pressed ahead with its charges against Libya. Once again using the electronic media to maximum effect Libya was slowly but surely turned into a `guilty terrorist state' in the eyes of the television viewers. No matter the entirely correct procedures that Libya used to respond in terms of international law, the Security Council was going to `punish' the country and its leader, just as the U.S. had in 1986 on a trumped-up charge when it bombed Tripoli and Benghazi, leaving trails of murdered women and children strewn across both cities.

Argentina warns UK it 'shouldn't be complacent' adding it will defend its sovereignty as Falklands row escalates

Argentina has warned Britain it 'shouldn't be complacent' and that it would defend its sovereignty in the territorial dispute off the Falkland Islands.

However, Buenos Aires insisted it did did not mean a repeat of the 1982 Falklands war. The South American country has said it will take its dispute over plans by UK firms to explore oil off the islands to the United Nations.

Argentine Foreign Minister Jorge Taiana is to meet Secretary General Ban Ki-moon in New York next Wednesday.

The Foreign Office said it was watching the situation 'closely' but insisting that the seas around the Falklands were controlled by island authorities.

'We have no doubt about our sovereignty over the Falkland Islands and we're clear that the Falkland Islands government is entitled to develop a hydrocarbons industry within its waters,' junior minister Chris Bryant.

Aircraft: Lynx MK 8 helicopters

'The Falkland Islands territorial waters are controlled by the Islands' authorities. We remain focused on supporting the Falkland Islands government in developing legitimate business in its territory.'

A navy warship was today on patrol off the Falkland Islands in the midst of a diplomatic row between Argentina and Britain over the disputed territory.

Type 2 destroyer HMS York is spearheading the British presence in the Falklands as the row over oilfield drilling due to begin next week deepens.

The Ministry of Defence denied reports today that the York was sent to the region as a deterrent to Argentina, which this week asserted its control over shipping in the region.

It arrived in the waters off the islands as Argentina warned it would take 'adequate measures' to stop British oil exploration there.

Buenos Aires insisted it did did not mean a repeat of the 1982 Falklands war - but warned London that it 'shouldn't be complacent', and said it would defend its sovereignty.

Refuting claims that appeared in The Sun, the MoD said that the York was replacing another ship in the region during a routine rotation.

The newspaper claimed today that the ship was sent as a 'deterrent'.

But the MoD said the UK's existing 'deterrence' was not being increased and UK force levels were being maintained.

The Sun also reported that survey vessel HMS Scott and oil supply tanker RFA Wave Ruler were en route to the islands.

An MoD spokesman said the additional frigates were relieving other vessels and completely routine.

He added: 'The Government is fully committed to the South Atlantic Overseas Territories which include the Falkland Islands.

'A deterrence force is maintained on the Islands. That deterrence force comprises a wide range of land, air and maritime assets which collectively maintain our defence posture.

'We have a permanent presence in the South Atlantic including one frigate/destroyer, a patrol vessel, a survey ship and a replenishment vessel. We also have 1,076 service personnel on land.'

A senior Navy source reportedly said the ship would 'discourage the Argentines from trying anything with our shipping.'

'If they do, the Navy are there to stop them.'

Angry at Britain's effort to start oil and gas exploration off the islands' waters, Argentina announced on Tuesday that all ships sailing to the islands must hold a government permit.

'Any boat that wants to travel between ports on the Argentine mainland to the Islas Malvinas, South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands...must first ask for permission,' Cabinet chief Anibal Fernandez said.

The announcement means Argentina will be able to control all traffic from South America towards the islands, including vessels carrying drilling equipment and an oil rig due to begin exploration by early next year.

Britain sought to 'unilaterally and illegitimately exploit natural reserves that belong to Argentina, and Argentina will take adequate measures to defend its interests and its rights,' said Deputy Foreign Minister Victorio Taccetti.

Argentine Foreign Minister Jorge Taiana will meet Secretary General Ban Ki-moon at the UN headquarters in New York next Wednesday to protest Britain's plans, a ministry source told AFP on condition of anonymity.

The Foreign Office shrugged off the demand yesterday, insisting that the seas around the Falklands were controlled by island authorities and would not be affected by the decree.

The Foreign Office said it was watching the situation 'closely'

'We have no doubt about our sovereignty over the Falkland Islands and we're clear that the Falkland Islands government is entitled to develop a hydrocarbons industry within its waters,' junior minister Chris Bryant told the AFP.

'The Falkland Islands territorial waters are controlled by the Islands' authorities. We remain focussed on supporting the Falkland Islands government in developing legitimate business in its territory.'

Several British companies are poised to begin exploration using an offshore rig, while Desire Petroleum has licensed six areas where it predicts 3.5 billion barrels of oil and nine trillion cubic feet of natural gas can be recovered.

As the issue escalated, Sir Nicholas Winterton, the chairman of the all-party Falklands group, said he would seek a meeting with senior officials at the Foreign Office when Parliament returned from recess next week.

He dismissed Ms Fernandez's decree as 'pathetic and useless' as Argentina had no jurisdiction over the seas around the Falklands.

Fuel wars: The contracts to drill for oil around the Islands have been awarded. This map, published by Falkland Oil and Gas Ltd, shows the areas secured by each company

And he stressed that both the Government and Conservative opposition remain committed to British sovereignty over the islands and the principle of self-determination for their inhabitants.

'The Argentinians are again indulging in hostile behaviour - albeit at this stage only in words - against a friendly neighbour, the Falklands,' said Sir Nicholas.

'I believe they are doing so for internal purposes and that it will not affect the Falkland Islands at all.

'All they are trying to do is impede the economic progress of the Falkland Islands, because of course the encouragement of hydrocarbon exploration in the area is an important part of achieving a sustainable future for the islands.

'I don't think one wants to exacerbate what is already a difficult situation, but clearly it is important that the Foreign Office indicates that they believe that this decree has no jurisdiction over international waters.'

The Foreign Office said the Britain was ready to co-operate with Argentina on South Atlantic issues and was working to develop relations between the two countries.

'Argentina and the UK are important partners,' said the Foreign Office spokesman.

"We have a close and productive relationship on a range of bilateral and multilateral issues, including the global economic situation (particularly in the G20), human rights, climate change, sustainable development and counter-proliferation.

"And we want, and have offered, to co-operate on South Atlantic issues. We will work to develop this relationship further."

The South American country still claims sovereignty over the archipelago nearly three decades after the end of the Falklands War in which more than 1,000 people died.

Simmering tensions boiled over earlier this month when Britain announced plans to begin offshore exploration drilling near the remote islands.

Geologists estimate there are up to 60 billions of barrels of oil in the seabed near the Falklands and a British company, Desire Petroleum, is due to begin drilling 100 miles north of the islands before the end of the month.

outsider - February 18, 2010 12:08 PM (GMT)

This may also explain why there are 60 - 70 Oil Tankers parked off the UK coast full of oil. These tankers will be needed to transport oil from the Falklands to the UK and Europe.

outsider - February 18, 2010 01:29 PM (GMT)

I'm wondering if the UK will use the threat of military conflict with Argentina as an excuse to withdraw their ships from the Persian Gulf & Middle East just before the Persian Gulf gets blown to hell.

We're all about to get Falked. :blink:

CYPHA - February 18, 2010 09:32 PM (GMT)

Very useful info from Vialls, highlighting the media lies and Saddam's popularity and much more. Thank you!

Falklands... yes, important but not the major issue for us, surely? We know the Near and Mid Eastern Crusades are not really about oil... that's just a handy figleaf for the real reason... The Endgame of Satanic sacrifice and slavery. We Europeans have had over a thousand years of apocalyptic indoctrination. Now it is coming to a head. The Borg are going for the Final Battle win.
Why do the b@stards manage to kill so many birds with one stone? It's spooky.

I think Joe was sincere but misguided. He could have been an expendable asset of course but not necessarily consciously (MK MPD is rife). He certainly caters to conspiracy minded but not too radical lefty thinkers who will be happy blaming Zionism and "the West".

However it was very deceptively wrong on major issues of course.

Ignores Rome. Blames Zionist Jews and Masons.

Ignores the occultic basis of it all.

Fails to note lack of real national sovereignty, owing to sec soc and mil intel penetration and bankster/corporate capitalism. Britain this, America that, the Arabs the other. Only fools still believe NationState power. As we know here, it's a Hellish Pyramid Scheme now, enforced by Jesuit lucre carrot n terror stick. The so-called (by co-adjutor Griffin) "Rothschild Formula" of financial and military war also works.What Vialls and more mainstream commentators miss is that there is a trillionaire Elite who don't care if corporations and millionaire peons go bust. That would be like Queen Elizabeth 1 crying because some of her pirate ships got sunk while she grabbed the Spanish Gold and beat the Armada. Absurd to think the Elite care about acceptable losses when they are strategically winning according to plan.

Fails to note sec soc allegiances of Saddam H. and Qaddafi and their Roman control.
Qaddaffi never stopped dealing oil with the West as far as I know.

Fails to use his supposed mil int nous to see that no smart operator needs to invade a country just to get a regime change. The jesuitical techniques of psyops and murder work fine. If one leader won't play ball you can kill him and his successors until you get one who will.
The CIA is not as incompetent as the media and Vialls pretend. Castro, Qaddafi and Hussein would not have lasted one year if they sent "Manchurian Candidate" suicide squads in or simply subverted a military general with presidential access (threatening his children with cancer-causing nanotech/viruses/mycoplasmas or maser attack seems easy enough: "kill him or we won't give you the antidote/cure".). He used a lot of doubles but that is not foolproof against ones own top heirarchy.

Vialls ignores that Saddam was put in power by the CIA.

I find it very hard to believe that either Saddam or Qaddafi are "good guys". The "Illuminati" control in the late 20th Century is far too strong. IF they were they would have been nipped in the bud. Damn, you can see the evil in qaddafi's face.

Standard CIA M.O. is to have blackmail on any incoming president: pedo pics are a favourite. Tony Blair are probably a good example. His priest mentor got done for molestation. Somehow the press missed the chance to cast an eye on his "education".
It is/was normal in some tribes for Islam to be initiated into boys by the "kundalini" route, OTO style.
While checking that I found http://aangirfan.blogspot.com/2010/02/tony...-abusers.html.. good info on pedos, also http://aangirfan.blogspot.com/2010/01/isla...as-british.html.

Rome can afford to play these games. They have much in hand, unfortunately.

Damn, 88,000 tonnes of bombs. Sickening. 88 = 16 (Tower) = 7. A complete shafting in the dark.

Depleted Uranium. A lot of fuss is made and logically so but I don't see that many increased cancers and deformed babies. Is it censored? Has anyone got any data on the increased rates? If they were going to move back to Canaan and Babylon you would have thought the issue would worry them. Weird. Thoughts?

I'm from Argentina (who always was pro-germanic) and i can say that this is true.
The Anglo-American world power needs the resources of the Malvinas/Falkland Islands, becouse in geopolitics all island are importants: Malta, Chipre, Cuba, Haiti, Corcega, Sicily, etc.

Today (it's seems to me) that are reasons to believe that the Jesuit Order and the Kirchner's presidents are involved in a pseudo-diplomatic secret war.

http://www.lagaceta.com.ar/nota/364140/Arg..._Bergoglio.html

""BUENOS AIRES .- The family of former President Néstor Kirchner last night rejected the spiritual assistance that sent the Cardinal Jorge Bergoglio, moments before the former president was undergoing surgery. The owner of the Episcopal Conference of Argentina (CEA) decided that the priest Juan Torrella give him the anointing of the sick to the national deputy.

The primate was worried personally about the health of former president and religious authorized to approach the sanatorium De los Arcos, in the federal capital, where the surgery took shape because of an obstruction of the right carotid artery.

Torrella is a priest of the Archdiocese of Buenos Aires and serves as episcopal vicar for education. After the family refused the aid, withdrew from the hospital. "I came to give comfort. This sacrament is to bring strength and religious assistance who goes through a moment like this," he said, adding that "everyone over 59 years is entitled to receive this sacrament." (NA)""

Maybe the Jesuit wanted to poison him...

One thing is sure: Jorge Mario Cardenal Bergoglio was the principal guilty of the process by which my country became ruled by a military junta after the coup in 1976. He was the Provincial of the Order of the Jesuits to Argentina from 1973 to 1979. Then the militars gave the Malvinas/Falkland Islands to the British.

This militars was trained in USA in the School of the Americas since 2001 renamed Institute for Hemispheric Security Cooperation. (Note the Templar cross in his coat of arms)

One of the members of the militar junta and trained by the School of the Americas was Emilio Eduardo Massera... Massera's name was found on the list of 963 members that the Italian police in 1981 to investigate the actions of the masonic lodge Propaganda 2, which had also been members Domingo Peron, Jose Manuel Guinazu, Jose Lopez Rega [the creator of the terrosirt group sponsored by the Argentinian state the "triple A" (AAA)]. The lodge has since been ruled illegal by the Italian government and allegedly dissolved, was headed by Licio Gelli, a former operator of Mussolini during World War II then commissioned by the CIA to maintain a clandestine network of anti-communist operations; Gelli would have known to Massera through Juan Domingo Peron. In return, would have facilitated Massera relations with the Vatican and the United States.

We were betrayed...
Evita Peron, was granted-in 1950 - the insignia of the Grand Cross of Merit with Banda of the Sovereign Military Order by the Grand Master of the Order of Malta, Count du Hamel Brevil.

In fact, the "president" was a puppet of Bergoglio (which still today is the trully president of Argentina) and Kissinger.

Kissinger approved Argentinian 'dirty war'

Falkland Islands officials say oil drilling to go ahead

The Ocean Guardian left the Cromarty Firth in November

Drilling off the coast of the Falkland Islands will begin next week despite strong opposition from Argentina, the UK territory's government has insisted.

Argentina has brought in controls on what it says are its waters around the islands over UK plans for oil drilling.

The Falklands Legislative Assembly said that the restrictions were "no surprise" but promised that exploration would "commence as planned".

An oil rig from the UK is due to arrive in the Falklands later.

'Legitimate business'

The rig, the Ocean Guardian, has been travelling from Invergordon in the Cromarty Firth since November.

Owner Desire Petroleum said its rig "has not gone anywhere near Argentine waters", and it had therefore not sought permission from the Argentine government.

Argentina has threatened to take "adequate measures" to stop British oil exploration in contested waters around the islands and has announced that boats sailing from its ports to the Falklands will need a permit.

But in a statement, the assembly said it had "every right" to develop "legitimate business" in hydrocarbons.

Describing the controls introduced by Argentina, it added: "This is a move by Argentina to try and disrupt the oil drilling due to start early next week.

"It is no surprise to anyone that they are behaving in this way, but it is nonetheless disappointing when they do."

The statement said that "all the supplies the industry needs are located here in the islands" and drilling would begin as planned next week, "weather permitting".

Desire Petroleum said the Ocean Guardian was due to arrive in Falklands waters late on Friday afternoon UK time.

It will be tethered about 60 miles off the islands over the weekend before drilling begins on Sunday.

It added that it had not put any additional security measures in place above what was normal for a "routine" operation.

Foreign Secretary David Miliband has said all UK oil exploration in the area was "completely in accordance with international law".

On Thursday, Prime Minister Gordon Brown said the government had "made all the preparations that are necessary to make sure the Falkland islanders are properly protected."

A Ministry of Defence spokesman said the government was "fully committed" to the Falklands, adding: "A deterrence force is maintained on the islands."

After Argentina's invasion of the Falklands in 1982, a UK taskforce seized back control in a short war that claimed the lives of 649 Argentine and 255 British service personnel.

Buenos Aires claims sovereignty over the Falkland Islands, which it calls Islas Malvinas.

It has previously threatened that any company exploring for oil and gas in the waters around the territory will not be allowed to operate in Argentina.
Geologists say the seabed around the Falklands has substantial oil reserves

On Tuesday, Argentine President Cristina Fernandez signed a decree requiring all vessels travelling between Argentina and the islands, or those wanting to cross what Argentina says are its territorial waters en route to the Falklands, to seek prior permission.

Last week, a ship carrying drilling equipment was detained by Argentine officials.

Geologists say the ocean bed surrounding the Falklands could contain rich energy reserves.

Last year, Argentina submitted a claim to the United Nations for a vast expanse of ocean, based on research into the extent of the continental shelf, stretching to the Antarctic and including the island chains governed by Britain.

It is due to raise the issue at the UN next week.

The waters surrounding the disputed islands are considered by the UK to be part of the British Overseas Territories.

But Buenos Aires believes the UK is illegally occupying the Falklands, South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands.

Falkland Islands: First it was sovereignty, now it's oil

Ministry of Defence steps up surveillance of Argentinian navy as tensions escalate over black gold

By Kim Sengupta, Defence Correspondent
Thursday, 18 February 2010
http://www.independent.co.uk/news/uk/home-...il-1903003.html

The British military and the Foreign Office are stepping up surveillance of Argentinian naval action following the threat from Buenos Aires to blockade the Falkland Islands.

The imminent arrival of a British company's oil rig in the area is an immediate source of friction between the two countries, which has reignited 28 years after the war with the discovery of rich petroleum and gas reserves around the islands.

The Argentinian government has declared that it was taking control of all shipping between its coastline and the disputed islands it calls Islas Malvinas and the adjoining South Georgia, a claim promptly rejected by the UK.

Buenos Aires has demanded that the Falklands should suspend oil exploration on the seabed, which is estimated to contain 60 billion barrels of oil – indicating that it has reserves on the scale of the North Sea. Last week Argentina detained a supply ship, the Thor Leader, which was transporting pipes to the islands from an Argentinian port.

The oil rig, the Ocean Guardian, is said to have been "buzzed" by Argentinian warplanes on its way to the South Atlantic, although other reports say that it may have been coastguard aircraft which was involved. Anibal Fernandez, the chef de cabinet in Buenos Aireas, said: "Any boat that wants to travel between ports on the Argentinian mainland to the Islas Malvinas, South Georgia and the South Sandwich islands? must first ask for permission from the Argentinian government."

Following the 1982 war, an "economic zone" of 200 nautical miles was established around the Falklands. British military and diplomatic sources have stated that any attempt by the Argentinians to stop the rig in these waters would be in breach of international law.

They also pointed out that the Ocean Guardian was registered in the US and the detention of its crew would make Buenos Aires answerable for its action to Washington as well as Britain.

The British military maintains a force of 1,076 soldiers, and a small number of warplanes on the Falklands and there is a flotilla of ships offshore including, at present, the Type 42 frigate HMS York. The aircraft are on 15 minutes' notice to fly.

A defence source said yesterday: "The Thor Leader was stopped at an Argentinian port. The rig will be sailing in international waters and any attempt to interfere with it would be in breach of international law and we have the forces available and ready in the region to address that problem if that is what the Government wants us to do."

Earlier this week Air Chief Marshal Sir Stephen Dalton, the head of the Royal Air Force, drew attention to the situation in the South Atlantic in a speech to the International Institute of Strategic Studies (IISS) referred to " the increasingly tense situation around the Falkland Islands" to stress the need for maintaining air superiority.

The Parliamentary all-party group on the Falklands yesterday called for Argentina's ambassador in London to be censured over the actions of his government. The secretary of the group, the Conservative MP Andrew Rosindell, said: "Any attempt by Argentina to claim any sort of rights of sovereignty over the region is something we should take very seriously. I don't think we should appease Buenos Aires – we found out last time what happens when we do that."

Another member of the group, his fellow Tory MP Sir Nicholas Winterton, said: "They are trying to impede the economic progress of the Falkland Islands, because of course the encouragement of hydrocarbon exploration in the area is am important part of achieving a sustainable future for the islands."

It is widely accepted the that Argentinian military does not have the capabilities to carry out another invasion of the islands, which are, in any case, far better defended now than they were three decades ago.

However, harassment of supply ships and the refusal to let them use Argentinian ports for supplies would significantly add to the cost for oil companies and, some analysts believe, this could be a tool to force the UK and the Falkland Islands to come to a deal with Buenos Aires.

There is also apprehension among some in Argentina that the situation may lead to the rejuvenation of the extreme right-wing in the country, which had been dormant since the fall of the military dictatorship.

Frederico Thomsen, a political analyst in Buenos Aires, said: "For centuries the Falklands were about some sheep, penguins and fish – and even so, we had a war. Should someone find 'black gold', things will get uncomfortable and nationalists will be stirred."

British firms could be hit in revenge for Falklands oil drilling

Argentina is preparing to target British companies with links to the new oil drilling ventures off the coast of the Falkland Islands.

By Damien McElroy, Foreign Affairs Correspondent

http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...l-drilling.html

HSBC and Barclays are thought to be on a list of companies that could be hit in revenge for the exploration, which Buenos Aires claims is a “violation of sovereignty”.

The companies could find themselves frozen out of business deals in Argentina or find their dealings being blocked or hampered.

The threat is the latest act in a dispute over plans to begin exploring for oil near the British territories. The North Sea oil rig Ocean Guardian finally arrived in Falklands waters on Friday in defiance of the warnings from the Argentine authorities.

Royal Navy ships have already been put on standby to protect commercial shipping heading to the region after Argentina said all vessels passing through its waters would have to apply for a permit. The authorities stopped a shipment of pipes bound for the island last week.

British companies identified as beneficiaries of investments in Falklands oil include Barclays, HSBC and BHP Billiton, the mining house that has an investment in Falkland Oil and Gas and copper rights in Argentina.

The banks have been targeted even though each maintains relatively minor links with two of the exploration companies. A division of Barclay’s holds Desire Petroleum and Borders & Southern Petroleum shares in trust, while HSBC advises Rockhopper Exploration.

Barclays is thought to be particularly vulnerable to pressure as it is playing a leading role in negotiations on Argentina’s £65•billion in defaulted debt.

The new threat came as Argentina accused Britain of raising the “spectre of war” for saying preparations had been made to protect the islands.

Victorio Taccetti, Argentina’s deputy foreign minister, said war was not an option in resolving the dispute over the oil-rich area.

“War is excluded from our horizon,” he said. Island residents “should not be worried about this, but they should clearly know that Argentina will not abandon” its claim.

On Thursday, Gordon Brown said Britain had made “all the preparations” to ensure the Falklands were “properly protected”.

Jorge Taiana, Argentina’s foreign minister, is scheduled to discuss the dispute with Ban Ki-moon, the United Nations secretary-general, next week.

A Foreign Office spokesman said: “We have no doubt about our sovereignty over the Falkland Islands and we’re clear that the Falkland Islands government is entitled to develop a hydrocarbons industry within its waters.

“The Falkland Islands territorial waters are controlled by the islands’ authorities.

“We’re monitoring the situation closely, but we’re not going to react to every development in Argentina. We remain focused on supporting the Falkland Islands government in developing legitimate business in its territory.”

British officials fear that the issue will continue to fester in the run-up to Argentina's presidential elections next year.

Falkland authorities separately denounced the Argentine government in statement on the islands website.

"This is a move by Argentina to try and disrupt the oil drilling due to start early next week," said the statement. "All the supplies the industry needs are located here in the islands and drilling will commence as planned, weather permitting. [We have] every right to develop a hydrocarbons industry within our waters.

"It is no surprise to anyone that Argentina is behaving in this way but it is nonetheless disappointing when they do."

Notice that there has been no attempt by the UK to reinforce the garrison on the Falklands either with extra troops or aircraft. There are currently only 1076 personnel on the Island (all services) and only 4 Typhoon fighters.

I believe that the UK is trying to lure Argentina into attacking the Falklands by leaving the garrison relatively weekly defended when they could easily reinforce the garrison with additional troops and aircraft to deter hostilities.

This will then give the UK the excuse to destroy the Argentine Navy and Airforce prior to large scale oil extraction.

Another Falklands War would also be used to justify maintaining defense spending at current levels or even increasing it, in difficult economic times.

Hello again.

Here Maximiliano from Argentine reporting to "The Unhived Mind II" facts that you must know regarding this country.

The President of Argentina Cristina Kirchner, wife of the former presidente Nestor Kirchner (note that it's a german surname), decided weeks ago to create the called "Bicentenary Fund" to finance themselves arguing that will be used only to pay the foreign debt to IMF, taking to the Central Bank, and without his consent, U.S. $ 6.569 million. Also the president Kirchner dismissed the president of the Central Bank, MartinRedrado, which performed work as a consultant in the privatization advisory and placement of shares of British Airways and British Gas.

Regarding the Central Bank of Argentine, this bank was created by the last president of this country which was himself a mason too, Agustín Pedro Justo, he was a socialist which father was Grand Master of the Masonry in Argentina and governor of the province of Corrientes. He was responsable for the erection of the masonic obelisk of Buenos Aires (the construction of the obelisk was in charge of the German company Siemens GEOPE Bauunion - Grün & Bilfinger.), and ordered the reinstatement of Argentina to the League of Nations. Also the Central Bank of Argentine was created with the design of the british Sir Otto Ernst Niemeyer which was financial controller at the Treasury and a director at the Bank of England.

Argentine was always divided between Anglophiles and Germanophiles. In fact Domingo Peron was a part of the Lodge GOU (United Officers Group) which was fascist and progermanic and had as principle objetive avoid Patron Costas candidacy because of his known relationship with conservative groups and their undisputed support to the Allies in World War II, through the historic economic and social relations of the oligarchy of Argentina with the United Kingdom. Peron never declared to the Nazi Germany but months before the WW2 ends.

About the Jesuits is very telling that was a member of this order, Juan A. Bussolini, S. J., who fight against the use of free energy by nuclear fusion, created by the German Ronald Richter, a possibility that at that time no lab in the world had been achieved.

HOW CASUALTY!!

http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/americas/8525648.stm

(I translated the following news)

""Former Secretary of State and four-star general Alexander Haig died yesterday in Baltimore at age 85, from complications associated with "infection".

Haig was a hawk on military issues and foreign affairs, although in 1982 it became an occasional pigeon, trying to avoid war between Argentina and Britain for possession of the Falkland Islands.

Born in 1927 in Philadelphia, graduated from West Point military academy in 1947 and participated in the wars in Korea and Vietnam. Later he served as senior three occupants of the White House: Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford and Ronald Reagan.

During his years in the White House, Haig apparently played a key role in persuading Nixon to resign. Years later, he said he was "Deep Throat" source who leaked information to journalists from The Washington Post about Watergate, but ultimately became the then Deputy FBI Director Mark Felt.

After the Nixon administration, was supreme commander of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), between 1974 and 1979.

He never recovered the damage it caused to his image appeared on television after the 1981 assassination attempt against Reagan.

Shortly after the shooting, Haig, then Secretary of State, appeared from the offices of the State Department before the cameras and told Americans: "Right now, I am in control here in the White House, pending the return of vice "which was considered an attempt to increase his power. Haig then wrote that he had chosen his words poorly.

U.S. President Barack Obama has expressed his condolences on the passing of Haig, which he described as a "great American" and said "embodied our best tradition of the warrior-diplomat who devotes his life to public service."

In addition, Secretary of State, Hillary Rodham Clinton, said he was "deeply saddened" by the news and said that Haig "won honors in the field, the confidence of presidents and prime ministers and the gratitude of a nation."

In 1982, Haig was the Secretary of State (Foreign Minister) of then President Ronald Reagan, whose government was a close ally of London and also maintained good relations with the dictatorship in Argentina (1976-1983) as part of its "war on Communism, by which also sponsored other totalitarian regimes in the region.

Haig visited both capitals, Buenos Aires and London, after the Argentine landing on 2 April 1982, but his efforts with Argentina's military junta and the government of Margaret Thatcher failed and left a lasting mark in his career.

Historians point out that Haig crashed in Buenos Aires with his Argentine counterpart, Nicanor Costa Mendez, no power in the military government. Even then, de facto president of Argentina, Leopoldo Galtieri, was then with little room to control the board, so Haig's management had failed in practice to leave Washington.

In addition, Haig was unable to convince the Argentine military Reagan's message: that America would not be neutral in that war and ultimately support its traditional ally.

The former general came to say that his failure in mediation cost him his political future, including his failed bid for the Republican nomination for the presidency in 1988, which finally fell into the hands of George Bush (father).""

WIKIPEDIA TELL THE FOLLOWING ABOUT HIM:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Alexander_Haig

""Haig was born in Bala Cynwyd, Pennsylvania, just outside of Philadelphia. He was the middle of three children of Alexander Meigs Haig, Sr., a Republican lawyer, and his wife Regina Anne Murphy. When Haig was 10, his father died of cancer, and his Irish American mother raised her children in the Catholic religion.
He attended Saint Joseph's Preparatory School in Philadelphia and graduated from Lower Merion High School in Ardmore, Pennsylvania. He then studied at the University of Notre Dame for two years, before transferring to the United States Military Academy, where he graduated in 1947. Haig earned a master's degree in business administration from Columbia Business School in 1955, and a master's degree in international relations from Georgetown University in 1961.
His thesis was on the role of military officers in making national policy.""

""Haig has been largely credited with keeping the government running while President Nixon was preoccupied with Watergate, and was seen as the "acting president" in Nixon's last months. Haig also played an instrumental role in finally persuading Nixon to resign. Anecdotal evidence suggests that Nixon had been assured of a pardon by then-Vice President Gerald Ford if he would resign. In this regard, in his 2001 book "Shadow," author Bob Woodward describes Haig's role as the point man between Nixon and Ford during the final days of Watergate. according to Woodward, Haig played a major behind-the-scenes role in the delicate negotiations of the transfer of power from President Nixon to President Ford.

Haig remained White House Chief of Staff during the early days of the Ford Administration until Donald Rumsfeld replaced him in September 1974. By that time, Ford, in a highly controversial move, had pardoned Nixon for any crimes he may have committed as president. Author Roger Morris, a former colleague of Haig's on the National Security Council early in Nixon's first term, wrote that when Ford pardoned Nixon, he in effect pardoned Haig as well""

""From 1974 to 1979, Haig served as the Supreme Allied Commander Europe (SACEUR), the Commander of NATO forces in Europe, and Commander-in-Chief of United States European Command (CinCUSEUR). A creature of habit, Haig took the same route to SHAPE every day – a pattern of behavior that did not go unnoticed by terrorist groups. On June 25, 1979, Haig was the victim of an assassination attempt in Mons, Belgium. A land mine blew up under the bridge on which Haig's car was traveling, narrowly missing Haig's car, but wounding three of his bodyguards in a following car. Authorities later attributed responsibility for the attack to the germanic group Red Army Faction (RAF). In 1993 a German Court sentenced Rolf Clemens Wagner, a former RAF member, to life imprisonment for the assassination attempt. Alexander Haig retired as a four-star general from the Army in 1979, and moved on to civilian employment. In 1979, he became President, Chief Executive Officer (CEO), and Director of United Technologies, Inc., a job he retained until 1981.""

1982 Lebanon War

""Haig's report to Reagan on January 30, 1982, shows that Haig feared that the Israelis might start a war against Lebanon. Critics have accused Haig of "greenlighting" the Israeli invasion of Lebanon in June 1982. Haig denies this and says he urged restraint.

President Reagan accepted Haig's resignation from State on July 5, 1982. Haig was succeeded by George P. Schultz, who was confirmed on July 16, 1982, and left office on January 20, 1989.""

On January 5, 2006, Haig participated in a meeting at the White House of former Secretaries of Defense and State to discuss United States foreign policy with Bush administration officials. On May 12, 2006, Haig participated in a second White House meeting with 10 former Secretaries of State and Defense. The meeting including briefings by Donald Rumsfeld and Condoleezza Rice, and was followed by a discussion with President George W. Bush.

Family

Alexander Haig was married to Patricia (nee Fox) from 1950 until his death. She is the mother of his three children, all of whom survive him: Alexander, author Brian Haig and Barbara Haig, who is currently the Deputy to the President for Policy & Strategy at the National Endowment for Democracy in Washington, DC. Haig's younger brother, Frank – a Jesuit priest – served as the seventh president of Le Moyne College in Syracuse, New York, and is now teaching physics at Loyola University in Maryland.

Rev. Haig says he's used to criticism of his brother

NORWICH, N.Y. (AP) The Rev. Frank Haig, a Jesuit priest and college president, says his better-known brother is criticized unfairly and uses bureaucratic double-talk to protect U.S. interests.

Secretary of State Alexander Haig once was asked by Regina, the oldest of the three Haig siblings: "Al, why don't you ever answer a question directly?"

"Have you ever thought of the price of a mistake?" Frank Haig quoted his brother as responding.

Frank Haig, who in July became president of LeMoyne College in Syracuse, spoke of his brother with admiration and a hint of sibling rivalry on a recent visit here, where he had lunch with LeMoyne alumni.

He said his brother, the former NATO commander, Army general and corporation president, is knowledgable about world affairs but "definitely not an academic type."

The high school principal in the Philadelphia suburb of Bala Cynwyd, Pa., where they grew up, once told his mother that "Al definitely isn't West Point material," Frank Haig said.

"At that moment, I knew he was going to be a general," he said. Alexander Haig graduated from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point in 1947, "nowhere near the head of his class," and worked his way through the ranks until he was made a general in 1973.

Frank Haig is 52, his brother, 56. They shared few adventures growing up because their ages put them in different groups of companions, the priest recalled.

He said he has become accustomed to criticism of his brother, although watching the nightly television news remains an ordeal.

"No matter how hard I try, I get edgy waiting for that inevitable segment, wondering who's after Al now. And after I've seen it, I can relax," he said, and added:

"In general, I think he's right."

He said his brother's diplomatic doubletalk is to protect U.S. interests, and his sticking by former President Nixon when he was White House chief of staff showed he "is just incapable of betraying people he works with," the younger Haig said.

Frank Haig said his most recent personal glimpse of the secretary of state came during a summer visit, after his brother had come home from a White House reception.

"Al was called to the phone, and he took the call in the kitchen. I could hear him saying, 'Yes, your highness' and 'No, your highness.' It struck me funny, because it reminded me of the end of that new James Bond movie when the British prime minister, Margaret Thatcher, is talking to Bond on the phone while making a salad in her kitchen," the Jesuit said.

"All I could think of was, 'Gee, these world leaders really do have conversations in their kitchens, over bowls of salad.'"

Falkland Islands: Argentina can't scare us, say islanders

Falkland Islanders were flying Union flags en masse over Stanley on Sunday as they met Argentina's threats with a gritty defiance.

By Tom Leonard in Port Stanley
Published: 6:00AM GMT 22 Feb 2010
http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/...-islanders.html

With a British-owned oil rig preparing to drill 100 miles off the coast despite Argentina's attempts to disrupt exploration efforts, the view of Bill Luxton, a member of the Falklands' eight-strong ruling assembly, was that "we just need to put two fingers up to them and say get on with it". It was echoed by many across the South Atlantic islands.

The 3,000-strong community is already proudly British – the phone boxes are the old red ones, the groceries are from Waitrose and many still refer to the UK as "home".

A police officer described how last week's Argentine sabre-rattling had set off a rash of unofficial flag-flying, joining the houses that already have the British or Falklands flag painted on roofs and walls. "Everybody's on edge really but they're being philosophical about it," said the police officer.

Few seriously believe Buenos Aires will go to war again, even if the website of the local newspaper, the Penguin News, was hacked into over the weekend and its contents replaced by a giant Argentine flag. On an island in which there is estimated to be more than one serviceman for every two citizens, backed by fighter jets and a destroyer, the main reason for their confidence is clear. By contrast, the invading Argentinians in April 1982 were met by around 60 Royal Marines and sailors.

The Argentine government under its embattled president, Cristina Kirchner, whose poll ratings are in need of a boost, has decreed that all vessels using its ports must obtain a permit if they plan to enter "British-controlled" waters.

She will this week try to rachet up the diplomatic pressure over her country's claims to the Falklands. Today , she is expected to ask the Rio Group of Latin American and Caribbean leaders, meeting in Mexico, to condemn oil exploration that Britain has approved around the Falklands.

Her foreign minister, Jorge Taiana, will meet Ban-Ki Moon, the United Nations Secretary General, on Wednesday to encourage talks over the Falklands' disputed sovereignty.

But many islanders do not even feel the need to acknowledge the latest displeasure of their closest neighbour. "We've had this sort of nonsense from them for so many years and this seems like more of the same – we almost expect it of them now," said Jan Cheek, a Falklands assembly member and sixth-generation islander.

"We had it on sustainable fishing, then on oil exploration and then when they banned charter flights from other South American countries."

In a classically British put-down, Emma Edwards, a fellow Falklands councillor, described the Argentines as a "very, very passionate Latin American race who will quickly say something without thinking the process through".

She added: "They've done what I think they wanted to do, which was to bring the sovereignty issue back to the world stage."

At Stanley's Globe pub, where the walls are decorated with captured Argentinian weapons and the ceiling covered with British military flags, 82-year-old Don Bonner epitomised the islanders' long-standing contempt for their closest neighbour.

"Our council agreed to let their veterans come back here and all we get from them are these aggressive claims," said Mr Bonner, who was chauffeur to Sir Rex Hunt, the islands' governor, during the invasion. "If there is oil here, it's ours, not theirs. I'm British and I want to stay that way."

Standing beside him, one of his current defenders, Gareth Jones, a 25-year-old cook on the survey ship Scott, said his father had served on the aircraft carrier Hermes during the conflict. It would be "ironic" if he became involved in new hostilities there, he said. Echoing Mr Bonner, he said the islanders "are British, and that's all that matters".

Another irony is that many servicemen on the island know little about why they are there. A group of four young airmen visiting Stanley's war memorial admitted they had to buy a DVD about the war.

The younger islanders may not share the older generation's memories but there is clearly no love lost with the Argentines among them, too. A handful live on the islands but "keep a very low profile", said Mrs Edwards. There is very little trade with Argentina, and supplies and visitors have to come either from Chile or Britain. "We've got used to living as if Argentina's not there," said Warren Miller, 16. "So long as they don't attack us again, I'm not bothered what they do."

Patrick Watts, the Falklands' radio operator during the Argentine invasion, said Buenos Aires had made it "clear as a bell" years ago that it would never again use military action over the Falklands.

"They're using the Falklands once again to take the pressure off their internal problems," he said. Tony Curran, the editor of the Penguin News, had to go into the office yesterday to deal with the computer hacking.

He said the Argentinian-inspired meddling with his website was an occasional "annoyance".

Quoting from a piece of graffiti on a Falklands farm wall that read "Leave us alone", he said he could think of "no more appropriate message – at least which is printable" to send to Mrs Kirchner.

I know its 'just' a homeport change', but each time in recent memory the US Navy moved a CVN, or an LHD around the horn through the straits of Magellan, they did it w/out escorts.

Funny how this time a cruiser is moving with Carl Vinson, and it has a squadron of Super Hornets and a couple of Hawkeye's.

I'm thinking USS Ronald Reagan, USS George Washington, USS Makin Island - if memory serves, all went w/out surface escort. Now the USS Carl Vinson has USS Bunker Hill w/it and those Super Hornets.

Timing, anyone?

As I'm writing this, I do remember some a/c on the Reagan when she went around South America. I'm clearly full of it:::))))

Return Falklands to Argentina, says Chavez to Queen

Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez has called on Queen Elizabeth II of Britain to leave the disputed Malvinas (Falklands) Island to Argentina, saying that the time of empires have long expired.

"Look, England, how long are you going to be in Las Malvinas Queen of England, I'm talking to you... the time for empires are over, haven't you noticed? Return the Malvinas to the Argentine People," AFP quoted Chavez as saying in his weekly TV and Radio address "Alo Presidente" on Sunday.

The Latin American leader warned that in the event of a war over the island, Argentina would not be alone.

"The English are still threatening Argentina. Things have changed," Chavez continued, still addressing Queen Elizabeth II. "We are no longer in 1982. If conflict breaks out, be sure Argentina will not be alone like it was back then."

The British claim over the archipelago is "anti-historic and irrational," said Chavez, asking "why the English speak of democracy but still have a queen?"

The dispute over the Malvinas Island arose between Buenos Aires and London after Argentina found that Britain was planning drilling for oil near the islands that lie around 500 kilometers off the coast of Argentina and almost 13,000 kilometers away from the UK.

Britain deems the southern Atlantic archipelago as part of its sovereign territories, with Prime Minister Gordon Brown reportedly hinting at a possible confrontation in the event of a clash.

Earlier on Friday Chavez had also slammed the US and the UK for what he described as their 'oil hunger' that had sparked tensions over drilling plans near the Falklands or Las Malvinas.

UK oil exploration firm starts Falklands drilling

By RAPHAEL G. SATTER, Associated Press Writer Raphael G. Satter, Associated Press Writer –

LONDON – A British oil exploration company said Monday it began drilling near the Falkland Islands, a development that could worsen tensions between Britain and Argentina, which fought a war over the disputed islands nearly three decades ago.

Desire Petroleum PLC said it started drilling for oil about 60 miles (100 kilometers) north of the disputed Falkland Islands, despite strong opposition from Argentina. The country claims the south Atlantic islands as its own and calls them Las Malvinas.

"The well is being drilled to an estimated target depth of circa 3,500 meters (11,500 feet)," the company said in a statement. "Drilling operations are expected to take approximately 30 days."

Argentina lost a seven-week war over the islands to Britain in 1982 and the two countries have since pledged to resolve their differences peacefully. But moves to begin exploiting what could be lucrative reserves of oil and gas around the islands have sent tensions soaring.

The dispute over the Falklands dates back to the 19th century, when the islands were seized by the British. Argentina has sought their return ever since, invading in April 1982 and holding them until June, when British forces retook the territory.

Full diplomatic relations were restored in 1990 and both sides have since largely agreed to disagree on the issue of sovereignty. But anger over the issue still lingers and has been exacerbated by the prospect that Argentina could lose out on mineral wealth discovered offshore.

As the drilling platform made its way to the islands, Argentine President Cristina Fernandez decreed that any ship traveling to or from the islands must get prior permission from her country — a requirement Britain told captains to ignore.

The Latin American nation is taking the diplomatic offensive, lobbying countries at the Rio Group summit in Playa del Carmen, Mexico to condemn what she called Britain's "unilateral and illegal" exploration in the islands and urge Britain to sit down for sovereignty talks.

Fernandez accused Britain of ignoring international law, but ruled out a military response.

"I thank you all for the support that we have received in this forum for the legitimate rights over Las Malvinas and to appeal to Britain to come to the negotiating table," she told fellow Latin American leaders Monday.

"Those who have the most power, those who can impose their decisions on others continue using this privilege to ignore international law," she said. "Argentina will continue working democratically to pursue its claim until we have exhausted all the ways in which we can reaffirm our sovereignty over the southern archipelago."

Argentine Foreign Minister Jorge Taiana was planning a meeting with U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon, seeking help to pressure Britain to follow U.N. resolutions urging both countries to negotiate their competing claims.

One estimate has put the amount of oil beneath the seabed around the Falklands at 60 billion barrels, something Robert Munks, Americas analyst with IHS Jane's, said was on par with world-class oil fields.

"Sixty billion barrels is a large amount," Munks told BBC television. "It's as large as a large field in Saudi Arabia. But that is only one estimate of several estimates ... I should underline of course that there could be nothing there at all. This is all speculative guesswork."

Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez pledged Sunday to send his armed forces to Argentina's defense if British attacks, telling his allies they can "have the security of knowing they aren't alone" against what he called Britain's threats. But Argentine diplomats have ruled out a military response to what it considers British aggression.

"Get out of there, give the Malvinas back to the Argentine people. Enough already with the empire," Chavez said.

But Munks said that Argentine anger over the development of the area's energy wealth was unlikely to translate into military conflict.

"This over-exaggerated talk about war that we've seen, that's not going to come to pass," he told the broadcaster. "I think it's going to remain relatively calm."

Animosity over the issue apparently spilled onto the Internet over the weekend, when the site of Penguin News, the weekly newspaper which serves the Falklands' approximately 2,500 inhabitants, was hacked.

Office manager Fran Biggs said attackers replaced the site with "a large Argentine flag" and added that the paper had recently received a stream of abusive e-mails from Argentina, with several references to "British pirates."

But she seemed fairly blase about the rising temperature of the rhetoric surrounding the islands.

"This happens quite a bit," Biggs said.

Argentina rallies regional support over Falklands

http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/americas/8529605.stm

Latin American and Caribbean leaders have come to an agreement supporting Argentina over sovereignty of the Falkland Islands, reports say.

The leaders are to approve a document supporting Argentina in its territorial dispute with the British government.

No official statement has been made but it is thought the document was drawn up behind closed doors at a regional summit in Cancun in Mexico.

The announcement comes as a British rig began drilling for oil off the islands.

According to reports from Cancun, Argentine President Cristina Kirchner says her government has won the backing of other regional leaders in its dispute with the UK over the territory in the South Atlantic.

The Mexican President, Felipe Calderon, is reported to have said that a document has been drawn up behind closed doors giving Argentina unanimous support.

The BBC's Andy Gallacher in Cancun says that any broad agreement at the summit could put more pressure on the British government in what has become an escalating diplomatic row.

Leaders at the summit, between the Rio Group and the Caribbean Community (Caricom), are also said to have discussed plans for a new pan-American alliance which would exclude Canada and the United States.

The new grouping would serve as an alternative to the Organisation of American States (OAS), the main forum for regional affairs in the past 50 years.

"It's time to realise the unity of Latin America and the Caribbean," said Mr Calderon, asking the attending leaders and foreign ministers to put aside their political differences.
Ocean Guardian under tow
The Ocean Guardian is in Falkland Islands waters

'Legitimate right'

The British rig, The Ocean Guardian, 100km (62 miles) north of the Falklands, started drilling on Monday, despite fierce opposition from Argentina.

Desire Petroleum, which is carrying out the drilling, said operations had started on the Liz 14/19-A exploration well at 1415 GMT.

Argentina claims sovereignty over what it calls the Islas Malvinas and has imposed shipping restrictions.

But UK Defence Minister Bill Rammell said the government had a "legitimate right" to build an oil industry in its waters.

Mr Rammell said the UK would take "whatever steps [were] necessary" to protect the islands and that it had made Argentina "aware of that".

Argentina is already assured of support from President Hugo Chavez of Venezuela, who said Britain was being irrational and had to realise the "time for empires was over".

Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega has called for "Britain to return the territory of the Malvinas to its real owners - to return it to Argentina" on Venezuelan Telesur television.

Argentina has long claimed the islands. It invaded the Falklands in 1982, before a UK taskforce seized back control in a short war that claimed the lives of 649 Argentine and 255 British service personnel.

But it has ruled out military action and is trying to pressure Britain into negotiations on sovereignty.

Last year Argentina submitted a claim to the United Nations for a vast expanse of ocean, based on research into the extent of the continental shelf, stretching to the Antarctic and including the island chains governed by the UK.

It is due to raise the issue at the UN later this week.

US refuses to endorse British sovereignty in Falklands oil dispute

From The Times
February 25, 2010

http://www.timesonline.co.uk/tol/news/worl...icle7040245.ece

Washington refused to endorse British claims to sovereignty over the Falkland Islands yesterday as the diplomatic row over oil drilling in the South Atlantic intensified in London, Buenos Aires and at the UN.

Despite Britain's close alliance with the US, the Obama Administration is determined not to be drawn into the issue. It has also declined to back Britain's claim that oil exploration near the islands is sanctioned by international law, saying that the dispute is strictly a bilateral issue.

Argentina appealed to the UN Secretary-General, Ban Ki Moon, last night to intervene in the dispute, a move Britain adamantly opposes.

"The Secretary-General knows about the issue. He is not happy to learn that the situation is worsening," Jorge Taiana, the Argentine Foreign Minister, said after meeting Mr Ban in New York.

"We have asked the Secretary-General, within the framework of his good offices, to stress to Britain the need to abstain from further unilateral acts."

A top UN aide acknowledged, however, that Mr Ban would not be able to mediate because of Britain's opposition.

Sir Mark Lyall Grant, Britain's Ambassador to the UN, said: "As British ministers have made clear, the UK has no doubt about its sovereignty over the Falkland Islands, South Georgia and the Sandwich Islands . . . We are also clear that the Falkland Islands Government is entitled to develop a hydrocarbons industry within its waters, and we support this legitimate business in Falklands' territory."

Senior US officials insisted that Washington's position on the Falklands was one of longstanding neutrality. This is in stark contrast to the public backing and vital intelligence offered by President Reagan to Margaret Thatcher once she had made the decision to recover the islands by force in 1982.

"We are aware not only of the current situation but also of the history, but our position remains one of neutrality," a State Department spokesman told The Times. "The US recognises de facto UK administration of the islands but takes no position on the sovereignty claims of either party."

Kevin Casas-Zamora, a Brookings Institution analyst and former vice-president of Costa Rica, said that President Reagan's support for Britain in 1982 "irked a lot of people in Latin America".

The Obama Administration "is trying to split the difference as much as it can because it knows that coming round to the British position would again create a lot of ill will in the region", he said.

British officials in Washington said that they were comfortable with the US response to the dispute, but indicated that any American support for mediated negotiations would not be well received. It was "up to the islanders whether they want mediation or not", one official said.

Britain has boosted the islands' defences since the conflict, Admiral Sir Mark Stanhope, the First Sea Lord, said last night. "We have built a massive runway. We have emplaced forces on the ground, we have sophisticated early warning systems. It is a different package. To compare the way we dealt with the issues in 1982 with today is nonsense," he said.

Surprise, surprise, country neighboring Argentina gets hit with a huge one.

http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/americas/8540289.stm

A massive earthquake of 8.3 magnitude has struck close to the city of Concepcion in Chile.

The US Geological Survey said the quake struck at 0634 GMT on Saturday at a depth of 59.4km (36.9 miles).

Concepcion is the second largest city in the country, about 450km south of Santiago. There is no word yet on any casualties.

The US government said a tsunami warning has been issued for Chile, Peru and Ecuador.

Buildings in Santiago were reported to have shaken for between 10 and 30 seconds, with the loss of electricity in some parts of the capital.

WASHINGTON – The Pentagon says it's had no reports that the big earthquake in Chile has affected the U.S. military in the region — on land or at sea.

The Defense Department also says it hasn't received requests yet to help with any relief effort.

In cases of natural disasters, the affected country usually accepts an offer of help made by the State Department.

The State Department can request that Defense Department personnel help carry out that mission.

U.S. Southern Command, based in Miami, oversees the U.S. military presence in South American. Sgt. Santita Mitchell of the command's public affairs office says the command is monitoring the situation.

Russia Proves 'Peak Oil' is a Misleading Zionist Scam

While Moscow invests heavily in unlimited oil production for the future, New York squanders America's dwindling oil profits on fast cars and fast women

Copyright Joe Vialls, 25 August 2004

In 1970 the Russians started drilling Kola SG-3, an exploration well which finally reached a staggering world record depth of 40,230 feet. Since then, Russian oil majors including Yukos have quietly drilled more than 310 successful super-deep oil wells, and put them into production. Last Year Russia overtook Saudi Arabia as the world's biggest single oil producer, and is now set to completely dominate global oil production and sales for the next century. We gratefully accept credit cards here:

If the opening paragraph of this report started by claiming that completely unlimited crude oil reserves exist inside planet earth, readers might be tempted to regard the entire text as preposterous ghostwriting for a novelist like Frederick Forsyth. If the report then went on to claim that the Russians have exploited this stunning reality for nearly thirty years, right under the largely unwitting noses of western intelligence, readers could be excused for mistaking the author for a lunatic, or perhaps as a front for spy novelist John le Carré. The problem here is that unlimited oil reserves do exist inside planet earth, and the Russians long ago developed the advanced technology necessary to recover these unlimited oil reserves in an efficient and timely manner.

Profoundly disturbing hard intelligence like this does not sit well with the frantic cries of western academic shills and lobbyists, determined to convince you all that the end of the oil world is nigh, or, more accurately, that America faces an imminent catastrophe when global production capacity "Peaks", i.e. when world demand for crude oil finally exceeds the rate at which we can physically pump the required product out of the ground. The gist of these false claims are outlined in a speech given at the at the University of Clausthal, by lobbyist Doctor Colin Campbell during December 2000:
"In summary, these are the main points that we have to grasp: Conventional [Free flowing] oil provides most of the oil produced today, and is responsible for about 95% of all oil that has been produced so far. It will continue to dominate supply for a long time to come. It is what matters most. Its discovery peaked in the 1960s. We now find one barrel for every four we consume. Middle East share of production is set to rise. The rest of the world peaked in 1997, and is therefore in terminal decline. World peak comes within about five years" [circa 12/2005]

Campbell is just the tip of a giant iceberg of academic Peak Oil 'experts' who suddenly appeared en-masse to give you this frightening news, right after President Saddam Hussein suddenly started trading his oil in Euros rather than in US Dollars, a devastating switch with the easy capacity to destroy the US Dollar in less than five years if it was left unchallenged and unchecked.

So these shills [decoys] were carefully positioned to deflect your attention away from the obvious greed and incompetence of the United States Government and its Wall Street masters, and focus it elsewhere instead. Then, hopefully, a few years later down the track when prices start to bounce through the roof, and America has no Euros to buy crude oil, you will blame gasoline prices of $5.00+ per gallon at the pumps on an 'inevitable decline' in world oil production, rather than march furiously on Washington DC with locked and loaded firearms.

Though attacking Campbell and his ilk is not the purpose of this report, his idiot claims can be debunked readily enough. While it is true that nowadays we only officially find one barrel of oil for every four barrels we consume, this is primarily because we temporarily stopped the incredibly expensive process of looking for crude oil when we had already physically established more than two trillion barrels of reserves in known reservoir locations around the world. When those known reserves drop to [say] one trillion barrels we may be tempted to go and find more, but not until then. And while it is true that the production rate from each individual oil well ever drilled has slowly declined over the years, there is a perfectly valid technical reason for this predictable reduced flow rate, which will be explained later.

In order to understand how Russia has left the rest of the world standing in its wake, it is essential to know a little bit about where oil is located, and how it is extracted from the ground for refining and commercial use. It is an enormously complex subject, especially when considering the ultra-deep wells, which should really have a separate category all of their own. Many years ago I was personally involved at the sharp end of two ultra-deep drilling operations [one of them in direct liaison with Russian experts from the Moscow Drilling Institute], and will try to keep this drilling lesson as simple as I can. Thankfully perhaps, the underlying principle of how and where oil is recovered from is not difficult to comprehend, as illustrated by the diagram below.

Simplified Plan of Ultra Deep Oil

Viewed from the top, the drilling rig drills downwards into the oil reservoir [shown in black], then runs production tubing back to the surface to transport the crude oil to the refinery. All western geologists believe that the oil is formed locally from decaying organic matter [marine life for example], which then migrates up into the reservoir, where it is trapped by the impervious lock or cap rock above. All very simple and easy to believe, but the Russians have now proved western geologists hopelessly wrong.

During the forties and fifties, Russian reservoir engineers realized their reserves were somehow being "topped up" from below, despite a total lack of additional decaying matter. All that lay below was solid granite and basalt, meaning that the oil was actually being manufactured in the mantle of the earth, before slowly migrating between 70 and 150 miles upwards to the existing reservoir. It all seemed too fantastic to believe, but the Russians persevered. Since that time they have drilled more than 300 producing oil wells through solid granite and basalt, with another 20 drilled the same way in the White Tiger Field in Vietnam. By the mid-nineties Russia was so far ahead of the west, that Wall Street asset Mikhail Khodorkovsky was ordered to 'acquire' Yukos Oil Company in order to steal the technology.

Tiger Field in Vietnam. By the mid-nineties Russia was so far ahead of the west, that Wall Street asset Mikhail Khodorkovsky was ordered to 'acquire' Yukos Oil Company in order to steal the technology.

The theory underlying how oil is formed at such enormous depths in the mantle of the earth is not central to this report, because the Russians have already proved its point of origin in absolute drilling terms more than 300 times. Those interested in the exact process should research the archives, where there are more than two hundred Russian papers on the subject. Probably a good place to start would be "The Role of Methane in the Formation of Mineral Fuels", written by by A.D. Bondar in 1967. What is central to this report is the massive advantage that Russia's ultra-deep drilling discoveries and technical achievements give it over the western nations.

The first advantage I intend to explain is nowhere near as important in global terms as the second, because it is the second advantage that finally drove the Zionist Cabal to illegally invade sovereign Iraq, and thereby bring us all to the very brink of thermonuclear war. However, from where I sit, the first advantage is much more important in simple humanitarian terms, although "humanitarian" is not an acceptable trading process on Wall Street.

As we have already discovered, oil can be produced virtually anywhere on earth, provided the host country can afford the expensive [and sometimes classified] technology, and the massive cost of drilling a well to extreme depth through extremely hard rock formations. But just think what even 20 or 30 deep producing oil wells can mean for the people of a country that has no natural resources of its own, or worse still, for people who have been told by glib western lobbyists that they have no natural resources of their own. Anyone who can prove that the western nations were lying or simply wrong, will become a trusted friend forever. Vietnam is a classic example.

After more than 60 years of being enslaved, pillaged, and raped by the French and then by the Americans, the poor Vietnamese were told officially by American oil multinationals that their country was barren; that western 'cutting edge' technology had failed to find anything to help them recover financially from the mess left behind by American bombs, Agent Orange, and a host of other delightful gifts from Uncle Sam. This of course was exactly where America wanted the Vietnamese to be: desperately poor and unable to take action against their former invaders.

The Russians had other ideas and a very different approach. After telling the Vietnamese that the Americans had lied to them, oil experts were flown in from Moscow to prove this startling claim in a no-risk joint venture, meaning the Russians would provide all of the equipment and expertise free of charge, and only then take a percentage of the profits if oil was actually found and put into production. Vietnam had absolutely nothing to lose, and swiftly gave Russia the green light.

The Vietnamese White Tiger oil field was and is a raging success, currently producing high quality crude oil from basalt rock more than 17,000 feet below the surface of the earth, at 6,000 barrels per day per well. Through White Tiger, the Russians have assisted the Vietnamese to regain part of their self respect, while at the same time making them far less dependent on brutal western nations for food-aid handouts.

All of a sudden in a very small way, Vietnam has joined the exclusive club of oil producing nations, and a stream of cynical U.S. Senators and Congressmen have started making the long pilgrimage to Ho Chi Minh City in order to 'mend fences'. Predictably perhaps, the Vietnamese are very cool, and try hard to ignore their new American admirers.

Welcome to the White Tiger oil field in Vietnam. Observe the truly amazing oil flares, in an area the Americans officially declared 'barren' of oil reserves! It is truly amazing how quickly good news travels [outside of CNN], and in a very short space of time China was also engaged in a joint super deep venture with Russia. Nor did it end there. As I write this report, intelligence reports that the Russians have already moved three deep-drilling rigs into impoverished North Korea, where they intend to repeat the Vietnamese production cycle by drilling thought solid granite and basalt, with not a single trace of the 'decaying marine life' so essential to blinkered western geologists for the 'accepted' production of crude oil. It may take a while, but ultimately the North Koreans will be able to go about their sovereign business without the Zionist Cabal in New York being able to blackmail them over a few ship loads of food-aid rice. Yes indeed, Korea will eventually have an oil surplus of its own, allowing it to tell the latest in a long line of terminally insane "New World Orders" to go to hell.

The White Tiger project was the first outside Russia to openly exploit and showcase this ultra-deep technology and oil production from basalt rock to the world, though the original intent was to do so much earlier in India during 1983. During that year a large drilling rig in the Ganges Delta was scheduled to drill down to below 22,000 feet into basalt, and then dramatically flare "impossible" ultra deep oil. Oil well Bodra #3 was directly supervised by teams of experienced Russian drillers and scientists from the Moscow Institute of Drilling, with the author the only westerner on site, contracted to control one of the critical advanced systems needed to reach target depth smoothly and efficiently.

If Bodra #3 had been allowed to drill ahead unhindered, there is no doubt the resulting impact would have sent shock waves around the oil world, and gained enormous international prestige for the Russians. Even more importantly perhaps, the desperately poor people of West Bengal would have gained access to their own energy reserves. Unfortunately, Bodra #3 was not allowed to drill ahead unhindered. The Americans were determined to stop the project one way or the other, and played on New Delhi's obvious fear of the Communist State Government in West Bengal. After bribing a handful of corrupt central government officials, US intelligence sent in professional American saboteurs, who managed to wreck the drilling project while the author was away on a visit to Sydney in Australia.

Before we continue to the second massive advantage derived from ultra deep oil, and thus the primary reason why Wall Street decided to illegally invade Iraq, it is essential to look briefly at the way in which America devours a massive portion of global oil supply. You see, the 'Peak Oil' scam is not really about the world running out of oil reserves or being incapable of producing sufficient quantities to provide for its various national users. Instead, Peak Oil was fabricated to disguise America's individual increasing greed for crude oil, and its imminent inability to pay hard cash for the product. Put simply, America is going broke fast, and Wall Street wishes to blame someone else before the angry Militias appear with their locked and loaded weapons.

This sorry situation is best summarized by Professor Victor Poleo of Venezuela's Central University, who told IPS in April that, "The mechanism by which global oil prices are set is intact, but the normal behaviour of supply and demand is not." According to Poleo, the root of the problem is that the United States "is a terminal victim of its energetic metastasis. It has neither the oil nor the natural gas needed to feed its style of development. With just six percent of the world population, it consumes nearly 25 percent of the oil and gas produced worldwide."

Professor Poleo went on to explain that there were expectations that demand for gasoline in the United States would stabilize at around 7.2 million barrels a day by the mid-1990s, "but that didn't happen," he said. "The United States' voracity for gasoline rose to nine million barrels by 2003, one of every two liters burnt in the world." And domestic demand for crude oil will continue to grow. The United States imports today six of every 10 barrels of oil and two of every 10 cubic meters of gas that it consumes, and by 2020 it will import eight of every 10 barrels of oil and four of every 10 cubic meters of gas, according to U.S. government reports.

Despite the fact that American intelligence already knew of Russia's achievements with ultra deep oil production from the mantle of the earth back in the early eighties, it was obvious that this slow and expensive method of adding to national oil reserves could never keep up with America's voracious appetite for gasoline. So ultimately when domestic demand grew too fast, or cash reserves were finally depleted, America would either be obliged to halve its own use of gasoline, or steal it from someone else by force. Halving gasoline usage was out of the question, so instead of building hundreds of ultra-deep drilling rigs, Wall Street squandered the cash building more aircraft carriers, with the desperate objective of attacking and permanently occupying the Middle East.

This is the point at which the second massive advantage derived from ultra-deep oil comes into play. Do you remember how puzzled the reservoir engineers were when they discovered that their existing reserves were being "topped up" from below? They later discovered that what they were really observing were naturally occurring ultra-deep oil wells, leaking vast quantities of oil from the mantle of the earth upwards through fractures into what we nowadays refer to as "sedimentary oilfields", located relatively close to the surface. As the production companies draw oil out of these known reservoirs through oil wells, field pressure is slightly reduced, thereby allowing more ultra-deep oil to migrate up from the mantle and restock the reservoir from below.

Russian studies of their own ultra-deep wells and those in the White Tiger field in Vietnam, indicate in very rough terms that migration from the mantle is probably 20-30% less than production at Middle East wellheads, meaning in turn that if the flow rates of existing Iraqi and Saudi wells are reduced by about 30%, oil supply and production can and will continue forever, constantly replenished by ultra-deep oil from the mantle itself. It goes almost without saying that even with production reduced by 30%, there is more than enough oil in the Middle East to provide for America's increasing usage for at least the next century. And that, ladies and gentlemen, is why your sons and daughters have died and will continue to die in Iraq and elsewhere in the Middle East.

In direct conflict with the 'Peak Oil' myth, the underreamer shown in these photos can restore an oil well's original production rate, using basically the same principle as changing the oil filter in your automobile engine

Now we come to the completely false [or deliberately misleading] claim by Peak Oil shills that production from existing oil wells is "slowing down", thereby proving that the oil fields are "running dry". This is so wrong that it is almost breathtaking. Think of this slowing down process in the same way you might think of the engine oil in your automobile. The longer you run the engine, the higher the level of contaminates that get into the oil. The higher the level of contaminates, the higher the level of friction. Sooner or later you have something closely akin to glue coating your piston rings, and the performance of your engine declines accordingly. This is an inevitable mechanical process well known to all automobile owners.

Henry Ford and others managed to slow down the rate of contamination in engine oils by inventing the oil filter, through which the oil has to circulate each time it passes around inside the engine. A high percentage of the contaminates stick to the filter element, thereby allowing extra miles between oil changes, though heaven help the careless motorist who thinks he can get away without ever changing his clogged oil filter when recommended.

When oil is extracted from a producing formation underground, it flows out through pores in the reservoir rock, and then into the open borehole, from where it is transported to surface by the production tubing string. So by the very nature of the beast, the bottom section of the well is "open hole" which allows the oil to flow out in the first place, but because it is comprised of exposed and sometimes unstable rock, this open hole section is also continually subject to all manner of turbulence and various contaminates. For example, tiny quantities of super fine silt may exit through the pores but not continue to the surface with the oil, tumbling around in the turbulence instead, until the silt very slowly starts to block off the oil-producing pore throats. Yes, of course there are a variety of liners that can be used to slow down the contamination, but there is no such thing as a Henry Ford oil filter 10,000 feet underground.

The inevitable result of this is that over time, the initial production rate of the well will slowly decline, a hard fact known to every exploration oilman in the business. However, this is certainly not an indication that the oil field itself is becoming depleted, proved thousands of times by offset wells drilled later into the same reservoir. Any new well comes on stream at the original production rate of its older cousins, because it has not yet had time to build up a thin layer of contaminates across the open hole. Though as we shall see it is possible to "do an oil change" on a producing well and bring it back to full production, this is extremely expensive, and rarely used in the west.

Look at a simple example: Say we have a small oil field in Iraq with ten wells that each started out in life producing 10,000 barrels of oil per day. Fine, for a known investment we are producing 100,000 barrels of oil per day from our small field, at least for a while. Five years later contamination may have slowed our overall production down by ten percent to 90,000 barrels per day. So we are now faced with a choice: either "do an oil change" on all ten existing wells at vast expense and down time, or simply drill one additional well into the same reservoir, thereby restoring our daily production to 100,000 barrels with the minimum of fuss. Take my word for it, ninety-nine percent of onshore producers will simply drill the extra well.

Naturally there are times and places where this simple process is not an option, for example on a huge and very expensive offshore platform, which may have only 24 drilling 'slots', all of which have been used up. To restore your overall production after five years you can either build another giant platform next door for two billion dollars, or "do an oil change" on each of your existing 24 wells, one at a time. Clearly this time you are forced to carry out the time consuming business of restoring the open hole section at the bottom of the well to its old pristine condition, before various contaminates started to slow down your production rate.

For this task you first pull the production tubing out of the hole, and then run back in with a drill string, to which is attached an underreamer as shown in the pictures above. When the reamer is directly opposite the top of the open hole producing section, the drill string is rotated to the right and the blades fly out under centrifugal force to a distance preset by you before lowering the tool into the hole. The objective is to cut away the contaminated face of the well to a depth you consider will once again expose pristine producing pores. As the spinning underreamer is slowly lowered, it enlarges the size of the hole, with the contaminated debris cut away and flushed back to surface by the drilling fluid. Hey presto, you have a new oil well, and it only cost one or two million dollars to restore…

Remember I said this process is rarely used in the west, which is true, but it is not true of Russia, where the objective for many years has been to dominate global oil supply by continual investment. With no shareholders holding out their grubby little hands for a wad of pocket money every month, the Russian oil industry managed to surge ahead, underreaming thousands of its older existing onshore wells in less than ten years. Then along came Wall Street asset Mikhail Khodorkovsky, who fraudulently got his hands on Yukos oil for a mere fraction of its value, and was on the point of selling the entire outfit to the American multinationals when Vladimir Putin had him hauled off his private jet somewhere in Siberia. So Wall Street was finally 'cheated' of its very own 'free' Russian oil, and poor old Mikhail had better get used to the taste of prison food.

To recap, 'Peak Oil' claims that because today we only find one barrel of oil for every four that we use, world oil reserves are running out. Completely misleading propaganda. as the Russians [and the CIA] know perfectly well, reserves of oil in the mantle of the earth are infinite. 'Peak Oil' also claims that we will shortly be unable to pump sufficient oil out of the ground to keep up with demand. Completely misleading propaganda again. We could drill more wells, but Wall Street cannot afford to pay for them, and never intended to, at least not while it still believed conquest and eternal occupation of the Middle East was a realistic possibility.

Professor Poleo makes it quite clear which direction the west needs to go in if it is to survive in the long term, and that is to follow Russia's example by sharply reducing domestic consumption. Back in 1990 America was using around 6 million barrels per day compared to Russia's 8.4 million, but how things have changed since then. Thirteen years later in 2003, American consumption was up to 9 million, while Russian consumption had been reduced to a mere 3.2 million. A few billion folk over there in America might like to walk around their houses and switch off any electrical appliances they don't actually need. Believe me, I can almost hear the oil surging through the pipelines in New York, and I live more than 12,000 miles away in Australia.

In closing I would like to pass on my greetings and thanks to the cheerful Russian drillers and scientists I had the pleasure of working with at Bodra #3 in West Bengal, without whose expertise we might all be dead today, as a direct consequence of repeated American sabotage attempts on the high pressure well. My thanks also to the Moscow Drilling Institute for the unrestricted flow of information and documents on ultra deep oil production technology, without which I could not have written this report.

World's Biggest Oil Reserves In S Dakota, E Montana

Author Unknown
7-7-9

The U.S. Geological Service issued a report in April ('08) that only scientists and oil men knew was coming, but man was it big. It was a revised report (hadn't been updated since '95) on how much oil was in this area of the western 2/3 of North Dakota; western South Dakota; and extreme eastern Montana ..... check THIS out:

The Bake is the largest domestic oil discovery since Alaska 's Purdah Bay, and has the potential to eliminate all American dependence on foreign oil. The Energy Information Administration (EIA) estimates it at 503 billion barrels.. Even if just 10% of the oil is recoverable... at $107 a barrel, we're looking at a resource base worth more than $5.3 trillion.

'When I first briefed legislators on this, you could practically see their jaws hit the floor. They had no idea..' says Terry Johnson, the Montana Legislature's financial analyst.

'This sizable find is now the highest-producing onshore oil field found in the past 56 years.' reports, The Pittsburgh Post Gazette. It's a formation known as the Williston Basin, but is more commonly referred to as the 'Bake.' And it stretches from Northern Montana, through North Dakota and into Canada . For years, U.S. oil exploration has been considered a dead end. Even the 'Big Oil' companies gave up searching for major oil wells decades ago. However, a recent technological breakthrough has opened up the Bakken's massive reserves.... and we now have access of up to 500 billion barrels. And because this is light, sweet oil, those billions of barrels will cost Americans just $16 PER BARREL!

1. That's enough crude to fully fuel the American economy for 2041 years straight.

2. And if THAT didn't throw you on the floor, then this next one should - because it's from TWO YEARS AGO!

U. S. Oil Discovery- Largest Reserve in the World! Stansberry Report Online - 4/20/2006

Hidden 1,000 feet beneath the surface of the Rocky Mountains lies the largest untapped oil reserve in the world. It is more than 2 TRILLION barrels. On August 8, 2005 President Bush mandated its extraction. In three and a half years of high oil prices none has been extracted. With this motherload of oil why are we still fighting over off-shore drilling?

They reported this stunning news: We have more oil inside our borders, than all the other proven reserves on earth.

Here are the official estimates:

- 8-times as much oil as Saudi Arabia

- 18-times as much oil as Iraq

- 21-times as much oil as Kuwait

- 22-times as much oil as Iran

- 500-times as much oil as Yemen

- and it's all right here in the Western United States.

HOW can this BE? HOW can we NOT BE extracting this? Because the environmentalists and others have blocked all efforts to help America become independent of foreign oil! Again, we are letting a small group of people dictate our lives and our economy.....WHY?

James Bartis, lead researcher with the study says we've got more oil in this very compact area than the entire Middle East - more than 2 TRILLION barrels untapped. That's more than all the proven oil reserves of crude oil in the world today, reports The Denver Post.

Don't think 'OPEC' will drop its price - even with this find? Think again! It's all about the competitive marketplace - it has to.. Think OPEC just might be funding the environmentalists?

Got your attention/ire up yet? Hope so!

Now, while you're thinking about it .... and hopefully P.O'd, do this:

3. Pass this along. If you don't take a little time to do this, then you should stifle yourself the next time you want to complain about gas prices .. because by doing NOTHING, you've forfeited your right to complain.

Now, I just wonder what would happen in this country if every one of you sent this to every one in your address book.

This is all true. Check it out at the link below. GOOGLE it or follow this link. It will blow your mind.

Earth mantle can supply future oil: Study

Tue, 28 Jul 2009 18:14:48 GMT
http://www.presstv.com/detail.aspx?id=1018...ctionid=3510208

New studies have shown that future oil supplies could be provided by chemical reactions between water and minerals in earth's mantle.

The Carnegie Institution of Washington say that methane can be transformed into the common components of crude oil (butane C4H10 and propane C3H8) when heated up to 1200°C and put under the pressure of over 100 kilometers of solid rock.

"We were surprised at how easily we got this result," ABC Science quoted researcher Dr. Alexander Goncharov as saying.

"It shows that hydrocarbons can be formed at a depth of between 70 and 150 kilometers. If there are large enough cracks in the crust, pressure will push this material close enough to earth's surface for it to be extracted," he added.

The common theory is that the oil we use today has been formed from the preserved remains of prehistoric zooplankton and algae, compressed in layers of sediment and heated.

Although the new study opens up new possibilities, some experts still stick to the classical theory of oil formation.

"These latest experiments show without doubt that methane will form heavier hydrocarbons like what you'd find in oil," says Professor Henry Scott of Indiana University South Bend.

"It could renew interest in deep hydrocarbons, but it's not going to overturn our ideas on how oil forms."

Endless oil

Russian research has shown that the Earth doesn't need dinosaurs to produce oil

By Lawrence Solomon
Sunday, September 13, 2009
http://obamboozled.blogspot.com/2009/09/endless-oil.html

Do dead dinosaurs fuel our cars? The assumption that they do, along with other dead matter thought to have formed what are known as fossil fuels, has been an article of faith for centuries. Our geologists are taught fossil fuel theory in our schools; our energy companies search for fossil fuels by divining where the dinosaurs lay down and died. Sooner or later, we will run out of liquefied dinosaurs and be forced to turn to either nuclear or renewable fuels, virtually everyone believes.

Except in Russia and Ukraine. What is to us a matter of scientific certainty is by no means accepted there. Many Russians and Ukrainians — no slouches in the hard sciences — have since the 1950s held that oil does not come exclusively, or even partly, from dinosaurs but is formed below the Earth's 25-mile deep crust. This theory — first espoused in 1877 by Dmitri Mendeleev, who also developed the periodic table — was rejected by geologists of the day because he postulated that the Earth's crust had deep faults, an idea then considered absurd. Mendeleev wouldn't be vindicated by his countrymen until after the Second World War when the then-Soviet Union, shut out of the Middle East and with scant petroleum reserves of its own, embarked on a crash program to develop a petroleum industry that would allow it to fend off the military and economic challenges posed by the West.

Today, Russians laugh at our peak oil theories as they explore, and find, the bounty in the bowels of the Earth. Russia's reserves have been climbing steadily — according to BP's annual survey, they stood at 45 billion barrels in 2001, 69 billion barrels in 2004, and 80 billion barrels of late, making Russia an oil superpower that this year produced more oil than Saudi Arabia. Some oil auditing firms estimate Russia's reserves at up to 200 billion barrels. Despite Russia's success in exploration, most of those in the west who have known about the Russian-Ukrainian theories have dismissed them as beyond the Pale. This week, the Russian Pale can be found awfully close to home.

In a study published in Nature Geoscience, researchers from the Royal Institute of Technology (KTH) in Sweden and the Geophysical Laboratory of the Carnegie Institution of Washington joined colleagues at the Lomonosov Moscow State Academy of Fine Chemical Technology in publishing evidence that hydrocarbons can be produced 40 to 95 miles beneath the surface of the Earth. At these depths — in what's known as Earth's Upper Mantle — high temperatures and intense pressures combine to generate hydrocarbons. The hydrocarbons then migrate toward the surface of the Earth through fissures in the Earth's crust, sometimes feeding existing pools of oil, sometimes creating entirely new ones. According to Sweden's Royal Institute, "fossils of animals and plants are not necessary to generate raw oil and natural gas. This result is extremely radical as it means that it will be much easier to find these energy sources and that they may be located all over the world."

The Institute's lead author, Vladimir Kutcherov, Professor at the KTH Department of Energy Technology, is even more brash at the implications of his findings: "With the help of our research we even know where oil could be found in Sweden!" he delights. Kutcherov's technique involves dividing the world into a fine-meshed grid that maps cracks (or migration channels) under the Earth's crust, through which the hydrocarbons can bubble up to the surface. His advice: Drill where the cracks meet. Doing this, he predicts, will dramatically reduce the likelihood of dry wells. Kutcherov expects the success rate of drillers to more than triple, from 20% to 70%, saving billions in exploration costs while opening up vast new areas of the planet — most of which has never been deemed to have promise — to exploration.

The Nature study follows Kutcherov's previous work, published in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, that created hydrocarbons out of water, calcium carbonate and iron — products in the Earth's mantle. By superheating his ingredients in a pressure chamber at 30,000 times atmospheric pressure, simulating the conditions in the Earth's mantle, Kutcherov's alchemy converted 1.5% of his concoction into hydrocarbons — gases such as methane as well as components of heavier oils. The implication of this research, which suggests that hydrocarbons are continuously generated through natural processes? Petroleum is a sustainable resource that will last as long as Planet Earth.

As I finished reading Joe Vialls Article, I was curious about a couple of things.

I wondered whether the same American Export Import bank provided the financing for the deep well drills at the same time when the Kama River 'truck plant' was being built between 1965 and 1975?

And if the Export Import Bank did provide the financing for the deep well drills, was Knight of Malta William Casey running that bank at the time; and was John Lehman, the Secretary of the Navy during Iran-Contra and of Johnathan J Pollard fame, also working with Casey at time?

I was also curious whether the Iran-Contra Affair played a significant role in promoting the pseudo theory of 'peak oil'?

Here are some of William Casey's Connections. Boy they are Interesting.

QUOTE

Sources: June 29, 1997, The Independence, 'Aitken dropped by the Right's secret club; Is it the ultimate dishonour' (named as once a regular)

Irish-American catholic from Queens, born in 1913. Graduated from the Jesuit Fordham University in New York in 1934 and St. John's University School of Law in 1937. Also attended the Catholic University of America. After law school, he joined the Research Institute of America in Washington. Chairman of the board of editors of the Research Institute of America 1938-1949. Joined the Navy in 1943. In 1943, William Donovan, founding head of the OSS, hired Casey to organize the OSS secretariat. After that, he was sent to London and was soon managing the infiltration of Allied agents into Nazi Germany from there. At one point he had 150 agents reporting directly to him from occupied Europe. These included Richard Helms, like Casey, a later director of the CIA; and John Singlaub, a later Army general deeply involved in anti-communist warfare. Allen Dulles, William Colby, James Jesus Angleton, and David Bruce were among his OSS colleagues during WWII. December 17, 1986, Chicago Sun-Times, '...perhaps, but secrecy is vital to foreign policy': ""Great secrecy was necessary," Winston Churchill told a cheering Parliament, as he revealed the first Nazi surrender at the close of World War II, capitulation in Italy. It followed months of top-secret talks between German commanders and Office of Strategic Services "spy master" Allen Dulles, later the celebrated director of the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency. Historians have suggested that Dulles' triumph, code-named Operation Sunrise, was diplomatically flawed, that excluding the Soviets from those meetings - for the sake of secrecy - triggered the initial distrust between Allies that led to the Cold War. But in [March] 1945, few Americans would have doubted that ending the fighting was worth a spat with "Uncle Joe" Stalin. Sunrise was a milestone in the annals of U.S. secret intelligence, marking the start of that postwar crypto-diplomacy twilight zone where secret agents often supplant striped-pants ambassadors. And William J. Casey was there, privy to the secret as one of the best and brightest of young OSS executives. Now, 40 years later, he is the latest of Dulles' unenviable successors as head of the CIA." After the war, Casey was offered senior jobs in U.S. intelligence, but turned them down because he thought he should establish his financial independence first. Developed his publishing business and thrived as a tax lawyer, making a personal fortune estimated at between $8 and $12 million, and earning a reputation as a corporate dealer willing to take almost any risk if the potential return was worth it. Published a series of about 20 books explaining the intricacies of complex legislation. Special counsel of the small business committee of the U. S. Senate 1947-1948. Associate general counsel at the European headquarters of the Marshall Plan 1948. Jean Monnet from France (and initial member of Le Cercle) was one of the key players here. Lecturer tax law New York University 1948-1962. Lecturer Practicing Law Institute of New York City 1950-1962. Co-founder of Capital Cities in 1954, together with Thomas E. Dewey, who went from crime fighter to crime backer (Lucky Luciano & Meyer Lansky). Another founder of Capital Cities was Lowell Thomas, who was a close friend and business contact of CIA director Allen Dulles. Thomas reportedly was also connected to Lansky's mafia. Capital Cities grew so powerful that it was able to buy the entire ABC TV network in 1985, which was ten times as big. Casey supposedly still had a significant interest in the company through a blind trust created when he became CIA director in 1981. Cap Cities/ABC was bought in 1996 by Walt Disney, who changed its name back to ABC. Partner in Hall, Casey, Dickler & Howley 1957-1971. Founded the National Strategy Information Center in 1962, with alleged CIA links, to push for increased military spending. Member General Advisory Committee on Arms Control 1970-1971. Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission 1971-1973. April 29, 1974, Time, 'Their Own Best Witnesses': "John Mitchell, 60, the former U.S. Attorney General, and Maurice Stans, 66, the former Secretary of Commerce, had in a measure won their gamble-though not necessarily their cases. They had indeed been their own best witnesses against the Government's charges that they had plotted to gain special favors in Washington for Financier Robert Vesco, 38, in exchange for the moneyman's secret $200,000 cash contribution to Richard Nixon's 1972 presidential campaign... It simply never occurred to him, insisted Mitchell, that Vesco had given the $200,000 in order to get help in his struggle with the Securities and Exchange Commission (which eventually charged Vesco and 41 associates with perpetrating a $224 million stock fraud)... Mitchell freely admitted, as the prosecution charged, that after Vesco's donation was received he set up a meeting between the financier's lawyer and William Casey, then head of the SEC." Undersecretary of State for Economic Affairs 1973-1974. Member of the Council on Foreign Relations since the 1970s. Member of the Atlantic Council of the United States. President of the Export-Import Bank of the U.S. 1974-1975. Member President Ford's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board 1974-1976. Member of the in 1976 revived Committee on Present Danger, a reactionary anti-communist think tank that included people like John F. Lehman, Clare Booth Luce, Paul H. Nitze, Richard Perle (friend of Brian Crozier, head of Le Cercle at that time), Richard Pipes, (a later associate of Crozier), Eugene Rostow, Admiral Elmo Zumwalt (former Chief of Naval Operations), George Shultz, Richard Stilwell (Le Cercle), Richard Allen, Jeane Kirkpatrick, and David Packard. Co-founder of the Jamestown Foundation in 1984, together with the Cercle member Donald Jameson. The Jamestown Foundation's purpose was to protect and sponsor a group of high-level international defectors as they travelled the United States speaking out against the tyranny of communism. Today, the Jamestown Foundation has three program areas: China, Russia/Eurasia, and Terrorism, and counts the involvement of Glen Howard (SAIC; DoD; National Intelligence Council; Mid-East and Central-Asia oil consultant), James Woolsey, Zbigniew Brzezinski (attended at least one Le Cercle meeting), Dick Cheney, and Frank Carlucci. Counsel at Rogers & Wells 1976-1981, the law firm that represented Wackenhut. Outside legal advisor to Wackenhut during this time. Campaign manager of Ronald Reagan in 1980. Robert Keith Gray, chair of Hill & Knowlton, the all-powerful (described by critics as a "secret government") Washington-based lobbying firm, was deputy director of communications in Reagan's 1980 presidential campaign. Gray reported directly to Casey. Sen. John DeCamp, 'The Franklin Cover-Up,' second edition, p.178-179: "Said to be Harold Anderson's [chair Larry King's Franklin Credit Union advisory board and part of Larry King's Nebraskan homosexual, pedophile, and ritual sacrifice ring] closest friend in Washington," Gray is also reportedly a specialist in homosexual blackmail operations for the CIA. Gray's own sexual proclivities were the subject of an article in the July-August 1982 issue of the The Deep Backgrounder, entitled "Reagan Inaugural Co-Chairman Powerful 'Closet Homosexual'?" The Deep Backgrounder tabloid featured exposes of homosexual networks in Washington, D.C.; its contributing editor was former CIA official Victor Marchetti. During the Watergate era, Robert Keith Gray served on the board of Consultants International, founded CIA agent Edwin Wilson [of Shackley's secret team]. When Wilson and fellow agent Frank Terpil got caught running guns abroad, Gray tried to deny his connection with Wilson. "Yet ten years before," according to Peter Maas' book Manhunt, "in a top secret Navy review of Wilson's intelligence career, Gray described Wilson as a person of 'unqualified trust,' with whom he'd been in contact 'professionally two or three times a month' since 1963." Sen. John DeCamp goes on to quote from the book 'Secret Agenda' of Jim Hougan: "According to fugitive ex-CIA officer Frank Terpil, CIA-directed sexual blackmailing operations were intensive in Washington at about the time of the Watergate scandal. One of those operations, Terpil claims, was run by his former partner, Ed Wilson. Wilson's base of operations for arranging trysts for the politically powerful was, Terpil says, Korean agent Ton Sun Park's George Town Club. In a letter to the author, Terpil explained that 'Historically, one of Wilson's Agency jobs was to subvert members of both houses [of Congress] by any means necessary... Certain people could be easily coerced by living out their sexual fantasies in the flesh... A remembrance of these occasions [was] permanently recorded via selected cameras... The technicians in charge of filming. . .[were] TSD [Technical Services Division of the CIA]... The unwitting porno stars advanced in their political careers, some of [whom] may still be in office." Besides Terpil, affidavits written and signed by Col. Edward P. Cutolo (assassinated) and special forces soldier William Tyree (in jail for murdering his wife. Cutolo - his boss -, and others, confirm Tyree was framed) confirm part of this story. Cutolo and Tyree talked about Operation Watch Tower, one of the many government-sanctioned drug-importing operations (from Escobar's Colombia to Noriega's Panama, over sea), and Operation Orwell, which was a specific program to spy on politicians and other important people to make sure A) that no outsiders were aware of Operation Watch Tower B) that the Army would have advance warning if anyone might want to expose the operation, and C) that some dirt could be gathered on those who might some day be in a position to expose Operation Watch Tower. Edwin Wilson was Cutolo's and Tyree's superior officer. Cutolo said something highly interesting in his affidavit: "I was notified by Edwin Wilson that the information forwarded to Wash. D.C., was disseminated to private corporations who were developing weapons for the Dept. of Defense. Those private corporations were encouraged to use the sensitive information gathered from surveillance on U.S. Senators and Representatives as leverage to manipulate those Congressmen into approving whatever costs the weapons systems incurred... As of the date of this affidavit, 8,400 police departments, 1,370 churches, and approx. 17,900 citizens have been monitored under Operation Orwell. The major churches targeted have been Catholic and Latter Day Saints [Mormons]... Per orders from Edwin Wilson, I did not discuss the implementation of Operation Orwell with my staff or others outside of the personnel assigned to surveillance. The only matter discussed with Operation Orwell personnel was what the SATs needed to know in order to carry out their mission. Certain information was collected on suspected members of the Trilateral Commission and the Bilderberg group... Among those that information was collected on were Gerald Ford and President Jimmy Carter. Edwin Wilson indicated that additional surveillance was implemented against former CIA director George Bush, who Wilson named as a member of the Trilateral Commission. I do not have personal knowledge that Ford, Carter, or Bush were under surveillance." According to the affidavit, Wilson was involved in parallel operations with people like Thomas Clines, Robert Gates and William Casey. Col. Cutolo expressed his concerns to superiors that Wilson was talking too much. A few years later Wilson ended up in jail. Cutolo ended up dead. Ton Sun Park, the owner of the George Town Club where Wilson ran his sexual blackmail scheme, was an associate of radical cult leader Sun Myung Moon. October 31, 1978, a report printed for the use of the Committee on International Relations, 'Investigation of Korean-American Relations': "During 1976, the subcommittee also received information about an apparent attempt by Moon and his followers--along with Tong-sun Park--to buy a controlling interest in the Diplomat National Bank (DNB), which opened in Washington D.C., in December 1975. Neil Salonen, president of the UC of America, was called to testify concerning this and other allegations. Salonen said he had bought DNB stock at the suggestion of Pak Bo Hi, but denied the UC was in any way involved in financing the DNB stock purchases." Moon has been a major anti-communist activist and is connected to all the reactionary elements within this movement, most notably those involved with the World Anti-Communist League. These include Cercle members Count Hans Huyn and Otto von Habsburg in Bavaria, Germany, Paul Vanden Boeynants in Belgium, and Arnaud de Borchgrave, Rev. Jerry Falwell, George Bush, John Singlaub, and many others in the United States. Moon has also been tied to sexual blackmail rings. December 20, 2002 issue of Executive Intelligence Review (EIR), 'The 'No Soul' Gang Behind Reverend Moon's Gnostic Sex Cult': "The sex is a specialty of Moon's own Gnostic "family" cult. Remember the Congressional Madam scandals of the 1970s, featuring Tong Sun Park and Suzy Park Thomson? That was just the tip of the iceberg of "The Reverend" Moon's sexual-favors operation. Military intelligence officers who investigated Unification Church operations in Washington in the 1970s and '80s, report that the recruitment device used on ranking, conservative political and military officials was to hold weekly orgies, arranged by Col. Bo Hi Pak, the Unification Church official who was a top officer of the Korean Central Intelligence Agency (KCIA). The special treat at these affairs were the "Little Angels"—Korean schoolgirls brought over by Moon as a singing group. The photo files from these sessions are reported to be a powerful influence in certain circles to this very day." DeCamp again, p. 179-180: "Gray's associate Wilson was apparently continuing the work of a reported collaborator of Gray from the 1950's—McCarthy committee counsel Roy Cohn [of Permindex, according to EIR; and connections to Fascist International in Europe since the early 1950s], now dead of AIDS. According to the former head of the vice squad for one of America's biggest cities, 'Cohn's job was to run the little boys. Say you had an admiral, a general, a congressman, who did not want to go along with the program. Cohn's job was to set them up, then they would go along. Cohn told me that himself.' The first president of Tong Sun Park's George Town Club, where Wilson's sexual blackmail operations were reportedly run, was Robert Keith Gray. The first president of Tong Sun Park's George Town Club [in Washington], where Wilson's sexual blackmail operations were reportedly run, was Robert Keith Gray. Gray maintained his intelligence connections during the Reagan Administration, according to an affidavit filed... by Daniel Sheehan for the Christic Institute. The affidavit states that when CIA chief Casey, national security adviser Robert McFarlane, and NSC staff member Lt. Col. Oliver North were devising a method to circumvent a congressional ban on arming the Contras, they turned to Gray and Company. Gray employee Rob Owen set up a private group to solicit funds for the Contras. Owen was called before Congress, to testify on how he delivered bags of cash to the Contras [in return for the dope?]. In February 1989, Hill and Knowlton's Charles Perkins rushed to New York, for a fraction of the firm's usual fee, to help with public relations for Covenant House. The youth organization's director, Father Bruce Ritter, was alleged to have molested youth who took refuge with him." Larry King (not the one from CNN), the person who headed the Nebraskan pedophile, homosexual, and ritual sacrifice ring, greatly admired Casey. September 7, 1988, interview of the Metropolitan with Larry King (as quoted by Sen. John DeCamp in his book 'The Franklin Cover-Up,' second edition, p.175): "I know some of the people I admire aren't very popular. Ed Meese. The late Bill Casey of the CIA. And I love former Chief Justice Burger [Pilgrims Society]. Those are the people I really like to talk to. Bill Casey... I just thought so very highly of him." On page 327 and 329, Sen. John DeCamp, who has claimed he is barred from discussion large portions of the Franklin Affair case, adds some more context: "Larry King, FBI agent Gerry Wahl, Alan Baer, Harold Andersen, and former Omaha Police Chief Robert Wadman have all been reported as collaborators with this Satanic military-based ring. King reportedly told Paul's captors at Offutt, "He's young-but you trained him good." A member of Nebraska's Concerned Parents group reported hearing from two North Omaha witnesses that "King used to send limousines down to Offutt Air Base to pick up CIA agents for parties." Larry King reported his own adoring relationship to the late CIA Director William Casey in a Sept. 7, 1988, interview in the Omaha publication Metropolitan... Paul Bonacci reports the following "Monarch"-related activities, often involving his "Commander" at Offutt AFB, Bill Plemmons, and Lt.

Col. Michael Aquino..."Although most people who attended Larry King's parties, were not aware of his pedophile network, Casey seems to awfully close involved with this person and some of the accused. In fact, his working partner George Bush Sr. (Julie Walters report, p.12; DeCamp adds "This was not the last time that the name of George Bush would surface in the Franklin affair") has been named as a member of the homosexual pedophile ring while Reagan's daughter was also close to King. DeCamp, p. 55: "It was the most impressive party I had ever witnesses... The attendance by top politicians was remarkable... At the center of the excitement was Larry King. Draped over him like a blanket throughout the evening was a heavyset woman, who I learned was Maureen Reagan, the president's daughter... I got to wondering... how does he do this supposedly on a salary of $16 thousand a year?" The Franklin Credit Union scandal (which laundered money for the CIA) broke in November 1988. Within a year, in June 1989, a new scandal broke with close ties to the Franklin Credit Union and Larry King's pedophile/homosexual/ritual sacrifice network. Craig J. Spence, who seemed to have had the same clandestine job as Larry King, albeit in Washington instead of Nebraska, was investigated for illegally having organized a midnight White House tour and for running a pedophile/homosexual extortion network. Casey is known to have attended parties of Spence. Also, later on, Spence would have remarked just before his death that "Casey's boys" were after him. June 30, 1989, Washington Times, 'Power broker served drugs, sex at parties bugged for blackmail': "Craig J. Spence, an enigmatic figure who threw glittery parties for key officials of the Reagan and Bush administrations, media stars and top military officers, bugged the gatherings to compromise guests, provided cocaine, blackmailed some associates and spent up to $20,000 a month on male prostitutes, according to friends, acquaintances and records... The man, a business associate of Mr. Spence who was on the White House tour [arranged by Spence and attended by two male prostitutes], said: "He was blackmailing people. He was taping people and blackmailing them."... After arriving in Washington in the late 1970s, Mr. Spence was hosting parties during the early Reagan years attended by, among others... former CIA Director William Casey [and] Gen. Alfred M. Gray [named by Kay Griggs as one of the top players in a network of criminal covert ops and sexual blackmail], the commandant of the Marine Corps... The businessman said this week that he did not know exactly what work Mr. Spence did, but that he often bragged about his contacts with Japanese businessmen and political leaders, particularly Mr. Nakasone. He described Mr. Spence as "strange," saying that he often boasted that he was working for the CIA... The businessman also said he attended a birthday bash for Roy Cohn at Mr. Spence's house. He said Mr. Casey was at the party." Roy Cohn, as an aide to Senator Joseph "reds under the bed" McCarthy, was accused in the early 1950s as an associate of the post-WWII Fascist underground of Skorzeny, Schacht, and Naumann while visiting Europe. Cohn, together with some members of the Fascist International, was later named by EIR as an initial director of Permindex, a corporation set up in 1958 which is suspected of having been a front organization in the planning of the John F. Kennedy assassination. As mentioned earlier, Cohn supposedly "ran the little boys". Arnaud de Borchgrave is also known to have attended a party at Spence's house. De Borchgrave, an intelligence-connected anti-communist radical and good friends with Sun Myung Moon, is a descendant of an obscure Belgian noble family. An unknown member of this family has coincidentally been named by one of the Belgian X-File witnesses, who came out in the aftermath of the Dutroux affair. Count Alexandre de Marenches, a good friend of Casey and Vernon Walters, is a cousin of the De Borchgrave family. November 13, 1989, Washington Times, 'In death, Spence stayed true to form': "Craig J. Spence, the once-powerful lobbyist who entertained and influenced Washington's elite, died Friday... On a mirror in Room 429 of the Ritz Carlton Hotel, Mr. Spence on Friday left his final enigma in the form of a suicide note... During the past few weeks, Mr. Spence told several friends that the call-boy operation was being investigated by the U.S. Attorney's Office and other federal authorities as a possible CIA front. He told the friends that the CIA used the service to compromise other federal intelligence officials and foreign diplomats... One friend quoted him as saying, "Casey's boys are out to get me," an apparent reference to former CIA Director William Casey, now deceased. Mr. Casey and Mr. Spence were friends, and the former CIA director attended parties hosted by the former lobbyist... During a lengthy interview at a Manhattan apartment in August, Mr. Spence frequently alluded to deep mysteries. "All this stuff you've uncovered (involving call boys, bribery and the White House tours), to be honest with you, is insignificant compared to other things I've done. But I'm not going to tell you those things, and somehow the world will carry on." February 2, 1990, Washington Times, 'Prostitutes corroborate Frank stories': "Penthouse magazine's anxiously awaited account of sexual adventuring by congressmen quotes a female prostitute as corroborating Steven L. Gobie's earlier story that Rep. Barney Frank knew Gobie was operating a bordello in the congressman's Capitol Hill apartment... The magazine [Penthouse] said Mr. Spence had agreed to "provide lurid details of Washington's bisexual wonderland." But before the interview could occur, Mr. Spence committed suicide in Boston on Nov. 10... According to Gobie, Mr. Spence told him, "Do you know what kind of power you can have over people if you've got something on them? . . . I need boys and girls for people in government and high-level businessmen for my parties, for individuals, for whatever comes up." The magazine quoted Gobie as saying Mr. Spence was "the most dangerous man I'd ever met. If he hadn't turned into such a crackhead, he could have blackmailed half this town. He used to say, 'Hey, foreign intelligence agencies are doing it.'" Casey is known to have visited Bohemian Grove camp Mandalay around 1980. Important adviser to Reagan 1981-1987. Director CIA 1981-1987. In the early 1980s, Casey was able to funnel almost $200,000 to Brian Crozier, the former head of Le Cercle who undermined the Labour government of Harold Wilson, for his 61 efforts. Crozier met with Casey, a member of Le Cercle, on several occasions during this time period. Casey and Oliver North supposedly never told Crozier about the Iran Contra affair, or drug imports for that matter. Spartacus Schoolnet: "On 16th March, 1984, William Francis Buckley, a diplomat attached to the U.S. Embassy in Beirut was kidnapped by the Hezbollah, a fundamentalist Shiite group with strong links to the Ruhollah Khomeini regime. Buckley was tortured and it was soon discovered that he was the CIA station chief in Beirut. Buckley had also worked closely with William Casey in the secret negotiations with the Iranians in 1980. Buckley had a lot to tell his captors. He eventually signed a 400 page statement detailing his activities in the CIA. He was also videotaped making this confession. Casey asked Ted Shackley for help in obtaining Buckley's freedom... The following month, Ted Shackley traveled to Hamburg where he met General Manucher Hashemi, the former head of SAVAK's counterintelligence division at the Atlantic Hotel... At the meeting Shackley told Hashemi and Ghorbanifar that the United States was willing to discuss arms shipments in exchange for the four Americans kidnapped in Lebanon. The problem with the proposed deal was that William Francis Buckley was already dead (he had died of a heart-attack while being tortured). Ted Shackley recruited some of the former members of his CIA Secret Team to help him with these arm deals." Besides arms shipments in return for the hostages, the Republicans of the Reagan team, including Casey and Bush Sr., also arranged with the Iranians to have the hostages released after the US elections, as this would almost certainly guarantee that Jimmy Carter would lose. This scandal would be called the October Surprise. Rodney Stich, 'Those Ugly Americans: 20th and 21st Centuries', p. 108 & 137: "One of the key meetings [of Iran Contra and the October Surprise conspiracy] occurred at the PepsiCo International Headquarters building in Barcelona, Spain in late July 1980. One of my CIA sources was present with Casey at that meeting, arranging for procurement and shipment of the arms from various European locations to Iran via Israel. The final meeting occurred in Paris on the October 19, 1980, weekend... Salinger described his conversations with respected American journalist, David Andelman, who was the ghostwriter of the 1992 memoirs of Alexandre de Marenches, French spy chief [and friend of Gen. Vernon Walters; and like Casey and Walters, a member of SMOM; Arnaud de Borchgrave is related to one of De Mareches' Belgian cousins]. At Salinger's request, Andelman asked Marenches about the alleged Paris meetings involving Casey and Bush. Salinger wrote in his book, "Andelman came back to me and said that Marenches had finally agreed [that] he organized the meeting, under the request of an old friend, William Casey.... Marenches and Casey had known each other well during the days of World War II. Marenches added that while he prepared the meeting, he did not attend it." Andelman testified to this admission before the House October Surprise task force in December 1992, but as with other creditable witnesses, this testimony was ignored so as to deny the existence of this crime." Casey modeled himself on the likes of Allen Dulles and John McCone (Bohemian Grove camp Mandalay), who ran things in the 1950s and early 1960s before serious questions were raised about the morality of covert action on a global scale. He thought Walter Bedell Smith, Allen Dulles, John McCone, Richard Helms, and George Bush were all great CIA directors. Bobby Ray Inman (director ONI; director DIA; director NSA; director Wackenhut; director SAIC) was his deputy director at the CIA in 1981 and 1982. He resigned in 1982 after a heated dispute with Casey (and Sharon) about limiting Israel's access to satellite data from locations over 250 miles from Israel itself. Inman was afraid that Israel would set the Middle-East on fire and Caspar Weinberger (Pilgrims Society executive in late 1980s and 1990s) supported this notion. According to Watergate journalist Carl Bernstein, Casey gave Pope John Paul II unprecedented access to CIA intelligence, including spy satellites and agents. In a 2006 interview Inman claimed that Casey intensely disliked George Bush, Sr. In 1981, Casey was called upon to co-ordinate the Polish Crisis where the Solidarity movement had risen up against the Soviet regime. This movement was largely organized by Opus Dei and funded through Calvi's (and Pesenti's) Banco Ambrosiano (according to Calvi, to the tune of $1 billion over several years). As a member of the Sovereign Military Order of Malta, Casey immediately decided to fly to Rome, together with co-SMOM members general Alexander Haig (Pilgrims Society executive) and general Vernon Walters. Unfortunately for Casey, he was under investigation by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence and couldn't go. Instead, he send Vernon Walters who visited the Vatican about a dozen times in the next five months. Walters arranged for Reagan to meet the Pope in June 1982. During the same time, Alexander Haig and William Clark were conferring with Cardinal Casaroli (Pro-Opus Dei, if not a member; Vatican Secretariat of State during the 1980s; seen by Calvi as one of his enemies and Calvi supposedly had "compromising documents" on him; appointed the "three wisemen" in July 1982 to "investigate" the Vatican Bank's dealings with Calvi's Banco Ambrosiano. Among the three was former UBS chair and white collar criminal Philippe De Weck) and Archbishop Achille Silvestrini (under-secretary of Casaroli) in another part of the Vatican. Casey couldn't attend these meetings too, as Israel had just invaded Lebanon. On other occasions Casey would rarely visit Europe or the Middle-East without first stopping in Rome for a meeting with the Pope. Casey loved to take foreign policy advise from Cardinal John J. Krol, Archbishop of Philadelphia; Cardinal Terence Cooke of New York, the successor of Cardinal Francis Spellman and the Grand Protector and Spiritual Advisor of the Military Order of Malta; Archbishop (later Cardinal) Pio Laghi, former the Vatican's top man in Buenos Aires. All of these Cardinals were strong Opus Dei supporters. Casey, with support of the Vatican, harnessed radical Islam to counter the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. This way he hoped to contain the Soviets in the Hindu Kush mountains while the radical Muslims would be too busy to turn on some of the Middle-East dictators sponsored by the West. He convinced the Saudis to largely bankroll this operation. Under Casey the CIA supplied the Mujahedin with 30mm anti-tank guns, .50 caliber sniper rifles (provided with a self-destructive round if the gun was to be left behind), special forces Parapoint systems, Stinger anti-aircraft missiles, and training courses by ISA and Delta Force special forces. With the British MI6 and Pakistani ISI, the CIA agreed to mount guerilla actions in Tajikistan and Uzbekistan. The Afghan opposition leader with whom these operations were coordinated was Gulbuddin Hikmetyar. Casey also committed the CIA to support an ISI operation that recruited Muslims from all over the world to come to Pakistan and fight with the Mujahedin in Afghanistan. December 13, 2003, The Guardian, 'Smart money' (a combined review of Loretta Napoleoni's 'Modern Jihad: Tracing the Dollars Behind the Terror Networks' and Jeffrey Robinson's 'The Sink: Terror, Crime and Dirty Money in the Offshore World'): "William Casey, Reagan's CIA chief, used Pakistan and its BCCI bank as fronts to train Afghan rebels against the Soviets. Covert operations required a "black network" within the bank and its state equivalent, the notorious ISI. The bank financed and brokered covert arms deals, complete with full laundry service. The short and logical step from there was a BCCI/ISI/CIA move into drug smuggling to feed the needy, and leaky, money pipeline to the Mujahedin. The Pakistan-Afghan connection became the biggest single supplier of heroin to the US, meeting 60% of demand, with annual profits a stratospheric $100-$200 billion." The BCCI was set up by Agha Hasan Abedi of the obscure and elite 1001 Club, mainly tied to the financial interests in London. The shady MI6 operative, Privy Counsellor, and Cercle chairman Julian Amery was an advisor to the BCCI. His protege Jonathan Aitken, the follow-up chair of Le Cercle, has been accused of massive illegal arms with the Saudis. 2002 (third edition), John Cooley, 'Unholy Wars', p. 110-111: "With President Reagan and CIA Director William Casey, a new era began. On January 21, 1982, the US Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) which had largely avoided drug matters, was plunged squarely into them. Attorney-General William French Smith announced that the FBI, instead of the DEA, would henceforth control anti-drug campaigns inside the United States. This effectively ended hitherto secret cooperation between the two services. It moved the DEA, which was struggling to control drug trafficking both inside and from outside the United States, further away from the main power centers in the Afghanistan war: President Reagan's National Security Council (NSC) and Casey's CIA. Casey was now able secretly to engineer an exemption, sparing the CIA from a legal requirement to report on drug smuggling by CIA officers, agents or other "assets." Attorney Smith granted exemption in a secret memorandum on February 11, 1982, two months after President Reagan had authorized covert CIA support for the Nicaraguan anti-Communist Contra army. Investigative work in Washington in the late 1990s has disclosed that Casey realized that the CIA would face a serious legal dilemma if federal law continued to require it to report drug smuggling by its agents. On March 2, 1982, Casey thanked Smith for the exemption which, Casey wrote, helped to protect intelligence sources and methods. After many details of CIA knowledge, if not control, of large-scale cocaine traffic from South America became public, President Clinton's administration in 1995 quietly rescinded the CIA narcotics exemption. The Contra-cocaine issue arose again in 1996 with investigative articles by a reporter for a California newspaper. Despite CIA denials, the Agency's inspector-general, Frederick P. Hitz, compiled a two-volume investigative report. He admitted that the CIA did indeed know about Contra drug trafficking and covered it up. The second volume reportedly was even more damning for the CIA, but at this writing it hasn't been released." 2002 (third edition), John Cooley, 'Unholy Wars', p. 108-110: "All close observers of the war knew that the drug smugglers carried weapons into Afghanistan and took drugs back with them. Heroin laboratories began to spring up in the rear of the various Afghan battle-fronts... The Soviet account quotes the American Left-liberal magazine, Rolling Stone, reporting on a powerful narcobusiness network, including vast new fields of opium poppies on both sides of the Afghan-Pakistan border, created during the jihad. It was “complete with well-planned routes and a whole network of dozens of factories” to process the opium into morphine base and heroin. “Western experts” [names and nationalities unspecified] supervised creation of the labs in camps of Gulbuddin Hekmatyar’s [very radical and an associate of Bin Laden] group. However -and here, interestingly, the Russian view of the wartime drug traffic diverges from the Western one — “the real ‘King of Heroin,’” said Shvedov’s Russian team, “is considered to be Gaylani who has far surpassed Hekmatyar in narcobusiness and controls the overwhelming majority of the operations of the opium mafia.” The CIA, the Russians added, was working closely with both Hekmatyar and Gaylani... Sayad Ahmed Gaylani, called “Effendi Juan” by compatriots, headed the NIF [National Islamic Front of Afghanistan]. He was a wealthy Afghan aristocrat, supporter of the exiled king, Zahir Shah. Gaylani had a strong bent for business. In 1952 he married a woman of the royal dynasty, the Durranis. He wisely invested profits from holding the sales franchise for Peugeot cars in Kabul. At the same time, he kept the religious prestige attached to his descent from the Qadiriya brotherhood, one of the mystic Sufi orders of South Asian Islam... The Soviet intelligence report on Gaylani’s NIF found that it “has significant financial resources. Besides the aid from various foundations in the USA, Western Europe and Arab countries, it makes profit on selling drugs and exacting taxes from the population."" Gailani is, an American-educated commander, is one of more than a dozen Mujahedin rebel groups in Afghanistan. He's a Pashtun royalist seeking the return of King Mohammed Zahir Shah, who is in exile in Rome. September 30, 2001, Star Tribune, 'Drug trade filled coffers of Taliban, Bin Laden group': "Alfred McCoy, a professor of Southeast Asian history at the University of Wisconsin, said U.S. and Pakistani intelligence officials sanctioned the rebels' drug trafficking because of their fierce opposition to the Soviets. Gulbuddin Hekmatyar, a rebel leader who received $1 billion in covert CIA funds, was a major heroin trafficker, according to McCoy. Afghan opium production ballooned from 250 tons in 1982 to 2,000 tons in 1991." Earlier, it is known that the CIA, in collaboration with other US intelligence groups and special forces, was importing hundreds of tons of heroine in the US from the Golden Triangle in Shan Land, Burma. The money was largely laundered through the Nugan Hand Bank in Australia. Ted Shackley, Richard Armitage, and mafia boss Santos Trafficante were as those that handled the heroin coming from the Golden Triangle. William Colby, Casey, George Bush, and again Shackley were named in the Nugan Hand Bank affair. The far less well known follow-up of the Nugan Hand Bank was Bishop, Baldwin, Rewald, Dillingham and Wong (BBRDW). Rodney Stich, 'Those Ugly Americans: 20th and 21st Centuries', p. 342 & 343: "In March 1996, I acquired several boxes containing hundreds of CIA documents generated from the CIA’s secret operation in Hawaii, and within these boxes I found highly sensitive material, including notes that Rewald had made while the titular head of BBRDW. Certain notes and information provided to me by Rewald divulged CIA drug related activities, including drug money laundering. As I gathered from looking over the material and by talking with Rewald, he was unaware of much of the CIA activities originating out of BBRDW... Deeply imbedded in these documents was an envelope labeled “Lawyer- Client information.” The information was dynamite, divulging secret activities, including CIA drug trafficking, and CIA funding of secret overseas bank accounts for high U.S. officials. The information in this envelope included information from the “Green Book” that the CIA sought to get from Rewald while he was in the hospital recovering from the combination suicide and assassination attempt. The notes in the envelope listed high-level people with secret CIA-funded accounts. The names on the left side of the notes were the aliases Rewald used to identify the people on the right for which there were secret bank accounts opened and funded by the CIA through BBRDW.... Irwin M. Peach [=] George Bush... Mr. Bramble [=] George Bush... Mr. Branch [=] Richard Armitage... Mr. Denile [=] William Casey... Rewald‘s notes also indicated that fictitious names were used to hide money for B.K. Kim, Philippines’ President Ferdinand, and Imelda Marcos, among others." Rodney Stich, 'Those Ugly Americans: 20th and 21st Centuries', p. 340: "In November 1984, CIA Director William Casey complained to the Federal Communication Commission about the ABC television network for having aired a show featuring CIA agent Scott Barnes. In the television presentation Barnes said he was asked by two CIA agents in Honolulu to kill Ronald Rewald. This airing had the danger of revealing the CIA role in BBRDW and could expose an endless number of other covert CIA proprietaries and operations..." June 29, 1999, Michael Ruppert, 'Don't Blink!': "ABC's Peter Jennings, by the way, had been doing a series of investigative reports on the CIA drug bank (and successor to the Nugan Hand bank) Bishop, Baldwin, Rewald, Dillingham and Wong [BBRDW] when the buyout was initiated. Cap Cities (not surprisingly) secured SEC approval in record time and effectively and immediately silenced Peter Jennings who had previously refused to back down from Casey's threats. Thereafter ABC was referred to as "The CIA network." I have no doubt that the ABC "object lesson" was front and center for CNN founder Ted Turner and Time-Warner when Henry Kissinger, Colin Powell and (CIA vet) John Singlaub put the pressure on in the wake of April Oliver's 1998 "dead bang accurate" Sarin gas stories connecting CIA to the killing of American defectors." Rodney Stich, 'Those Ugly Americans: 20th and 21st Centuries', p. 326: "Parker said that [Michael] Hand [of Nugan Hand Bank] and Vice President George Bush were in frequent contact after Bush became vice president, and while Australian authorities were searching for Hand. Parker stated that CIA Director William Casey frequently met with Hand in Panama in the early 1980s concerning arms sales and drug trafficking. Parker stated that he and Hand took over one of the drug trafficking operations for the CIA in Central and South America. He said that Hand’s experience in developing the Golden Triangle drug operations for the CIA made him useful in expanding the drug operations from Central and South America into the United States...." Casey, like his CIA predecessors, worked closely with drug smuggler Manuel Noriega (trained at the School of the Americas, a US-based assassination school) from Panama and the different cocaine/ heroine cartels, like Medellin and Cali. The profits were used for all kinds of black ops. January 28, 1990, Washington Post, 'The Case Against Noriega': "On Monday, November 14, 1983, Noriega's entourage took off for Washington... all expenses paid by the U. S. government. Almost two whole days, however, were set aside for the institutions that already had long-standing working relations with Noriega. At CIA headquarters in Langley, Noriega was swept off for a meeting with CIA Director William Casey. Back in Panama, Noriega would later boast about his four-hour lunch with Casey..." In 1988, Noriega fell out of favor in Washington after some disputes about drug and arms profits. Therefore the US invaded Panama and brought Noriega to trial on drug trafficking charges. Some important revelations were made during this trial. September 4, 1991, Washington Post, 'Noriega Defense Team Vows to Detail Secret U.S. Deals': "More than 20 months after he was toppled by a U.S. invasion, Manuel Antonio Noriega will go to trial on drug trafficking charges in federal court Thursday, and his defense lawyers vow to disclose new details about the former Panamanian dictator's secret dealings with the Central Intelligence Agency and high-level U.S. government officials... Court papers filed here describe Noriega as the CIA's "man in Panama" whose activities were conducted with the full consent and knowledge of the U.S. intelligence community for more than two decades... No written records tie Noriega directly to drug trafficking, prosecution sources said. But 60 to 80 government witnesses -- many of them convicted drug traffickers, arms dealers and other felons -- are expected to testify that he took multimillion-dollar payoffs from the Medellin drug cartel to turn his country into a "safe haven" for shipment of cocaine from Colombia to the United States... But most importantly, the motion describes Noriega's pivotal role in assisting CIA efforts to arm Nicaraguan contra guerrillas. Without citing new evidence, it calls that effort a "guns-for-drugs" policy in which drug-sale proceeds were used to finance shipment of arms to the contras. In addition, the filings -- with heavy deletions from the security officer -- allude to two meetings with Bush in 1976 and 1983 and numerous others with such figures as the late CIA director William J. Casey and former National Security Council aide Oliver L. North." August 23, 1991, The Miami Herald, 'Noriega: CIA, DEA OKd Deals': "Manuel Noriega says he had good reasons for allowing drugs and guns to slip through Panama: The last seven CIA directors, including George Bush, asked him to help with the guns, while four directors of the Drug Enforcement Administration sought his help on the drugs... The weapons shipments were destined for Nicaragua and Honduras, the papers said. Besides Bush, the CIA directors who asked Noriega to allow them to travel through Panama included Richard Helms, William Colby, James Schlesinger, Stansfield Turner, William Casey and William Webster... The DEA directors who purportedly asked Noriega to allow drugs to pass through his country included Terrance Burk, Francis Mullen, Jack Lawn and John Ingersoll... Diane Cossin, a spokeswoman for the U.S. attorney's office, said the prosecution will present evidence that links Noriega's BCCI money and drugs." June 24, 1985, Miami Herald: "Also involved in the anti-Sandinista [Contra] effort are several of Reagan's millionaire friends including beer tycoon Joseph Coors and industrialist J. Peter Grace... Grace spokesman Fred Bona said his boss "may have" asked the Central American chapters of the 900-year-old Knights of Malta order to help distribute privately collected humanitarian aid among Nicaraguan refugees. Grace heads the group's U.S. chapter. Former Treasury secretary William Simon and CIA Director William Casey also belong to the Knights of Malta. Simon and Grace declined comment on whether they had ever discussed with Casey alternate ways to help the contras. Simon heads the Nicaraguan Freedom Fund, a private aid group initially launched by the Unification Church-owned [Moonies] newspaper The Washington Times which received a letter from President Reagan dated May 30, 1985, expressing "wholehearted" support for its activity on behalf of the contras... While the contras get humanitarian aid from these groups, they rely mainly on retired Army Maj. Gen. John Singlaub and his World Anti-Communist League for private military aid." Celerino Castillo, 'Powderburns - Cocaine, Contras, & the Drug War': "The American Public would quickly lose interest in the Iran Contra scandal... Had they discovered our government hired and protected a squad of drug traffickers, and they gave them free passes into the U.S., the story might have ended very differently... My informants were perfectly placed... They fed me the names of Contra pilots. Again and again, those names showed up in the DEA database as documented drug traffickers. When I pursued the case, my superiors quietly and firmly advised me to move on to other investigations... I'll never forget Corr's [U.S. ambassador to El Salvador] response. "It's a White House operation, Cele. Stay away from it."" Cele, a high level DEA agent, was assigned to represent the DEA in El Salvador at the height of the Contra war. It was there that he began to record intelligence on how known drug traffickers, with multiple DEA files, used hangars four and five at Ilopango airfield to ferry cocaine north and weapons and money south. Hangars four and five were owned and operated by the CIA and the National Security Council. He found out that the traffickers were also being given US visas by the CIA, in spite of their well known activities. Castillo also documented and spoke out about CIA and National Security Agency abuses in a manner utterly consistent with his heritage and the reats of his life. Then Cele discovered that the Contra flights were under the direct supervision of US Lt. Col. Oliver North and had the additional protection of Felix Rodriguez (a retired CIA agent) who ran hanger 4 at Ilopango. Castillo was repeatedly warned that the drug profits were being utilized to support the Reagan-Bush backed right-wing "Contras" in Nicaragua and surrounding countries and that he should stop his investigations. December 1998, Michael Ruppert, 'Only the Godfather': "... a lingering and persistent body of evidence persists which indicates that Jim Sabow was murdered because he caught the CIA flying drugs onto a base where he was Chief of Air Operations. Much of the evidence indicates that the cocaine arrived on the same C-130s which had been given to the Forest Service. In a 1993 segment of her news program Eye to Eye, Connie Chung covered the Sabow death in detail and showed evidence of the murder by introducing statements from Sabow's brother, a medical doctor, that Sabow had been unconscious and aspirating blood for minutes before a shotgun was rammed so far down his throat that it sheared off the uvula. In that same segment, veteran Air America and CIA pilot Tosh Plumley stated that he flew loads of cocaine as large as 2,000 kilos onto El Toro in the years and months prior to Sabow's death - for the CIA. Plumley stated clearly that he was flying C-130s operated by the Forest Service and their contractors. In later conversations with this writer Plumley admitted that he routinely flew loads as large as 2,500 kilos onto military installations in California and Arizona for the CIA." 1991, Bo Gritz (ISA commander and Delta Force), 'Called to Serve', p. 341: "I remembered the time in Panama in 1976, when I was commanding Special Forces in Latin America from headquarters at Fort Gulick in the Canal Zone. We had obtained information through our intelligence channels that Manuel Noriega was not only allied with the communists, but was also a drug smuggler. I recommended - and we had the means - to terminate Noriega "with extreme prejudice," since he was clearly hurting America and was behind the sabotage of our military facilities within the Canal Zone. Surprisingly enough, I was personally told to keep my hands off Noriega, that he was "of immense value at the highest levels of our government." July 23, 1998, Michael Ruppert, 'The POWs, CIA and Drugs': "The ISA, which ran Gritz's mission, was created by Army General Richard Stilwell. It has been repeatedly linked to drug smuggling by sources including the daughter of Col. Albert Carone who served as Oliver North's bagman and bill-payer during the eighties. Records left behind after Carone's death in 1990 and eyewitness statements clearly indicate that Carone handled both drugs and drug money for CIA, North and the NSC. Carone's personal phone book contains the home addresses and telephone numbers of William Casey [Le Cercle], Gambino crime boss Pauly Castellano and Stilwell [Le Cercle]." 2004, Michael Ruppert, 'Crossing the Rubicon', p. 164: "A retired NYPD Detective, also a “made” member of the Genovese crime family, Carone spent his entire working career as a CIA operative... For more than 25 years before his mysterious death in 1990, Al Carone served as a bagman and liaison between George Bush, CIA Director Bill Casey, Oliver North, Richard Nixon [Le Cercle] and many other prominent figures including Robert Vesco [1001 Club], Manuel Noriega and Ferdinand Marcos." Carone, a member of the Knights of Malta, was good friends with Santos Trafficante, Sam Giancana, Vito Genovese, and William Casey. Casey used Carone as a "cut out" to pass sensitive insider information to Mob capo Pauley Castellano, says his daughter, Dee. Carone was the bagman for Casey and Oliver North in many of their drug trafficking exploits. Casey was deeply involved in the BCCI, the bank whose extreme money laundering practices were exposed in 1991. 1992, Senator John Kerry and Senator Hank Brown, Report to the Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate, part 11: "In the case of BCCI, former CIA officials, including former CIA director Richard Helms and the late William Casey; former and current foreign intelligence officials, including Kamal Adham and Abdul Raouf Khalil; and principal foreign agents of the U.S., such as Adnan Khashoggi and Manucher Ghorbanifar, float in and out of BCCI at critical times in its history, and participate simultaneously in the making of key episodes in U. S. foreign policy... On February 23, 1992, NBC News broadcast the allegation that former Director of Central Intelligence William Casey met secretly for three years with Abedi [1001 Club; head of the BCCI], that such meetings took place every few months at the Madison Hotel in Washington, D.C., and that they discussed matters relating to U.S. arms deals to Iran and the arming of Afghani rebels... The BCCI official explicitly described meetings between Casey and Abedi at the Madison Hotel in the mid-1980's... The late Cyrus Hashemi, an Iranian expatriate living in London, is a key figure in the "October Surprise" allegations charging that William Casey and other members of President Reagan's election team in 1980 engaged in negotiations with Iran, whereby Iran would delay the return of U.S. hostages held in Iran until after the November, 1980 election, in return for the U.S. providing Iran with needed arms for its war against Iraq." A legal case brought before the District Court of Washington, D.C. in 1983, 12 citizens of Nicaragua and 12 members of the U.S. Congress sued President Reagan, CIA Director William Casey, former Secretary of State Alexander Haig, Secretary of State George Shultz, Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Thomas Enders, Vernon Walters, Caspar Weinberger, Nestor Sanchez, and John Negroponte for violations of the law respecting U.S. support of the Contras. After being dismissed, the case was appealed to the Court of Appeals. The judge who filed the opinion on Aug. 13, 1985 affirming the dismissal was then Circuit Court judge and now U.S. Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia (spoke at the Bohemian Grove). Casey is reported to have been a good friend of George Shultz, Vernon Walters, Alexandre de Marenches, and Ronald Reagan. In his book 'The Conspirators' Al Martin claims that CZX Productions, which supposedly stood for "Casey, (adm.) Zumwalt, X-Files", was an Office of Naval Intelligence cut-out and one of the blackest parts of the Iran Contra dope affair. True or not, doing a bit of background checking (only one reference has turned up), it turns out that Dietrich Reinhardt, a shady Iran-Contra operative now connected to the flight school of Rudi Dekkers (dope-trafficking terrorists), was a partner in that firm. Martin also claims CZX and Casey made Oliver North head of the "National Programs Office," whose existence still is not confirmed. The NPO supposedly controlled much of the dope trafficking operations, the building of the US "Civilian Inmate Labor Camps", and the operations to some day overthrow the US government. Admiral Zumwalt, an associate of Casey since the 1970s and a major anti-communist warhawk, is part of a secret ONI group called "Goal Oversight Development" (GOD), according to Martin. No proof or other rumors exist about this group, but according to Martin GOD has/had almost unlimited powers to intimidate and assassinate people. December 17, 1986, The Times Union, 'CIA chief listed stable': "Casey, 73, continued to undergo diagnostic tests designed to determine the cause of two minor cerebral seizures he suffered Monday, the hospital said. Casey had been scheduled to testify Tuesday before the Senate Intelligence Committee on the arms sale to Iran and the diversion of proceeds to the Nicaraguan rebels... Earlier, CIA spokeswoman Kathy Pherson said agency officials who talked with Casey on Monday found him "lucid and pretty cheerful" and "joking with the nurses."... Casey remained mentally clear throughout the episodes, a hospital doctor said." December 30, 1986, San Jose Mercury News, 'Casey's condition is stable': "CIA Director William Casey continues to recover at Georgetown University Hospital where he underwent surgery Dec. 18 for the removal of a cancerous brain tumor, a spokeswoman said today... Hospital spokeswoman Cynthia Byers said Casey's condition remains stable and he is "fully conscious and sitting up periodically."" In January 1987 the operation was deemed successful, but it turned out he had other cancers that were spreading to other parts of his body (supposedly, he was already a year under treatment for prostate cancer). He died in May 1987 of pneumonia, a few weeks after Congress had begun looking into Casey mental health to determine if he could testify from his bed. In reaction to his death, Senator Patrick Leahy, the former vice chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, said: "Casey probably knew more than anyone about the Iran-Contra affair, with the possible exception of fired White House aide Oliver North... And of course that we'll never know, because he didn't really tell us much about it before he died." July 11, 1987, San Jose Mercury News, 'Plan labeled 'Government within our government': "William Casey, the late CIA director, seized upon the Iran arms dealings as a way to create a secret contingency fund to finance a wide range of covert operations outside regular government channels, Lt. Col. Oliver North told Congress Friday. Sen. Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, termed the scheme a "secret government within our government," and Sen. William Cohen, R- Maine, said the disclosure was "perhaps the most serious revelation" of the 2-month-old hearings into the Iran-Contra affair... North rejected the characterization of Senate committee chief counsel Arthur Liman that the operations were a "CIA outside of the CIA." But House Intelligence Committee Chairman Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, told reporters "that's what it amounted to," and charged that a main reason for the scheme was a desire to avoid any oversight by Congress." In 1996 the neocon Center for Security Policy (CSP) created a compartment named William J. Casey Institute. It was tasked with studying "the nexus between international financial, energy, trade and technology flows and traditional U.S. national security policy concerns." Just one week before Casey got his seizures (he was already dying of cancer) he allegedly wrote an affidavit, with Cercle member Nixon as his witness, that in part outlined the CIA's involvement in the drug trade to finance covert ops. He also gave his justifications for it (which basically constituted a big "fuck you" to Congress and everyone else who might not agree) and certainly didn't forget to mention Bill Clinton's role in it (while forgetting the role of all his political allies, or other groups within the government). The document was leaked to the daughter of Albert Carone and has since then been classified Top Secret. According to Mike Ruppert, the document is factually correct, but it could still be a fake.

French Prove Gulf War Syndrome Caused by "Cocktail" Inoculations

Many years ago before gaining access to the Internet, I wrote a report about the most likely causes of Gulf War Syndrome. The report slowly moved around the world by snail mail, and was eventually published in four small magazines. Then I forgot all about the report for a few years, because the nightmare symptoms being suffered by Gulf War veterans in America and Britain, seemed light years away from my sleepy little backwater in Western Australia.
That was before George W. Bush decided to do the whole thing all over again, in his increasingly frantic and very public attempts to pillage Middle East oil for Wall Street.

Though I am obviously powerless to prevent Bush from ruthlessly sacrificing American lives in the Iraqi desert, I can at least sound a warning designed to minimize the physical and psychological impact on servicemen before they leave for the Gulf, and after they hopefully return.

There is no doubt that the panic generated by the false “War on Terror” is already being used to coerce people into accepting “preventative medical treatment”, that in a more sane world they would instantly refuse. Most profitable by far for the pharmaceutical multinationals backing the Bush Dynasty, are inoculations forced onto service men and women by legislation. Taking the dreaded “Anthrax Shots” as an example, the manufacturer makes a net profit of $18.00 out of every single individual, a figure that has to be multiplied by 2.4 million to get a true feel for multinational profit margins.

It is a harsh fact that the Anthrax vaccine being forcibly administered to service men and women today, is the same as that included in the deadly Gulf War “cocktail” inoculations of 1990-1991. This has no meaning whatever for politicians who habitually bend forward over a desk when their masters approach from behind, but it might have some meaning for you. In the event that the multinationals manage to spark a “civil emergency” somewhere near your own home, be advised that you too will be forced to accept exactly the same untested but hugely profitable vaccine as military personnel bound for the Persian Gulf.

The direct relationship between the Anthrax shots of today and the “cocktail” of yesterday is deeply troubling, and is the prime reason for reviving, editing, and adding to this 1995 report. You might find part of the text disturbing, which is probably a very good thing. It is difficult to protect your family from government-induced harm if you are not completely alert.

“During late 1995, devastating new evidence on Gulf War Syndrome was released, providing undeniable hard scientific proof for those who have long suspected that Gulf veterans are suffering short and long-term effects of unproven anti-bacteriological warfare inoculations and anti-nerve gas tablets, forcibly administered by U.S. Army doctors in Saudi Arabia.

With thousands of U.S. veterans suffering from Gulf War Syndrome, it came as no surprise to learn in October 1995 that several hundred British veterans were suffering in the same way, with three to five new cases being reported every week. Like their U.S. counterparts, most were puzzled by the origins of the disease, which they initially attributed to oil-laden smoke in Kuwait, toxic dust from depleted uranium rounds fired by U.S. weapons, and possible contamination from expended Iraqi chemical shells in the area, fired before the Gulf War commenced.

In a startling break with tradition, one British military doctor stated that in her view, 99% of the problems could be sourced back to the anti-bacteriological warfare "cocktail" inoculations, and anti-nerve gas tablets forcibly administered to military personnel in the Gulf region at that time. In an October 1995 broadcast of the ITN TV World News from London, she further explained that all British military personnel had been provided with the same untested and unproven drugs as the Americans, from U.S. medical sources. To reinforce the point, the doctor explained that the number of British personnel suffering symptoms correlated exactly on a per capita basis with U.S. personnel. It was a controversial claim, but apparently lacking in substance.

Shattering confirmation came eleven hours later, when Australian Channel 10 television carried exactly the same story at 5 p.m., but with an extra piece tagged onto the end. The extra piece claimed that French military personnel in the Gulf region, numbering the same as the British contingent, had been prevented from taking the "cocktails" and tablets on the direct orders of the French Commander-in-Chief. The story claimed that since the end of the Gulf War, not a single member of the French military has suffered from Gulf War Syndrome, or reported any of its symptoms. One hour later at 6 p.m. when the other Australian television networks ran their news broadcasts, the awesome story with its stunning proof had vanished from sight. Nor was it reported in the Australian newspapers.

For any scientist or veteran, the fact that the French should be completely clear of Gulf War Syndrome while the Americans and British suffered huge numbers of cases verified on a direct per capita basis, has huge and horrifying implications. After all, the French ate the same food, drank the same water, breathed the same air and trudged through hundreds of miles of the same desert. They also fired similar weapons at similar targets.

So what were the additional factors that made the French unique in their ability to completely withstand the deadly Gulf War Syndrome? The truth is there were none at all, save for the experimental American "cocktail" inoculations and nerve gas tablets. What the French had done, almost by accident, was provide hard scientific proof of the direct cause of Gulf War Syndrome. This proof took the form of its large 25,000-strong contingent of French servicemen participating n the Gulf War, who in all respects constituted a valid medical “control group”.

For the uninitiated, here is an example of how a “control group” might be used in medical trials: Let us say that the manufacturer of a new “chest hair” drug wants to run a clinical trial to check its efficiency, using 500,000 men. Out of this total, 475,000 [Americans and Brits] are given the real “chest hair” pill, while the remaining 25,000 [French] are used as a control group and given only a placebo, i.e. an identical looking sugar-coated pill with no active ingredients. If at the end of the trial all men with enhanced chest hair were found in the main group, with not a single case in the control group, the new “chest hair” drug would immediately be approved by medical authorities. It really is that simple. Applying the same process in reverse, proves in definitive medical terms that untested Anthrax and botulism potions kill far more servicemen than enemy gunfire.

In an attempt to confirm this vital though very short-lived Gulf War Syndrome data, the author contacted the French Military Attaché in Australia and inquired if it was correct that the French Commander-in-Chief forbade his own personnel the untested substances. The Military Attaché was happy to confirm this, and also confirmed that not one French soldier or airman has suffered since the end of the Gulf War. It seemed to be a subject of which he was very proud, and rightly so. Perhaps it is time for U.S. and British veterans to confirm the same points with their local French consulates, before taking a very hefty legal swing at their own governments."

On 3 October 1996, nine months after this report was first published in two small American magazines, and then brought to the attention of the White House, the prestigious New York Times suddenly added a new dimension [and thus a possible new cause for Gulf War Syndrome]. According to the newspaper, an Iraqi chemical weapons dump at Kamisiyah was bombed extensively by U.S. jets before the ground campaign, meaning soldiers could have been exposed before their assault. The New York Times did not attempt to explain why this news was being reported five years after the event, nor why it was suddenly so important to bring the matter to the attention of the American public.

Once again, affected veterans and the public settled down into a confused silence, their suspicions blunted by media-induced patriotic guilt. How dare they even imagine that caring American pharmaceutical multinationals would hurt them or their families, when all along the real culprit was obviously Saddam Hussein and his evil "weapons of mass destruction"? The Kamisiyah "link" to Gulf War Syndrome was ruthlessly exploited, with official Pentagon confirmation that the dump itself was finally destroyed on 4 March 1991 by the 37th Engineering Battalion, who "did not know" that nerve gas was stored there when they triggered the demolition charges. So, victims and public alike were coaxed into believing that American and other troops located downwind of the demolition, had been affected solely by "Iraqi" toxins.

It was truly brilliant media propaganda, but failed to take into account those incredibly annoying Frenchmen, who seemed to be everywhere in southern Iraq at the same time as the Americans and British. Proportionately speaking, the same number of "French Control Group" troops were present when Kamisiyah was bombed and finally demolished, but not one of them suffered or even reported any of the effects of "Gulf War Syndrome". And before you ask, yes, the French did indeed trudge wearily through the same areas of southern Iraq littered with depleted uranium 238 as the Americans and British. But still there is absolutely no trace of Gulf War Syndrome in any French soldier.

It does not take a rocket scientist to work out where this report is heading. Just look at the hard facts and ignore the pathetic lobby, media, and academic hype. As already discussed, all coalition troops regardless of nationality shared the same air and water, they all walked or drove over the same terrain, and they all used similar weapons against similar targets. But what about external body protection? Did the French have vastly superior biowarfare suits that somehow magically gave them "the edge" over American and British personnel? No, they did not. The biowarfare suits worn by the French, came from exactly the same stock as those worn by the Americans and British. The only variables left at this point in the report, are the untrialled "cocktail" inoculations and the nerve gas tablets.

Under heavy media pressure in late October 2000, the retired commander of French forces in the Gulf, General Michel Roquejoffre, admitted that his men were in fact ordered to take nerve gas tablets [pyridostigmine bromide] during the Gulf War, but only for four days when mistakenly believed to be under direct chemical attack. The General pointed out that this four days of intermittent French exposure to nerve gas tablets, contrasts sharply with their continuous use for months on end by American and British servicemen. However, General Roquejoffre emphasized that at no time did he allow any French serviceman to receive the highly controversial untrialled American “cocktail” inoculation.

Rather than help the media in its never-ending quest to lay misleading smoke screens around the true origins of Gulf War Syndrome, General Roquejoffre appears to have used his statement to finally isolate and expose the real villain behind the debilitating and sometimes lethal disease. Having “admitted” that some of his troops took the nerve gas tablets during the Gulf War, General Roquejoffre has wittingly or unwittingly removed the nerve gas tablet variable, leaving only the lethal American “cocktail” inoculation, which included the untested Anthrax vaccine being irresponsibly peddled today by assorted western politicians, as the sole and scientifically proven cause of Gulf War Syndrome.

British Servicemen Throw Deadly Anthrax Vaccine Overboard!

On 4 January 2003 a confidential copy of my updated report on the single cause of Gulf War Syndrome was sent directly to a number of military computer servers in America, Britain and Australia. With servicemen already being ordered to submit to a debilitating or lethal dose of untrialled and unproven Anthrax "vaccine" directly linked to GWS, it seemed wise to ensure that they saw the work before it was officially posted on the Internet. Web sites can be attacked all too easily, and a number of mine have been totally destroyed in the last six months.
Not long after Prime Minister Tony Blair arrogantly waved goodbye to 30,000 British servicemen departing England for the Persian Gulf aboard a fleet of Navy vessels, locals in Dorset and Devon started reporting a very strange phenomenon.
Thousands of [unused] vials of Anthrax Vaccine started washing up on their beaches. Some locals started panickng, thinking that perhaps they were being attacked by a country or countries known to have vast stockpiles of this ruthless killer - most notably America and Israel. But their heart rates came down again when Health Departmernt officials visited the areas and explained the thousands of vials on the beaches were in fact "cures in bottles".
Jim Moore, a spokesman for the National Gulf Veterans and Families Association (NGVFA), said his organization has no conclusive proof that the vaccine vials that washed up in Dorset, southern England, were thrown overboard. But Moore noted that the circumstances surrounding the vaccine find are suspicious.
"For anything to be accidentally washed overboard on an aircraft carrier is highly unusual," he said. "This gives us cause for concern and there are a lot of questions that need to be asked."
The organization said it has heard anecdotal evidence of mistiming of vaccines from current service personnel. The NGVFA believes that improperly administered vaccines might be one of the causes behind "Gulf War Syndrome," a mysterious collection of symptoms that is thought to afflict tens of thousands of veterans in Britain and the United States.

"People say you accept the risks when you sign up to join the forces," Moore said. "That's true, but the risk you accept is one of an enemy bullet or a landmine. You don't accept the risk of being a guinea pig for a vaccine, All the mistakes made in the Gulf War are being made again."
A Ministry of Defense spokeswoman, speaking on condition of anonymity, said that an internal investigation into the vaccine find was underway."We wouldn't like to speculate on where the vaccine might have come from at this stage," she said. "There has been a large amount of speculation in the press and this isn't helpful. The investigation will uncover the source of the vaccine."
Peering judiciously behind the official veil, of course reveals that the only sources for the thousands of "shipwrecked" Anthrax vaccine vials were the various naval vessels that had earlier sailed reluctantly for the Persian Gulf on direct political orders.
So the British servicemen have found a way to neutralize the second most deadly danger to their lives. Now all they have to do, is to figure out a way to neutralize the most clear and present danger ever to threaten their families and themselves: Prime MinisterTony Blair

District of Columbia, United States of America, December 22, 2003

Federal Judge Emmet Sullivan Issues Temporary Injunction Against The Use of Anthrax Vaccine

In a landmark 34-page ruling on Civil Action No. 03-707 (EGS) in the District Court of Columbia, Federal Judge Sullivan has enjoined defendents Donald H. Rumsfeld et al from inoculating members of the American armed services with Anthrax vaccine, without their prior written consent. Sullivan's decision hinged on the fact that Congress, after the 1991 Persian Gulf War, passed a law banning the use of experimental drugs on military personnel without their informed consent.
The case was filed in April by "John Does" - reportedly, three military personnel and three government contractors who objected to the vaccine. There is little doubt they had good reason to do so. Claims of "safety" by the pharmaceutical manufacturers are negated by court documents, which prove that instead of the "0.2 percent side-effect rate" claimed on advisory brochures supplied to servicemen and women embarking on active duty, actual adverse reaction rates vary between 5.0 percent and a staggering 35.0 percent.
There is no way the extremely profitable pharmaceutical multinationals can dodge this one. At best, serious risks to service personnel are twenty-five times higher than 'advised' in writing, and at worst they are one hundred and seventy-five times higher than they 'advised' in writing. It is reasonable to ask who is going to pick up the health care costs of the [median] 40,000+ American service personnel who will suffer severe disabililty at some time in the future, because of this blatant deception and forced Anthrax inoculation program.

Most importantly, Judge Sullivan wrote, ""The men and women of our armed forces put their lives on the line everyday to preserve and safeguard the freedoms that all Americans cherish and enjoy. Absent an informed consent or presidential waiver, the United States cannot demand that members of the armed forces also serve as guinea pigs for experimental drugs."
At this juncture in history it is wise to ask whether obscene pharmaceutical profits for 'shareholders' was the only reason for forcing these debilitating inoculations on healthy young American service personnel. After all, by its own actions banning the use of experimental vaccines in 1991, Congress tacitly admitted that the Gulf War "Cocktail" inoculations were in large part responsible for Gulf War Syndrome.
The proof of this is simple. Despite deliberately misleading and confusing media claims that the main culprit for GWS was depleted uranium, American forces still carry and fire this noxious substance by the ton. Congress did not pass a law limiting the carriage and use of depleted uranium to those with "informed consent", nor at any time did Congress blame GWS on Iraq's "Weapons of Mass Destruction", which we now know do not exist. The "Cocktail" inoculations were the only possible candidates, and were banned by law. The problem lies in the fact that Congress does not promulgate orders for the U.S. Military. This important task is eagerly carried out by crazed neocons including Cheney, Wolfowitz and Perle, none of whom have substantial share holding in the pharmaceutical multinationals, and all of whom know the side and long-term effects of both the Gulf War cocktails and Anthrax vaccine.
Logic therefore dictates that there must be another, more compelling reason to cripple very large numbers of the American military. There certainly is, and the real reason for this pre-meditated grevious bodily harm and manslaughter, will be fully explained in Part Two of "Fortress Americas", due to be published late December or early January.

Million TIMES More Squalene In H1N1 Vax Than Caused GWI !!

Rense.com Exclusive
From Gary Jacobucci
8-25-9

Dr. Laibow's presentation on squalene during the second hour of your program last night, 8-24, was impressive. In looking for some verification of the 'million-times more squalene' than was in 'Vaccine A' that caused the catastrophic Gulf War I Illness (which ruined the lives of hundreds of thousands of troops and killed thousands of others -ed), I came across this article...

What's The Danger of Swine Flu Vaccinations?
By Dr. Anders Bruun Laursen

"...So, as you see, there is no confusion with regard to swine flu and bird flu viruses. But there is another important consideration: the role of squalene.

The average quantity of squalene injected into the US soldiers abroad and at home in the anthrax vaccine during and after the Gulf War was 34.2 micrograms per billion micrograms of water. According to one study, this was the cause othe Gulf War syndrome in 25% of 697.000 US personnel at home and abroad. (3). You can find this table of FDA analyses from the Gulf War lots on The Military Vaccine Resource Directory website (4) a.. AVA 020 - 11 ppb squalene (parts per billion)

b.. AVA 030 - 10 ppb squalene
c.. AVA 038 - 27 ppb squalene
d.. AVA 043 - 40 ppb squalene
e.. AVA 047 - 83 ppb squalene

These values were confirmed by Prof. R. F. Garry (5) before the House of Representatives. Prof Garry was the man to discover the connection between the Gulf War syndrome and squalene.

According to his findings, the Gulf War syndrome was caused by squalene, which was banned by a Federal Court Judge in 2004 from the Pentagons use. (6)

As seen on p. 6 of this EMEA document (7), the Pandremix vaccine contains 10,68 mg of squalene per 0,5 ml. This corresponds to 2.136.0000 microgrammes pr. billion microgrammes of water, i.e. one million times more squalene per dose than in (4). There is any reason to believe that this will make people sick to a much higher extent than in 1990/91. This appears murderous to me."

Then, in looking for some confirmation on Novartis putting gp 120 (an HIV/AIDS protein) in their vaccines, I found the following...

The Vaccine May Be More Dangerous Than Swine Flu

By Dr Russell Blaylock

http://socioecohistory.wordpress.com/2009/...ssell-blaylock-vaccine-may-be-more-dangerous-than-swine-flu/

"...Novartis, the second contender, also has an agreement with WHO for a pandemic vaccine. Novartis appears to have won the contract, since their vaccine is near completion. What is terrifying is that these pandemic vaccines contain ingredients, called immune adjuvants that a number of studies have shown cause devastating autoimmune disorders, including rheumatoid arthritis, multiple sclerosis and lupus.

Animal studies using this adjuvant have found them to be deadly. A study using 14 guinea pigs found that when they were injected with the special adjuvant, only one animal survived. A repeat of the study found the same deadly outcome.

So, what is this deadly ingredient? It is called squalene, a type of oil. The Chiron company, maker of the deadly anthrax vaccine, makes an adjuvant called MF-59 which contains two main ingredients of concern-squalene and gp120. A number of studies have shown that squalene can trigger all of the above-mentioned autoimmune diseases when injected.

The MF-59 adjuvant has been used in several vaccines. These vaccines, including tetanus and diphtheria, are the same vaccines frequently associated with adverse reactions.

I reviewed a number of studies on this adjuvant and found something quite interesting. Several studies done on human test subjects found MF-59 to be a very safe immune adjuvant. But when I checked to see who did these studies, I found-to no surprise-that they were done by the Novartis Pharmaceutical Company and Chiron Pharmaceutical Company, which have merged. They were all published in "prestigious" medical journals. Also, to no surprise, a great number of studies done by independent laboratories and research institutions all found a strong link between MF-59 and autoimmune diseases.

Squalene in vaccines has been strongly linked to the Gulf War Syndrome. On August 1991, Anthony Principi, Secretary of Veterans Affairs admitted that soldiers vaccinated with the anthrax vaccine from 1990 to 1991 had an increased risk of 200 percent in developing the deadly disease amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS), also called Lou Gehrig's disease. The soldiers also suffered from a number of debilitating and life-shortening diseases, such as polyarteritis nodosa, multiple sclerosis (MS), lupus, transverse myelitis (a neurological disorder caused by inflammation of the spinal cord), endocarditis (inflammation of the heart's inner lining), optic neuritis with blindness and glomerulonephritis (a type of kidney disease).

The second ingredient, and one that greatly concerns me, is called gp120, a glycoprotein. Researchers found when it was mixed with squalene, the glycoprotein became strongly antigenic - that is, it produced a powerful and prolonged immune response to the vaccination. In fact, their studies show that with each dose, the intense immune reaction lasts over a year.

Now for the shocker-the glycoprotein-gp120, a major component of MF-59 vaccine adjuvant, is the same protein fragment isolated from HIV - the virus that is responsible for the rapid dementia seen in AIDS patients.

Studies have shown that when gp120 is taken up by the microglia cells in the brain, it causes intense inflammation and makes the brain subject to excitotoxic damage-a process called immunoexcitotoxicity. This is also the cause of the MS and optic neuritis associated with vaccines that contain MF-59.

So, how would the gp120 get into the brain? Studies of other immune adjuvants using careful tracer techniques have shown that they routinely enter the brain following vaccination. What most people do not know, even the doctors who recommend the vaccines, is that most such studies by pharmaceutical companies observe the patients for only one to two weeks following vaccination-these types of reactions may take months or even years to manifest.

It is obvious that the vaccine manufacturers stand to make billions of dollars in profits from this WHO/government-promoted pandemic. Novartis, the maker of the new pandemic vaccine, recently announced that they would not give free vaccines to impoverished nations-everybody pays.

One must keep in mind that once the vaccine is injected, there is little you can do to protect yourself-at least by conventional medicine. It will mean a lifetime of crippling illness and early death.

There are much safer ways to protect oneself from this flu virus, such as higher doses of vitamin D3, selective immune enhancement using supplements, and a good diet." End of excerpt by Dr. Blaylock.

Did America Sabotage Airbus Flight 961?

When part of the rudder on Air Transat Flight 961 apparently 'fell off' the aircraft 30 minutes north of Cuba, the captain requested an emergency landing at the nearest suitable airport, which was Fort Lauderdale International. Then inexplicably and in violation of international aviation treaties and law, America refused, forcing the crippled Canadian jet to return to Cuba.

It is more than a little convenient for Boeing that the crash of American Airlines 587 in New York, and the near-crashes of Transat 236 and 961 in Cuba and the Azores, all permitted the media to hysterically point the finger at advanced carbon fiber composites used by Airbus but not by Boeing. If foul play was involved in these incidents, the subliminal suggestion appears obvious: All Americans should fly in thirsty old-fashioned riveted American Boeings, the airborne equivalents of US

Before we wade into the distinct possibility of direct American sabotage of European Airbus aircraft in general, first get one essential fact straight in your head, and get it straight right now: Pilots are not politicians, and they do not play political games in emergency situations at 35,000 feet. The actions of aircrew in emergency situations like losing part of the rudder or elevator, are well-rehearsed and virtually automatic, including terse messages to the passengers during the emrgency, attempting to explain the inexplicable.

Such was the case as Canadian Air Transat Flight 961 headed north from Cuba to Canada on March 6, when the aircraft suddenly went into a steep dive without warning. Though the Captain managed to recover, he swiftly discovered that the rudder, part of the vertical stabilizer responsible for turning the aircraft left and right, was not responding to control inputs. Clearly the rudder or vertical stabilizer had suffered significant damage, meaning that the aircraft needed to land as straight ahead as possible, thus avoiding any lateral strain on this essential vertical structure.

The airport best suiting this emergency requirement was Fort Lauderdale International in Florida, but to his astonishment, the American authorities refused him permission for an emergency landing, in direct violation of international law. Continuing another 2,000 nautical miles north to Canada without knowing the level of the damage was impossible, so after conferring briefly with Air Transat headquarters, the captain made the following verbatim announcement on the aircraft public address system, heard by everone on board.

"Ladies and gentlemen, we have a minor problem with the aircraft but the American authorities have denied us landing permission in Florida. We are therefore returning to Cuba and should be landing in about forty minutes." Please note that the use of the word "minor" is normal on the public address system, designed to disguise the severity of the emergency and minimize panic amongst the passengers.

Then the captain very slowly and very carefully reduced his forward airspeed, before commencing a 180 degree turn back towards Cuba, using only his elevators and ailerons. But regarless of how gentle he was, the unnecessary turn he was forced to make as a direct result of the American refusal, placed enormous strain on that piece of the aircraft he already knew to be seriously damaged - the rudder.

Any slight miscalculation during that forced turn, could have exceeded the shear stress limits on the damaged vertical stabilizer, causing complete separation and a chilling death plunge into the Florida swamps for 270 passengers and crew.

Depending on exactly where the Airbus came down, you can confidently add a few dozen or hundred American dead on the ground in Florida, either crushed by falling debris or turned into screaming human roman candles by blazing jet fuel in their own back yards.

This 'terrible tragedy' would then have generated enormousy adverse publicity for Airbus in general, and in particular for the maiden flight of the giant double-decker Airbus A380 'Super Jumbo', scheduled for mid April 2005. But it would have been very good news for Boeing, wouldn't it?

Concorde 4590 was sabotaged in 2000, almost killing the President of France. Story on the Concorde crash is linked at bottom of this

Were it not for the fact that the passengers and crew survived, and are capable of making sworn statements about the American emergency landing refusal, broadcast to them by the captain over the public address system, there would be no proof at all, meaning that someone somewhere thought this sabotage through very carefully. Let me try to explain why.

If shear stress loads werer exceeded and the Florida swamps had suddenly been splattered with thousands of primarily Canadian body parts, the critical Cockpit Voice Recorder (CVR) would have gone crashing into the swamp with those body parts - right in the middle of Florida Governor Jeb Bush's state jurisdiction. Call me cynical, but the CVR would have been officially lost forever, while Boeing executives rushed off a frantic international sales tour to try and save their already doomed corporation.

To sidetrack briefly here, Boeing does not have much time left. In recent times, low sales and even lower future sales prospects, have caused Boeing to shut down its 717 aircraft production line, while a $23 billion air-refueling tanker 'smoke and mirrors' contract with the Pentagon, designed to fraudulently cook the books and mislead investors on Wall Street, has now been cancelled. And remember, when 'flagship' Boeing finally goes down, the rest of the American aerospace industry will follow shortly afterwards.

Getting back to Flight 961, we must consider what would have happened to the evidence if the captain either survived long enough to reach Canadian airspace, or alteratively survived the deadly 180 degree turn and managed to return to Cuba.

The Cockpit Voice Recorder is designed solely to allow investigators to listen in to the last few moments of any flight that crashes. To this end, the CVR (whether analog or digital) runs in a closed 30-minute loop, meaning that anything said or transmitted in the cockpit 31 minutes or more earlier, has already been overwritten with more recent data.

The American authorities already knew that the minimum time required for Airbus 961 to reach an international airport outside the US was 40 minutes (to Cuba), plus a further 7 - 10 minutes to taxi in from the runway and shut down the engines. Thus the American refusal was already overwritten on the 30-minute loop, meaning it would be the Canadian Captain's word against the combined might of the American Federal Aviation Administration.

Well, that was the game plan, but the American authorities had not reckoned on the obviously shocked Canadian Captain announcing the American emergency refusal to more than 250 human witnesses on the aircraft public address system. Now then, are you going to believe 250 honest Canadian passengers (even if they were going to 'Commie' Cuba...), or are you going to believe the folk at the FAA, who still claim that a bunch of failed Muslim Cessna pilots were suddenly converted by Allah into Top Guns, thereby enabling them to aaccurately throw huge clumsy Boeing airliners around the sky like lightweight FA-18 Hornet fighters.

There is no doubt that crashing (or nearly-crashing) commercial airliners are of enormous importance to politicians and other certifiable maniacs in New York. Ever since the Jewish State sent Pan Am 103 plunging into Lockerbie village during 1988 to 'set up' the Libyans for destructive economic sanctions, the wannabee New World Order crowd has recognised the emotional importance of large numbers of blazing humans fluttering to earth in full view of the gullible public. After the breathtaking 'accidental' aviation incident has taken place, the media finger of premeditated guilt is subtly pointed at the nation (or planemaker) designated for punishment or destruction

Pan Am bomb was electronically triggered over Dean Cross in the Lake District Story on Pan Am 103 is linked at bottom of this page

While blaming airliners artistically bombed-up by Mossad on the Arabs became quite fashionable in New York, an even bigger threat loomed on the horizon. If the high-tech European Aerospace industry could not be stopped, in less than fifty years it would completely wipe Boeing and all the other major American planemakers off the map. The visible icon of this European aerospace excellence was the sleek Concorde, flashing east and west across the Atlantic Ocean at Mach 2, while passengers sipped vintage champagne in absolute luxury.

This affront to American aviation could not be allowed to continue, so during 1995-1996 Boeing and NASA plotted how to claw one of these sexy Mach 2 machines out of the air very publicly, thereby proving that European aircraft were 'unsafe'.

This covert American operation was successfully concluded when Concorde 4590 smashed into Gonesse at exactly 14 h 44 min 31.6 s on July 25, 2000, filmed all the way by an American spook parked in a truck with a video camera. This camera enabled the saboteurs to frighten the travelling public 'properly'. As with Pan Am 103, there is no point in deliberately crashing a passenger plane if you cannot then show pictures of gory corpses, and hint at the possibility of stinking charred flesh.

As is pointed out in the long report "Concorde Sabotage" linked at the bottom of this page, this sophisticated and very expensive covert operration was a proxy job, because its primary aim was to undermine general passenger confidence in mass-producer European Airbus Industries - the main threat to Boeing and other American planemakers.

It is known that a number of 'follow up' operations were planned, but all of these apart from one appear to have been shelved or altered after 911. However, because the intent and result of the Concorde sabotage is already known, it is very reasonable to speculate that any inexplicable and thus suspicious Airbus crashes or near-crashes afterJuly 25, 2000, are part of the ongoing lethal 'public relations war' being waged by America against Europe, and against Airbus in particular.

American Airlines Flight 587, New York November 2001, 265 dead.
Story on American 587 is linked at the bottom of this page

Probably the best-known Airbus crash is American Airlines Flight 587, which simply fell out of the sky overhead Jamaica Bay, just after departing JFK Airport in New York. None of the media stories made sense, and neither did any of the bits of wreckage. THe media was peddling garbage, as I noted at the time:

"What cannot be explained away by the NTSB or FAA is how or why the stabilizer parted company with the aircraft at precisely the point where it joins the fuselage proper. Look at the enlarged photograph very carefully. There are absolutely no dents, scratches, on the leading edge or on the panels. This proves the vertical stabilizer was not struck by any other object, in turn proving it was the first component to detach from the aircraft.

"Trickier still for the NTSB, FAA and Airbus Industries, will be explaining to the general public why, with prima facie evidence proving catastrophic separation along a critical attachment line, the FAA and Airbus Industries failed to immediately ground all Airbus A300-600 models worldwide. This in order to conduct black light inspections of the stabilizer spars, panels, attachment pins, bolts and other critical components.

"Not only is grounding of this nature a normal operating procedure, it is also a legal requirement. Most readers will remember that all Concorde aircraft were grounded for more than a year after the crash of Air France 4590 at Paris. Concorde's grounding was based mostly on speculation, and partly on trivial circumstantial evidence, flimsier by far than the prima facie evidence already existing in the case of American Airlines Flight 587.

"In order not to ground all Airbus A300-600 series, the NTSB, FAA and Airbus Industries would have to be convinced that the reason for the crash of Flight 587 was strictly unique, a one-off that could not occur under similar flight conditions to any other Airbus A300-600 worldwide. The only reason unique enough to fit this requirement is an act of terrorism."

American terrorism, perhaps? Look at the timing, and more importantly look very closely at events during the preceding three months. Do you remember those giant Boeing airliners slicing through the towers of the World Trade Center? Yes, of course you do, as does the rest of the world courtesy of American television. The problem for America is that the anchor men kept saying "Boeing" over and over again.

It was the worst possible publicity Boeing could have. Time after time on a hundred TV channels, millions watched on in horror as BOEINGS, yes BOEINGS ripped through the towers, killing hundreds of women and children. If you want your wife and children to die, just send them for a flight on a BOEING!

Even now in Australia, four years after the event, we regularly see that famous video clip of Flight 175 (a Boeing 767) tearing through the South Tower, spraying Jet A1 fuel as it rips through the glass framework. It chills the blood, and several people have told me they will never fly in a Boeing again. The entire 911 incident was very bad news for Boeing Corporation, which decided to fight back with a bit of counter-propaganda and fear.

And so it was that less than three months later, American Airlines 587, an Airbus 300-600, entered a ballistic trajectory and impacted (almost impossibly) on a narow isthmus of land called Rockaway Beach. Blazing Jet A1, gory body parts, and bit of mangled fuselage were everywhere on very public display.

"The tragic accident, which took the lives of at least five Rockaway residents as well as all of the 265 people on the aircraft, was a flashback for many to September 11, when more than 65 Rockaway residents lost their lives.

"The trauma of that day is still so fresh in my memory that it seems like only yesterday," says one resident who saw the plane, its wings in flames and its tail missing pass over The Sunset Diner, where he was eating breakfast. "All I could think of was "Oh, God, not again."

As we have grown to expect, the American media made a very big fuss about this unfortunate and apparent 'accident', pointing out repeatedly that Airbuses can crash too, in an equally spectacular and highly-targeted fashion befitting the WTC Boeings. Not only that, but for the first time ever, tame journalists started to encourage public suspicion of the enormously strong carbon fiber composites used in all advanced Airbus construction.

American Airlines Airbus 300-600 scattered across narrow Rockaway Beach

Just twenty-five days before the attack on New York, there was another serious Airbus incident in the Azores, an obscure group of islands about 1,000 miles west of Portugal. On Friday August 17, 2001, Air Transat Flight 236 suffered an extremely unusual in-flight emergency, that under more circumstances would have made front page new in New York.

Partly because the Azores are so remote, and partly because of delays caused by the complicated chain of reporting through Air Transat headquarters and the authorities in Canada, this exceptional event was completely smothered by the massive onslought of publicity surrounding the complete destruction of the World Trade Center.

There are hundreds of accounts on the Internet detailing the bravery and sheer skill of Canadian Captain Robert Piché, so I will merely recount the outline details of this so-called 'incident', which involved an Airbus A330 owned and operated by the same small Canadian airline that was refused landing permission at Fort Lauderdale International on March 6, 2005.

In brief, Captain Piché and his First Officer noticed a fuel loss from the starboard (right) wing, which normally feeds number two engine on the same side. Because it was pitch black outside and because there had been no trouble at take-off with both engines running at 100% power, neither pilot had reason to suspect that a truly massive fuel leak had suddenly started in the right-hand number two engine. Nor was there any such indication on the flight deck warning panels. After a short period, number two engine spooled down due to fuel starvation, leaving Captain Piché and 303 other souls with a single engine burning, at night, way out over the Atlanic.

For technical reasons I will not bother with here because they are not directly related to flight 961 over Fort Lauderdale International, certain Canadian officials are convinced the aircraft was sabotaged while in its Canadian hangars, using a remote delay device to start the massive fuel leak. This alone would not normally stop both engines, but pilot's notes for the aircraft in question would trick the pilots themselves into dumping the fuel needed for the left-hand number one engine.

Air Transat Flight 236 'glider' after crash landing in the Azores

On the A330, a computer moves fuel backwards and forwards between the left and right wing to maintain trim - or 'balance' if you prefer. This is achieved by pumps feeding through the "crossfeed valve", which must first be opened by the pilot. Initially suspecting only a small leak in the wing tank (why suspect anything else?), the crew opened the crossfeed valve, fuel started to transfer from the left wing to the right, though the flight deck gauges did not reflect the true rate of transfer. In other words, fuel was transferring across three times faster than shown by the gauges, and vanishing into the night sky via the gaping hole in right-hand number two engine.

Then everything suddenly went very quiet. Starved of fuel, number one engine on the left wing spooled down as well, leaving the giant Airbus with lift provided only by the wings. In a split second, Flight 236 had been converted into the biggest glider on earth. It was indeed fortunate for the passengers on board that Captain Robert Piché had earlier honed his flying skills overcoming wind, fog and rain flying bush planes on the short airstrips of Quebec's rugged Anticosti Island.

From a starting point 39,000 feet up over the Atlantic, Captain Piché briefed the cabin crew for a ditching (water landing), while at the same time planning to glide the giant plane 63 nautical miles to the Azores, and land on the runway at the Terceira military base. Thirty three minutes after sending his first emergency call, Captain Piché slammed the giant Airbus hard onto the runway at Terceira, deliberately bursting the tyres in order to slow down and stop.

Without the extraordinary Captain Robert Piché on board, the Air Transat Airbus A330 would certainly have ditched and probably vanished without trace, because weather conditions were very bad that night. In those circumstances, Airbus Industries would have lost one of its newest aircraft, thereby setting up a shockwave of anxiety among potential passengers.

It is indeed strange how history seems to have an uncanny ability of bringing the bad guys to justice. The reality is that Captain Robert Piché was on board that terrible night, and the reputation of Airbus Industries remained intact. Just twenty-five days later it would be a pair of American Boeing 767s that would terrify the travelling public instead, when they vanished inside the twin towers of the World Trade Center at 575 miles per hour.

Second Giant Airbus Terminal Mysteriously "Collapses" - Lucky Boeing!
Scroll down to blue update

The shattered edifice of Terminal 2E, custom designed for the giant double-decker Airbus 380 which could drive Boeing into bankruptcy, is frightening away France's record tourist crowds, their fear deliberately increased by vilification and panic-mongering by the New York media. As a result, the US$900 million

Just before 7 a.m. on Sunday May 23, startled security guards inside Terminal 2E at Roissy-Charles de Gaulle noticed tiny spider cracks appearing in one of the support walls of the building. Acting like lightning, the guards started an immediate mass evacuation of the entire terminal, and radioed French police for urgent assistance. Had those guards not acted as quickly as they did, more than 500 staff and passengers would have died in the giant mangled pile of rubble which appeared shortly thereafter. France might thus have suffered its very own Mini 9-11, possibly forcing a reluctant Paris to join the hysterical 'War on Terror' raging on the other side of the Atlantic.

While dust clouds still partly obscured the quarantined terminal disaster area, and no one including media was allowed within 500 yards of the building, the New York Times suddenly went into extra-sensory-perception mode, blandly reporting that, "Rescue workers converged on the site to search for survivors of the accident, which appeared to have been caused by a structural failure, rather than a bomb" … "It is not clear whether the collapse was caused by a structural flaw in the shell, the failure of supporting pillars beneath it or some other reason. But the elliptical arch [of the roof] pushed the limits of conventional vault design, with the curvature continuing beyond the vertical without abutments other than the reinforcing steel hoops to stop it from spreading".

We will return to this impossible and obviously pre-prepared claim later in the report, but a clue to Wall Street's motive for this particular El-Al'eda terrorist attack was provided two days later, when the New York Times gloated, "The collapse of a passenger terminal at Roissy-Charles de Gaulle Airport near Paris on Sunday is likely to cause wide ripples in French industrial circles, perhaps even affecting the introduction of the Airbus A380 superjumbo jet, Europe's answer to the Boeing 747".

Those readers who sincerely believe the only current Wall Street crusade is that being visibly directed against oil-rich Muslim countries in the Middle East, will shortly have to come to terms with Wall Street's less visible but even more fanatical crusade against 'Old Europe' and Russia. Though stealing Iraq [or Saudi Arabia's] crude oil reserves is essential to the long-term survival of America, any such victory will fail completely if Europe and Russia are allowed to form an alliance, thereby forming the biggest superpower on the face of the earth.

This is the really big battle, and the Zionist Cabal in New York has been covertly chipping away at Russia and Europe for more than twenty years, while at the same time planning the Draconian "Fortress Americas" as a final redoubt, should their plans be uncovered or fail for other reasons. The victor in this gargantuan but largely unseen battle will win the right to monopolize world trade, in partnership with China, for perhaps the next century or even longer, while the loser will unquestionably be relegated to third-world status.

Though 'trade' covers a vast array of products and services both tangible and intangible, four component parts are especially important at the dawn of the twenty-first century. The absolute control of life and death is represented by the pharmaceutical and aerospace-defense conglomerates, while generic tourism in one form or another leads the charge in securing vast sums of transient currencies, and in capturing the 'hearts and minds' of an increasingly mobile global public. None of the above would be able to operate without crude oil, which is therefore the fourth of these important components.

Very few readers in the west realize that a mere eighteen months ago, Russia overtook Saudi Arabia as the world's biggest single national producer of crude oil and gas products, a position it had been striving to achieve for more than twenty years. In fact, Russia very nearly achieved dominance during the mid eighties, right up to the point when the Zionist Cabal instructed President Ronald Reagan to sabotage the Siberian pipelines.

This successful covert American operation led in turn to the first tit-for-tat micro nuclear reprisal in the current ongoing series. On 6 June 1988 a micro nuke no bigger than a coffee cup went critical in the compressor room of Occidental's Piper Alpha platform in the North Sea. As the screeching white-hot fireball reached half the temperature of the sun in six microseconds, and instantly vaporized the top structure of the Alpha platform, the subliminal message was clear. Russia would not tolerate any more Zionist interference in its internal affairs, especially not in its internal oil and gas affairs.

This presented the Zionist Cabal with a nightmare problem, resolved just a few short years later by American Ambassador April Glaspie. At her last confidential meeting with President Saddam Hussein of Iraq before Kuwait was invaded, Glaspie gave the Iraqi President the green light. ""We have no opinion on your Arab-Arab conflicts," she told Hussein, "such as your dispute with Kuwait. Secretary [of State James] Baker has directed me to emphasize the instruction ... that Kuwait is not associated with America." President Hussein unfortunately fell for this obvious ruse, and the rest is vividly recorded history.

Thus the Zionist Cabal had terminally fixated on expanding the Jewish State east to the Euphrates and beyond, without ever stopping to ponder how it would then be able to transport its plundered crude oil home across 7,000 nautical miles of hostile ocean, dotted here and there by silent Russian and French hunter-killer submarines, and fast radar-opaque minelayers.

To an extent, Wall Street's attention was deflected by the simultaneous rising trade threat of the European defense industry, headed by the incredibly profitable aerospace sector. During the last century, no other sector has bestowed more profit and prestige on its shareholders than the ubiquitous plane makers, especially those engaged in the manufacture of flagship long-range commercial airliners. Since the end of World War II, Boeing has completely dominated this market, effectively allowing America to control commercial aviation in western skies. Then as if out of nowhere, Airbus Industries came on the scene. As I wrote in June 2003:

"Though Airbus sales had been very slow since 1969, the consortium adopted a far more aggressive stance in the early nineties, to the point where it threatened Boeing's virtual monopoly of the commercial airliner market. If the Americans saw this as a serious threat, they were quite right to do so. Back in 1969 the European manufacturers produced only 10% of all commercial airliners, despite having one quarter of all airline business worldwide. By its 30th birthday in December 1999, the Airbus Consortium would be reveling in its new 50% share of the global airliner market.

"Apart from its new aggressive sales stance, Europe had another weapon in its arsenal that could not be matched by America under any circumstances, in the shape of the supersonic Concorde. If the Airbus sales team wished to close an important sale, they had this infuriating habit of turning up in one of these sleek and truly awesome aircraft, described countless times as "the sexiest airliner in the world". Sexy or not, Concorde was and still is the absolute guarantee of European aircraft industry excellence.

"By the mid-nineties, these two-hundred-ton white darts had been flashing backwards and forwards across the Atlantic every day of the week at twice the speed of sound, for more than twenty years non-stop without serious incident. A free ride in Concorde, and a glass or two of vintage champagne, was nearly always enough to convince even the most reluctant airline executive to choose Airbus over Boeing." A link to this Concorde sabotage report is provided at the bottom of the page.

It is beyond any doubt that the deliberate sabotage of Concorde was designed to put the brakes on Airbus sales, especially on the growing sales of the giant double-decker A 380 Super Jumbo, an aircraft so opulent that it puts the aging Boeing 747 flagship completely in the shade. Depending on the airline, all passengers will enjoy greatly increased legroom, access to a proper in-flight bar, and room to walk around and stretch their legs. Some operators including Singapore Airlines even plan to have a gym on board. In simple terms, the giant A 380 is light years ahead of the elderly Boeing, with fuel costs around 20% less overall, meaning that everyone is a winner apart from American aerospace in general, and Boeing shareholders in particular.

Just two weeks before Terminal 2E inexplicably collapsed at Roissy-Charles de Gaulle, Airbus [now part of European Aeronautic, Defense Space] celebrated the complete assembly of its first Super Jumbo in a vast hangar at Toulouse. Champagne corks popped wildly as VIP visitors were escorted around the huge construction facility, and firm orders climbed above 130 aircraft. No small achievement in a world beset by synthetic 'Muslim terrorism' largely invented by Wall Street, with a majority of Americans intimidated into not flying at all. But then these giant 21st Century airliners are not destined for America.

While Americans are obliged to submit to extraordinary indignities at their own airports courtesy of the Draconian "Department of Homeland Security", the rest of the world [apart from Australia] has gone in the opposite direction. France, Germany, Russia and even China nowadays welcome tourists as honored guests rather than terrorist suspects, meaning that their tourism revenues have gone through the roof. Arrival in Paris, Frankfurt, Moscow or Beijing means being greeted by cheerful immigration officials before being shown to a cab rank or bus stop. You are certainly NOT bullied by paranoid American officials into providing photographs, fingerprints, retinal scans, and, perhaps in the near future, anal probes as well.

Tourists who want to visit Disney World are not going to put up with Ridge and Ashcroft's insulting paranoid rubbish. Instead, they have voted with their feet by visiting Euro Disney outside

It is right here that we begin to see what was so terribly wrong about the instant bland pronouncement by the New York Times on May 23, that the collapse of Terminal 2E "appeared to have been caused by a structural failure, rather than a bomb". Ever since the World Trade Center attack in 2001, all Americans including reporters at the New York Times have been behaviorally conditioned to believe that airports, and the airliners which use them, are the favorite prime targets of 'Muslim Terrorists'. The sight of a turban or Islamic headdress in the wrong place at Dulles Airport is enough to trigger a panic attack by security staff, and any little old lady who passes wind in the wrong place at the wrong time, runs the risk of a very personal body search for hidden heavy weapons.

Barely concealed paranoia runs deep at American airports nowadays, leading one to ask what the New York Times would have written if, instead of Terminal 2E at Roissy-Charles de Gaulle, the arrivals building at Chicago O'Hare Airport had suddenly collapsed without warning on May 23. But you already know the answer, don't you? While thousands of National Guardsmen rounded up innocent passengers for interrogation by Homeland Security, the New York Times would have accused Syria, Iran, and North Korea of a deliberate terrorist attack. The amazingly creative possibility of "structural failure" would have been laughed at.

So who or what prompted the leading Zionist rag to obscure reality with a bald lie, just after the El-Al'eda attack on Terminal 2E, and long before any reporter had been granted access to the building? Clearly the editorial staff were obeying orders from further up the food chain, because the object of this particular attack was not to achieve the maximum number of dead, but rather to subtly undermine global confidence in the terminal building, the only one in the world constructed specifically to handle the sumptuous Airbus Super Jumbo.

Back in July 2000 as he taxied Concorde Flight 4590 away from the passenger terminal at Roissy-Charles de Gaulle, Captain Christian Marty had no idea that his aircraft had been creatively sabotaged is such a way that, minutes later, his damaged left undercarriage spacers and crippled #2 engine would drag Flight 4590 left of the runway, and straight into Jacque Chirac's Presidential Boeing waiting at the distant holding point for a pre-arranged viewing of the spectacular take off. One only has to imagine the public relations impact of Concorde and the President of France perishing in a single giant explosion, to realize that the European aerospace industry would have been doomed overnight, with orders for the Airbus Super Jumbo cancelled by all potential customers.

How Christian Marty coped we will never know, but he somehow managed to drag Concorde off the ground and leapfrog over the Presidential Boeing, though by then it was certain that he and his own crew would shortly die. With 25% of its total engine thrust gone, and thus unable to attain essential V2 flying speed of 222 knots, Concorde was doomed and eventually tore into "La Patte d' Oie" at Gonesse, just a few miles from the airport. This particular sabotage certainly contributed to the early retirement of Concorde itself, but it fell short of completely undermining public confidence in the European aerospace industry, the minimum requirement needed for Boeing to maintain its commercial monopoly in the west.

Clearly something else had to be done to help things along, and it must be said that the El-Al'eda attack on the only terminal building custom designed for the Airbus Super Jumbo, was quite clever in the psychological sense. Though the Zionist Cabal has not yet managed to sabotage a flying A 380, trashing its terminal building was certainly the next best thing. Think about this very carefully, because the subliminal message is quite simple. If the French cannot build a lousy terminal building without it falling down in a light breeze, how safe will you feel flying in a giant Super Jumbo designed and built by the same nation? Hence the initially inexplicable determination of the New York Times to make you believe the collapse of Terminal 2E was due to structural failure [shoddy workmanship] rather than terrorism.

The reality is quite different of course. The design of Terminal 2E is avant garde, but the building was conceived with the strictest technical requirements and is made of classic materials like cement. When Architect Paul Andreu quickly flew back from China where he is working on an opera house, he told the newspaper L'Humanite "I can't explain what happened. I just don't understand it". Indeed not, but that was shortly after he arrived, and before discovering that one of the support walls had dropped into an underground cavern, which had suddenly appeared as if from nowhere. Naturally enough the spectacular domed roof followed the support wall downwards, but it did not fracture, as can be seen in the photographs at the top of this page.

One can reasonably ask how any underground cavern can suddenly appear in land that had been so carefully surveyed prior to construction. Especially as Terminal 2E has its own network of steel-reinforced underground service tunnels, including those leading to the nearby underground railway station. In the casual opinion of one senior man currently investigating the sabotage, the collapse was most likely caused by deliberately reducing the tensile strength of one steel service tunnel in particular, positioned directly under the portion of the terminal that collapsed. Final conclusions will have to wait until after the judicial investigation.

The level of resistance to the Airbus Super Jumbo in Boeing's own back yard is now becoming much too obvious. Though the aircraft can easily use the same turning and parking space as a Boeing 747, it needs extended terminal support for the increased number of passengers, which is likely to total about 550 on most flights. Airbus says 14 international airports are currently equipped to handle the A 380, but most of these are in Europe and Asia, with not a single one in the United States. Virgin Atlantic Airlines said in May that it would have to put off delivery of it's A 380s because of delays in the preparation of Los Angeles International Airport. In turn, Los Angeles said that it would be ready "to accommodate the A380 with the highest standards of safety when the first airline begins using the aircraft". Catch 22, isn't it? Presumably Los Angeles intends to throw in a few extra deck chairs when the first Virgin flight has already taken off from London Airport.

Though this report has shown a shocking level of bias and Draconian behavior on the part of US officials, which is likely to alienate every potential tourist and thereby destroy America's once-booming tourist industry, it would be a mistake to assume that this is down to bureaucratic incompetence alone. It seems quite possible that there is an alternative agenda, if only because the Zionist Cabal on Wall Street does not wittingly throw away good money if there is any way to prevent it.

On the available evidence, it seems possible that America is now in the preliminary stages of 'lock down' for the implementation of "Fortress Americas", linked below. The war in Iraq is lost, and unless the Zionists can snatch Saudi Arabia's reserves by stealth as US forces retreat down the Persian Gulf, America is going to be critically short of oil. This will cause considerable unrest back home. If at the same time the defense and aerospace industries in America should collapse and create massive unemployment, the likely combined response by the American public simply doesn't bear thinking about.

Under these circumstances, the Zionist Cabal would be determined to exert rigid direct controls on what it has left, i.e. the United States of America and her people, while excluding all others ranging from unnecessary foreign businessmen to unwanted foreign tourists. In my casual opinion based on observation, Fortress Americas is now closer than ever before.

Second Giant Airbus Terminal Mysteriously "Collapses" - Lucky Boeing!

Workers scatter in terror after the new Airbus A 380 Super Jumbo Terminal in Dubai suddenly collapsed without warning at 11.00 a.m. Monday.

If you were ever seriously considering flying on the new European A 380 Super Jumbo Airbus when it goes into service during late 2006, you'd better forget it. This was the clear message when the new French-designed A 380 terminal collapsed in Dubai, the second such collapse in less than six months. You work it out: If the "stupid" French cannot even manage to design a safe static concrete air terminal incapable of flight, then how on earth could they possibly co-design a giant airliner superior in every respect to the Boeing 747?

"The Dubai A 380 terminal 'accident' happened at 1100 (0700 GMT) according to building workers quoted by AP. They said about 150 workers were at the site at the time. Most construction workers in the UAE come from South Asia, although the airport authorities have not confirmed the nationalities of those involved in the accident.

"The new terminal, to be used by Emirates airline, is due to open for passengers in 2006. It has been designed by France's Aeroports de Paris (ADP) and will be in the shape of a giant plane wing almost 1km long (1,100yds).

"An ADP official in Dubai said the firm was not involved in the construction of the terminal. The French company also operates Charles de Gaulle airport in Paris, where a roof at a new terminal collapsed in May, killing four people."

Clear enough for you? The French have actually admitted designing the terminal building for Dubai Airport, which seems to confirm their incompetence when it comes to engineering both civil and mechanical. Better fly Boeing then, or should we?

An artist's impression of the new Dubai terminal due to be opened for service in 2006. Dubai will be the most important Middle East "Hub" for the Airbus A 380

An actuary is a person who produces probability tables which determine the likelihood of a potential future event, normally for insurance companies. Say for example a young man comes along and asks for a million dollars worth of insurance because he wants to fly his untried home made jet aircraft under the Brooklyn Bridge at Mach 2. No problems, sensing a quick kill the actuary would probably calculate a 99.9% probability of a fatal outcome and suggest an insurance premium of 1.2 million dollars payable cash in advance, which should cover the young man's funeral, and the actuary's corporate expenses with change.

However, task the same actuary with assessing the probability of a major airliport terminal collapsing and it would be a very different matter, or at least it would have been before the sudden collapse of the first dedicated Airbus A 380 Super Jumbo terminal at Paris Charles de Gaulle. Up until that point in time no major airport terminals had collapsed anywhere in the world, making them extremely profitable items to insure, i.e. constant providers of moderate cash flow for investors in the form of insurance premiums, at almost zero risk of insurance payout. Marvellous, just what the banker ordered...

Now imagine yourself as the actuary tasked with insuring ten more dedicated A 380 airport terminals, when two out of the only four nearing completion anywhere in the world had already collapsed. All of a sudden your world has been turned upside down, and your probability tables no longer have any meaning. Although these terminals are only two out of about 10,000 world wide [a risk of one in five thousand], they represent fifty percent of the dedicated A 380 terminals, suddenly dramatically shortening the odds of catastrophic loss to a staggering risk of one in two, if you dare to insure any airport terminal with the name "Airbus" attached to it.

By now you will have got the picture. The overall probability of two out of the only four A 380 terminals in the world spontaneously collapsing by accident still has to be based on the estimated total of 10,000 airport terminals world wide, leading any actuary to believe instantly that the collapses were in all probability not accidents at all.

Next there is the "rate" to be taken into account, meaning the frequency of such events per year or per month, depending on your chosen calculations. Let us assume that before the Paris Charles de Gaulle collapse on 23 May 2004, not one of the 10,000 airport terminals world wide had collapsed, meaning that you have 10,000 x 40 terminal/year units free of liability. Put simply, before 23 May 2004 you had 400,000 superb income-generating accident-free terminal/ year units of unhindered investor revenue.

Then, as if out of nowhere, you get two accidents not only within a single year, but within half of a single year. How? The fact that both of these' accidents' [the only two in forty years...] are linked to the same single controversial airplane, sends the probability of deliberate sabotage rocketing sky high. In fact, so high that my calculator ran out of zeroes.

Bye, Bye Bye Boeing Bye Bye

(With apologies to Janis Joplin)

"New technology from 'Old Europe' overwhelms old technology from new America. The belly comes from Spain, the wings from Britain, the nose from France, and the interior from Germany.

1 February 2005
Joe Vialls

Beauty is more than just skin deep. A miracle of 21st Century technology, the Airbus A 380 has broken new barriers. Where the ancient Boeing 747 has one and a half million vulnerable rivets, the Airbus has none, using laser-guided electric welding instead. Primary construction revolves around the use of state-of-the-art carbon fiber and other enormously strong composites. New York would cheerfully kill to rid the world of this Boeing-destroyer, as it did with Concorde at Paris Charles de Gaulle Airport on 25 July 2000, in a deliberate attempt to assassinate President Jaques Chirac, and, at the same time, forever undermine the credibility of European aerospace excellence.

Nineteen sixty-six seems a very long time ago, but it was on March 11 that year that French President Charles de Gaulle stunned the western world by sending an aide-mémoire to France's 14 partners in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO), in which he announced that all French forces would be withdrawn from the Alliance integrated command. De Gaulle also stated that all French NATO bases and HQ's would be closed within a year. General de Gaulle was a gentleman, and he kept his word.

At the diplomatic level, the reason appeared to be that Charles de Gaulle could not and would not trust America to 'protect' France if Russia attacked Europe, but the real reasons behind his decision were infinitely more profound. You see, President de Gaulle knew all there was to know about Zionist plans for a 'One World Government', and he also knew that France would be crushed into economic submission as an integral part of those Zionist plans.

Less than one year later the French Force de Frappe (Strike Force) was in operation, equipped with sixty-two formidable Mach 2 Mirage IV-P low-level bombers, each capable of delivering a home-made [French] sixty-kiloton nuclear bomb with stunning accuracy. And while the New York media tried to laugh the whole matter off as a bit of a gallic joke, Charles de Gaulle made it painfully clear that he was deadly serious:
"It is obvious that the megatonnes which we could employ do not match the numbers which

America and Russia could unleash", de Gaulle said, "But once a certain nuclear capacity is reached and in regard to our direct defense, the size of the respective arsenals does not have an absolute value.

He continued, "For since a man and a country can only die once, deterrence exists once one has the means to inflict mortal damage on a possible aggressor, the determination to use them and the confidence in one's ultimate decision."

The amazing Mirage-IVP carried much of France's nuclear role in the air for 32 years with the AN-52 nuclear bomb and ASMP missile. In July 1996 the Mirage was [officially] retired from this role, but 5 have been kept for strategic reconaissance missions. They are operated by the 1/91 Gascogne squadron at Mont-de-Marsan, while the rest of the Mirage-IVPs are kept in fully air-conditioned hangars discreetly dotted across France, lest they should suddenly be needed again at short notice.

While Germany continued to bow the knee to its American occupation troops, and allow them free access to frequently unwilling German women, and sometimes children, France was having none of it. In a very real sense, France forced the pace in forming the fledgling European Union, because men like Charles de Gaulle knew that European unity and massive trade were the only tools capable of defeating the New York moneylenders.

Somehow, Europe as a whole had to find a way of freeing itself from the stranglehold of worthless US Federal Reserve notes, which would had to be replaced with revenue derived from the sale of tangible [real] products, such as cars, aircraft, farm products and so on. This was finally achieved in January 2005, when Germany alone (just one of 25 EU member states), published its export/import figures for the financial year 2004.

During 2004, Germany exported products worth US$ 950 billion, while importing products valued at only US$ 748 billion, meaning that Germany made a gross profit for the year of US$ 222,000,000,000. During the same time frame, America's total exports were two hundred billion less than Germany, with American imports completely off the clock. If anyone out there ever wanted hard proof that America is now totally bankrupt, Germany just provided that proof in the form of properly audited balance sheets.

The Boeing 747's design and manufacturing techniques date back to the fifties and the 'good old days' of the Cold War. Despite new engines and flashy flight deck instruments, nothing else has changed. This aircraft is essentially as old and out-of-date as the Boeing B-47 bomber.

Though few people would consider the luxurious Airbus A-380 as a warplane, its very existence will have more strategic impact on future wars than any military design, which requires explanation. Try looking at it this way: At present America has a finite number of military aircraft, ships and tanks, but cannot afford to import the raw materials to build more. What you see is what you get, and George W. Bush is fast starting to look like Romulus Augustulus, the last emperor of the Roman Empire.

On the flip side of the coin, the European Union, Russia and China are positively swimming in oceans of real Euros, Roubles, and Yuan generated by real sales of real goods, and they produce more goods as each year goes by. Mostly these nations trade with each other, across Asia and South America, but with barely a glance towards the USA. Though the United States looks big on a map, its population represents only five-percent of the global market, and traders grow more skeptical of the failing US Dollar as each week goes by. Nowadays many nervous international traders are refusing to accept US Dollar payments, demanding Euros instead.

For nearly a hundred years, the New York Zionists and their forbears have held the world to ransom, using blackmail and sheer force of arms to extract real goods in exchange for useless 'fiat' currency notes, junk bonds, and political bribes. It was never going to last for ever, and the launch of the A-380 on January 18 marked the official beginning of the end, at least from a European perspective.

After successfully sabotaging Concorde 4590 and nearly killing French President Jacque Chirac in 2000, the New York Zionists went on to deliberately sabotage the dedicated A-380 airport terminals in Dubai and Paris. The subliminal message was obvious, i.e. hinting strongly that anything aeronautical designed or built by Europe

Though it is one of the main instruments designed to undermine Boeing Aircraft Corporation and thus the entire American defense industy, the A-380 Super Jumbo is still a stunning aircraft in its own right, and will doubtlessly attract vast numbers of passengers on its merits. Though in standard three-class configuration the A-380 will carry around 560 passengers, rather than a possible 810 maximum in 'cattle truck' mode, it will do so 27% cheaper per passenger-mile than the Boeing 747, with part of this made possible by the engines burning about 20% less fuel.

Curiously, Boeing's counter propaganda about the giant aircraft seems to have fallen flat on its face. The A-380 is not noisier than the Boeing 747, but many decibels quieter, even at maximum takeoff power. The A-380 does not require a special runway, and in fact has a shorter takeoff and landing run that the Boeing 747. The only airport alterations required are special departure and arrival gates, which were originally designed to handle a throughput of around 350 passengers, and will be hard pressed to handle 550 in their current configurations. They could still do the job of course, but the delays would be unacceptable.

Perhaps most irksome of all for the Wall Street moneylenders, is that the giant European aerospace corporation that own Airbus, has not borrowed a single American fiat cent in order to completet this or any other Airbus project, meaning that Wall Street cannot pull the financial plug and make Airbus Industries simply disappear.

Unable to stop the A-380 by direct means, or by indirect acts of sabotage on Concorde and the A-380 terminals, the money lenders sent Boeing off on a different and quite ridiculous tack, made necessary by the fact that America no longer has enough spare cash to build new aircraft or new production lines.

France was the principal driving force behind both Concorde and the Airbus A-380. After surviving an assassination attempt by the doomed Concorde, which only just missed his Presidential Air France Boeing 747 by the side of the runway at Paris Charles de Gaulle Airport in 2000, Jaque Chirac is justifiably proud of "Old Armed only with a cheap artist's impression, Boeing salesmen set off around the world in an attempt to achieve the impossible, to wit selling the concept of a middle weight airliner dubbed the Boeing 7E7 "Dreamliner", but without first building a prototype of even a full scale mockup. This was to be an exercise in gathering sufficient cash to start building a mockup - which is an incredible way of trying to sell aeroplanes, because it tells everyone instantly that you are so broke you can't afford to show them the real thing.

This is not the first time Boeing has tried this bizarre approach. Within twelve months of the sabotage of Concorde 4590, the corporation suddenly released an artist's impression of the "Sonic Cruiser", a hybrid space-age transonic jet they seemed sure would replace the Concorde, once orchestrated American media pressure had managed to have the Mach 2 Concorde permanently grounded, which, curiously enough, is exactly what happened. Unfortunately for Boeing, no one wanted to buy their 'Sonic Cruiser" painting, so the project eventually folded and died.

But the 7E7 was going to be different, and during the Spring of 2003, All Nippon Airways of Japan placed a firm order for 50 of these unproven aircraft at a fixed price of US$115 million for each airplane. Alas though, All Nippon was not prepared to hand over any ready cash in advance, meaning the full scale mockup and production line could not be started.

"Dreamliner" is a very appropriate name, because this aircraft only exists in the fertile imaginations of Boeing's sales personnel. There is no prototype and no pre-production aircraft, although Boeing does have a few hundred spare copies of this artist's impression

Time dragged slowly by, and then on Friday January 28, 2005, Boeing got the big break it had been looking for. The Boeing Company and officials from the Peoples' Republic of China signed an agreement for the purchase of 70 Boeing 7E7 Dreamliners by Chinese airlines. The agreement mentions a fixed price of US$110 million per airplane. The salemen had pulled it off, and managed to sell more than 100 aircraft based only on an artist's impression! Not bad, but there was to be a very nasty sting in the tail.

The very next day at Davos in Switzerland, Fan Gang, director of the National Economic Research Institute at the China Reform Foundation, boldly stated [on belalf of the Chinese Government], "The U.S. dollar is no longer, in our opinion is no longer seen as a stable currency, and is devaluating all the time, and that's putting troubles all the time," he said in impeccable English.

Fan Gang continued, "So the real issue is how to change the regime from a US dollar pegging to a more manageable - pause - reference - pause - say Euros, yen, those kind of more diversified systems. If you do this, in the beginning you have some kind of initial shock; you have to deal with some devaluation pressures."

China is a very powerful economic force nowadays, and the man from China had just put his boot into the US Dollar, a point well noted by all present. Naturally this means the US Dollar will continue to fall like a stone, going into final freefall when Russia and OPEC decide to start trading their oil stocks in Euros instead of dollars.

So, Boeing has talked itself into the fixed-price delivery in 2008 of more than a hundred 7E7s [now the 787s], with that price fixed in US Dollars. Oh dear, now how much will the US Dollar be worth in four years time, when the Euro has become the world's only viable reserve currency? Let us take 25% of its current value against the Yuan and Yen, which means that Boeing will be contractually obliged to deliver brand-new 787 aircraft to China and Japan for today's equivalent price of a second-hand Boeing 737, or declare bankrupcy.

It is no exaggeration to say that Boeing is the 'flagship' of the American defense industry, and if Boeing goes to the wall, so will everyone else. No more aircraft carriers, no more stealth bombers, and no more attacking overseas sovereign nations in the sacred name of New York Zionist 'Democracy'. Perhaps none of this would have happened at all, if certain certifiable maniacs had resisted the temptation to try and assassinate the French President back on 25 July 2000. Food for thought.

Ryongchon - Nuclear Trigger for American Conscription?

South Korean "official" accurately announced the shocking level of damage only one hour after the blast, long before the North Koreans could even reach Ryongchon's ground zero

The Special Atomic Demolition Munition (SADM) is a U.S. Navy and Marines project dating back to the mid sixties, and still operational today with weapons ranging from 10 to 5,000 tons TNT equivalent yield. The backpack nuclear weapon is designed to allow one man to parachute from any type of aircraft carrying the weapon package which is placed in a harbor or other strategic location that can be accessed covertly by sea or by air. Another parachutist without a weapon package follows to provide support. The two-man team places the weapon package in the desired location, arms the radio detonator, then hopefully escapes by waiting submarine.

Viewed through the eyes of desperate Zionist neocons like Wolfowitz, Rumsfeld and Sharon, if North Korea could be successfully provoked into action by a small tactical nuclear strike deep inside its own territory, the most likely response would be 5,000 North Korean artillery shells per hour raining down on Seoul, the capital of South Korea. Within days or weeks, the United States of America would once again be obliged to protect South Korea and the rest of the western world from the Communist "Red Menace", this time artificially reborn as "Axis of Evil" member North Korea. Clearly this new 'patriotic defensive' action against Korea would require hundreds of thousands of American conscripts.

Although Iraq is where the conscripts are really needed, no sane American would accept the illegal invasion of Iraq as justification for conscription, because all have already worked out that this stupefying atrocity in the Middle East has nothing to do with weapons of mass destruction, nothing to do with Saddam Hussein, and absolutely nothing to do with American national security. Trying to enforce conscription today in a visible attempt to obtain the extra 500,000 troops needed to steal Iraq's oil reserves for the Zionist madmen on Wall Street, would simply result in every campus across America exploding into justifiably violent protests.

Because the photographs and other hard evidence in this report completely rule out an "accident" in Ryongchon, we are left with the harsh reality that one of the most important strategic locations in the whole of North Korea was deliberately nuked with a relatively low-yield weapon, by a nation or nations currently unknown. This inevitably draws us to ask who has the opportunity, motive and method for the attack, or, put another way, to ask which nations on earth have the nuclear weapons, stealth delivery systems, and the political need to vaporize more than a thousand North Koreans civilians in a cowardly sneak attack reminiscent of Pearl Harbor.

Nowadays there are dozens of nations with declared or undeclared nuclear weapons, but only a handful with long range precision stealth delivery systems, the latter limited to America, Russia, China, France and Great Britain. Of these five possible candidates for the sneak nuclear attack, only America has openly labeled North Korea a member of the mythical "Axis of Evil", and, equally, warned openly of horrific but unspecified military reprisals if North Korea does not stop supplying missile delivery systems to Iran. Thus before we even take into account America's current perilous military predicament in Iraq, there is only one candidate out of the five left with the necessary motive for the attack.

Regardless of any future call to arms to block the "Commies" in Korea, rest assured this entire scenario is all about Iraq and its priceless oil reserves. The Zionist Cabal in New York knows perfectly well that unless it can somehow import up to half a million more sacrificial American soldiers into Iraq to 'secure' all of that priceless oil, the tottering economies of American and the Jewish State will finally collapse, in turn robbing them of any future prospect of global control, and leaving the cabal and its lackeys vulnerable to an unprecedented furious backlash by the American people.

Ominously, as I write this report on 25 April, the Republican Guard has just killed another six American servicemen in Iraq, this time using the relatively new technique of firing 57-mm spin-stabilized rockets from converted taxis and waterborne Zodiac speedboats. This Mach 2 rocket has a deadly flat line-of-sight range of about 5,000 yards, and before the invasion was fitted to every ground attack aircraft and helicopter used by the Iraqi armed forces. Before the Americans arrived the entire arsenal of 40,000 x 57-mm rockets was removed and hidden for a rainy day, and it seems that rainy day has now arrived.

During the dual attacks on Tikrit and Basra harbor yesterday, the Republican Guard used four of these weapons to kill six American soldiers and wound thirteen others, which means that on pre-invasion estimates they have only 39,996 of these rockets left. However, by using this weapon for the first time since the invasion started, the Republican Guard is sending a far more chilling message to America and its nervous conscripted 'allies' from Britain and Australia.

The message is disarmingly simple: It matters not if four-star General John Abizaid lines the highway from Kuwait to Baghdad shoulder-to-shoulder with soldiers ordered to stop the Republican Guard planting culvert bombs designed to blow up American convoys, because the counter-insurgents will simply use 57-mm spin-stabilized rockets fired from 5,000 yards away instead. Without potable water, food and fuel, and with desert temperatures already soaring over 100F, the American invasion army will be beaten primarily by a complete lack of vital supply convoys, leading in turn to broken morale and total psychological defeat.

When Marine three-star General James Conway 'anonymously' told the New York Times on 22 April that forces under his command could turn the Iraqi city of Fallujah into "a killing field in a couple of days", he was either drunk or smoking dope. Less than 48 hours earlier General Conway received an intelligence analysis from the DIA that detailed the perilous position of all American forces. Of the total marines deployed in Iraq on 19 April 2004, sixty-percent had been reduced to two hot meals a day, while the remaining forty-percent had been reduced to one hot meal per day. There was no water available for washing, and potable drinking water supplies had reached an all-time low. Forget fuel completely, because there was [and is] barely enough to top up the tanks of a few Humvees.

Presumably Conway has a high-ranking friend in the USAF who has offered to turn the city into "a killing field in a couple of days" by using several squadrons of B-52 strategic heavies to carpet-bomb the good citizens of Fallujah into a bloody pulp. If this real possibility brings back unpleasant memories of North Vietnam and Cambodia, it is only because Iraq is already well beyond the Vietnam stage in terms of outright brutality borne of sheer desperation.

The situation in southern Iraq near the Kuwaiti border is equally desperate, with more than 2,500 soldiers outside Najaf forced to sleep under their armored vehicles, because the Halliburton civilian drivers are too frightened to deliver tent supplies from nearby Kuwait. The drivers point out reasonably that the Iraqis control all the highways and will kill them if they even try, but this does nothing to help the soldiers baking in 101F heat. Remember, these are the very same soldiers that the New York Times is currently telling you will 'capture' Muqtada al-Sadr and 'destroy' his million-man Shi'ite Mehdi Army.

Perhaps someone out there can tell me how 2,500 desperately tired and thirsty American soldiers, running short of food and almost out of fuel, are going to achieve this New York Times miracle? And as they sit baking in the increasing heat blasted by sandstorms, these demoralized men are obliged to watch on helplessly as Spanish troops drive south on their way home to their families, followed in turn by troops from Honduras, the Dominican Republic, El Salvador and Norway. Soon the American servicemen will be all alone in the hostile Iraqi desert, captive pawns in a giant Zionist chess game.

Though this may be the first you have heard of the dire situation in Iraq, remember that the Zionist Cabal, the National Security Council and the White House have known about it for several weeks, certainly long enough to formulate an alternative plan of action, no matter how insane that plan might be. Time is running short and, ultimately, as the Zionist Cabal in New York already knows, it cannot force the military to hold its positions in Iraq forever.

General John Abizaid cannot withdraw completely from Iraq without permission from his political masters, but he is the man directly responsible for the welfare and safety of all servicemen within Central Command, which includes Iraq. Dubbed the "Mad Arab" at West Point, Abizaid will certainly hold on as long as he can, but he will certainly not sacrifice 125,000 men under his direct command on the say so of a bunch of 'suits' in New York and Washington, D.C. Unless Washington can provide him with more than 100,000 extra men and machinery very quickly, General Abizaid will be forced to roll back his forces very slowly towards the Kuwaiti border, because it is the only sure way to keep them alive.

So it was against this backdrop of certain defeat in Iraq in the medium to long term, that the neocons had to devise a giant distraction somewhere else. In other words they had to trigger a large war in another part of the world, in order to initiate conscription in America to "Fight Communism", which in turn would be used to divert vast quantities of young Americans towards Iraq and the waiting 39,996 x 57-mm spin-stabilized rockets of the highly aggressive Republican Guard and Mehdi Army. Remember once again that the only real Zionist objective is to capture Iraq's incredibly rich oil reserves, and no Zionist gives a damn how many Americans have to die in securing this objective.

A sneak attack on "Axis of Evil" member Iran was completely out of the question, because Russia had prudently located several invincible nuclear-tipped "Sunburn" missiles on Iranian and Syrian soil, and then made it discreetly known through back channels that an attack on either nation would be considered as an attack on itself, resulting in two unstoppable supersonic ground-hugging Sunburns instantly winging their lethal way towards Tel Aviv and Haifa. The Zionists know President Vladimir Putin is very much a man of his word, so a tactical nuclear strike anywhere on Iran would clearly result in two giant smoking holes appearing in the middle of the Jewish State.

North Korea was an entirely different matter. Already demonized by New York as a 'Rogue State' possibly armed with nuclear, chemical and biological weapons, the lonely Stalinist country was the only viable choice left, but for the sake of appearances the North Koreans had to be goaded into attacking South Korea first, or hundred of thousands of future American conscripts might become more than a little suspicious when their draft papers arrive on the doormat, and arrive they will, irrespective of whether it is Bush or Kerry who are temporary residents at the White House.

With all of their tame psychiatrists assuring them that President Kim Jong Il was in fact a "paranoid dictator", who could be "trusted to attack if suitably provoked", the neocons laid their devious plans, which promise to be every bit as successful as their attack on Iraq. Obviously Kim had to alive in order to issue the order to attack the south, so the tactical nuke was detonated in the Ryongchon railway marshalling yards, just a few hours after Kim's armored train passed through on its way back from Beijing to Pyong Yang, loaded down with 'no strings attached' Chinese aid money.

This event in itself should have been enough to ensure that Kim immediately attacked South Korea, but the American psychiatrists wanted to make absolutely sure the message was received, understood, and acted on promptly, which brings us back to the chosen target. During the 'United Nations' Korean War of the fifties, the Ryongchon railway marshalling yards were critically important to the North Koreans, as the primary route for re-supply from its primary backer China. Ryongchon and nearby Sinuiju were subjected to countless bombing raids by the Americans, as were the railway bridges over the Yalu River, and North Korea's major K-30 airbase, located just a few miles away and responsible for using its Mig-15 fighters to repel American bomber attacks.

If Kim Jong Il was in any doubt about the nature of the explosion, this emotionally supercharged 'psychological flashback' to the fifties was really shoving it in his face. "The Americans are in front of you in South Korea, and they have just cut off you re-supply from China behind you!" Then just to put the boot in, less than one hour after the massive detonation, a reporter for South Korea's all-news cable channel, YTN, speaking on condition of anonymity, told The Associated Press that a South Korean government official [who he declined to identify], had stated the likely total number of dead and injured would be around three thousand, which according to my old nuclear tables is almost exactly correct for a tactical weapon of 2 kilotons detonated in an urban area.

As every reader knows, this is the exact figure that was then picked up by rote from New York and published in every Zionist-controlled western newspaper, meaning that until the figure was suddenly and inexplicably reduced from 3,000 to 54 the next day, President Kim Jong Il knew that America already knew the exact magnitude of the blast in Ryongchon, despite no visitors being allowed in the city, and despite all communications from Ryongchon to the outside world being severed completely. The YTN reporter pushed it a bit too far when he later claimed, "Debris from the explosion soared high into the sky and fell on Sinuju," which is nearly ten miles away.

Whether paranoid or not, this accurate reportage of an event that America could not possibly have witnessed, certainly told Kim Jong Il and Chinese Intelligence that South Korea and America must both have been directly involved in the attack. The only reasonable course of action for a "paranoid dictator", would therefore be to wipe out South Korea and take back the entire peninsula from these Imperial aggressors, who had been goading his country for so many years.

The split-second that Kim's artillery opened fire on Seoul, conscription would be back on the agenda in Washington with a vengeance, vigorously supported by more than 100,000 elderly American veterans from the first Korean War, who could be relied on to urge young Americans to "do their bit for America" and "stem the tide of Communism" by agreeing to be blown face down into a rice paddy, there to lie forever after in a giant puddle of blood.

We will probably never know exactly how the tactical nuke was delivered to the Ryongchon railway marshalling yards, though it is OK to ignore the deliberately 'touched-up' satellite photographs carried by every Zionist-controlled western newspaper yesterday, urging you to believe that the long train-shaped black smear along the center, was caused by the massive explosion of a train variously rumored to be carrying ammonium nitrate, and/or dynamite, and/or LPG, and/or gasoline. The only photos of any use to you are those on this page showing the 72 foot crater and 20 p.s.i. overpressure blast damage out to 500 yards, sourced directly from the official Chinese News Agency.

Using these critical data as direct references, it is obvious that weapon yield exceeded 1,000 tons TNT equivalent, and was possible as high as 5,000 tons. The fact that there is a giant crater tells us that this weapon was detonated underground, because surface weapons cannot dig craters at all, as explained comprehensively and conclusively in "Bali Bomb", linked at the bottom of this page.
On the perfectly reasonably assumption that the weapon was American or Israeli in origin, there are really only two possibilities where delivery is concerned. In the first case, a modern portable backpack nuke could have been infiltrated and positioned in one of the Ryongchon underground caverns, originally used during the first Korean War for the deep storage of ammo. Though entirely possible because of the huge population flow to and fro across the Yalu River, this method might have compromised a modern backpack nuke and its handlers, which could be a very hazardous matter in North Korea.

Far more likely would be a nuclear-tipped deep-penetration "bunker busting" missile, capable of diving nearly 100 feet into the ground before detonation, and impossible for the Koreans to detect in advance because of its stealth profile and supersonic speed. When these weapons are used, the blast of the explosion itself 'swallows' the mild supersonic bang, which of course is delayed for a second or two until the missile has already impacted. The most likely weapon and delivery system would be the AGM-142A Raptor, launched about 50 miles out over the Yellow Sea by a B2 Stealth Bomber, though there are other possibilities including submarines.

Where the Zionist Cabal and American neocon academics got it so terribly wrong, lay in their superimposing known American behavior patterns and likely reactions on Kim Jong Il and his Chinese sponsors in Beijing. If an unknown enemy dropped a tactical nuke on the outskirts of Chicago, for example, it is the American way to strike back immediately, even if the correct target has not been positively identified. This is what happened after the attack on the World Trade center, whereupon, after pausing to catch his breath, George Bush attacked a lonely mountain range in eastern Afghanistan. So why on earth expect the Koreans or the Chinese to do things differently?

The reality is that North Korea, and more importantly its sponsor China, have been fighting wars on and off for the last five thousand years using entirely different methods. When the tactical nuke exploded in Ryongchon railway marshalling yards, the first job for Chinese Intelligence was that of working out the most likely attacker, which of course was not a very complex problem. Who apart from America could and would want to nuke a railway marshalling yard in North Korea?

Far more important for China, and impacting directly on suggestions later relayed to Kim Jong Il in Pyong Yang, was the question "WHY?". For thousands of years Chinese fighting doctrine has revolved exclusively around asymmetric [unconventional] warfare, where the name of the game is finding out exactly what your enemy wants you to do, then doing the opposite in order to defeat him.

It seems likely that Chinese Intelligence had worked out the "Why?" of this particular American operation at least 24 hours before I started writing the first paragraph of this report, which should come as no great surprise, because they had a very hefty head start on me. As Chinese warfare doctrine requires, a heavy bamboo curtain was then rapidly thrown across the entire disaster area, and the North Koreans started murmuring gently that the blast might have been "an accident".

The bait was offered, Seoul was brightly lit and wide-open to thousands of artillery pieces positioned just north of the demilitarized zone, but then the bait was abruptly refused. It is the Asian way, and that means asymmetric warfare at its very best. The North Koreans will have to bury more than 1,000 of their own dead in Ryongchon, but have probably grimly calculated with the Chinese that, by refusing to take their attacker's bait, America will in turn pay an even greater price, calculated in body bags being flown back home from Iraq.

Before you young Americans rejoice at having avoided conscription, be warned that the Zionist Cabal has one giant trump card left up its sleeve, which under more normal circumstances only madmen would use. If push comes to shove, one day on the not-too-distant future, a lone 'North Korean Missile' might arc up into the stratosphere, its apogee carefully tracked and recorded by the radars of every nation bordering the Pacific Ocean. The missile will appear to have been launched from North Korea, and will be tipped with exactly the kind of 25 Kiloton 'dirty' atomic warhead the North Koreans are accused of building.

While the world holds its collective breath, the warhead will reenter the atmosphere and descend onto an area of significant population density on the American West Coast. Hollywood will be spared because it is the headquarters of Zionist propaganda, and San Diego will be spared because of the U.S. Fleet. My best guess is San Francisco, and then you, my naive young conscript, will finally believe. You will eagerly rally round the flag and demand to be drafted, and your demand will be met. Then in the fullness of time you will travel far away from America, and finally get blown into a pool of your own blood, in a paddy field next to the River Tigris in southern Iraq.

Update 7 May 2004

Seoul Promotes Possible 'North Korean' Missile Attack on Hawaii

Less than one month after I predicted that the Zionist Cabal might launch a 'false flag' nuclear attack against the U.S. West Coast in order to trigger American conscription for Iraq, the South Korean newspaper Chosun Ilbo has started highlighting the increasing "threat" posed to the west by North Korea's long range missiles, "much sooner than South Korean and American military authorities had expected."

Remember that you have already been told by the CIA [without any evidence] that North Korea has built "at least two nuclear weapons", so what could be more natural than "crazed Dictator" Kim Jong Il deciding to fire one of them at American territory, especially after the railway marshalling yards at Ryongchon were utterly devastated by a tactical nuclear weapon in late April? This is what Chosun Ilbo had to say in its 4 May edition: "North Korea has begun work on deploying intermediate range ballistic missiles (with ranges of 3,000~4,000km) it developed last year, building underground bases at two sites. This is much sooner than South Korean and American military authorities had expected.

"A high ranking government source said Tuesday that, 'North Korea is in the middle of building two underground missile sites in Yangdok County, South Pyongan Province and Sangnam-ni, Hochon County, North Hamgyeong Province. Construction is about 70 to 80 percent complete.'

"The [anonymous] source added, 'In particular, U.S. spy satellites have discovered about 10 of the newly designed IRBMs and mobile launchers at the two sites between last year and the beginning of this year... We presume these bases to be for a new kind of ballistic missile, not Rodong 1's or Scud's.'

"Of the ranges of missiles currently deployed in North Korea, the Rodong 1 has the longest at 1,300 km -- capable of hitting most anywhere in Japan. The Taepodong 1, developed in 1998 and with a range of 1,600~2,200 km, has yet to be deployed.

"The[anonymous] source said the threat posed by the new missile, which can reach Okinawa, Gwam and the vicinity of Hawaii, is part of the background behind the hastened development by the U.S. of its missile defense plans. The new missile, unlike the Taepodong 1 that is launched from a fixed site, is loaded onto a mobile missile launch vehicle. It is, therefore, highly mobile.

"The missile is presumed to be a development on the Soviet SS-N-6 sub-launched ballistic missile; it was originally expected to be revealed during last year's Sept. 9 Foundation Day parades, but the 10 missiles and five launchers were simply brought to Mirim Airbase -- the preparation site for the parades -- and not featured in the celebrations.

"The missiles are 12 meters long and 1.5 wide -- shorter than both the Rodong 1 (15 meters) and Taepodong 1 (23 meters), but have a much longer range and are evaluated as a technically advanced type.

"Authorities feel that former Soviet engineers either directly participated in the development of the missile, the program of which began in the early 90s and was first confirmed by South Korean and U.S. intelligence in 2000, or at the very least Russian technology [was] applied."

Within one hour of publication, this obscure South Korean report was displayed prominently on the front page of http://missilethreat.com, itself a sub-division of the American Claremont Institute, which touts its primary skill as, "The Study of Statesmanship and Political Philosophy". Hmmm... There is nothing very stately or philosophical about nuking your own country for the 'greater good' of Zionism and its lackeys.

Especially worrying about the Chosun Ilbo report is its pointed reference to "sub-launched ballistic missile", which of course is the only method available to America for a 'false flag' launch very close to North Korea, thereby creating the illusion that Kim Jong Il has apparently gone nuts, in turn leading to massed American conscription for Iraq.

Those who think that, "No U.S. Naval Officer would nuke America" are quite right, but, unfortunately, the American submarine captain will have no idea where the missile is going. Since before Gulf War I, all strategic and cruise missiles have been [and still are] remotely targeted from Washington, D.C., giving rise to considerable concern among ship's officers, some of whom have commented in the past that they feel "uneasy" about launching strategic weapons without knowing their targets.

Update 6 August 2004

Jane's Defense Subtly 'Warns' of Attack on U.S. West Coast

Just in case you Americans in the western states have been feeling 'left out of danger' by Ridge's phony warning of attacks on New York, New Jersey and Washington, DC, Jane's Defense has come to the rescue with a subtle warning designed to chill the blood of those facing the "terrible Commies" across the Pacific in in North Korea, who are apparently making ready to kill and maim you with nuclear and biological weapons.

Though many readers may feel the devil is in the detail, and this is just another deflector away from America's lethal misadventures in Iraq, all would do well to remember that the Zionist Cabal is prepared to sacrifice every last man and woman in the U.S. military to conquer Middle East crude oil, so this latest snippet is not mere flag waving, but calculated propaganda. On 3 August 2004, Reuters quoted Jane's as follows: "North Korea is deploying new land- and sea-based ballistic missiles that can carry nuclear warheads and may have sufficient range to hit the United States, according to the authoritative Jane's Defense Weekly.

"In an article due to appear Wednesday, Jane's said the two new systems appeared to be based on a decommissioned Soviet submarine-launched ballistic missile, the R-27. It said communist North Korea had acquired the know-how during the 1990s from Russian missile specialists and by buying 12 former Soviet submarines which had been sold for scrap metal but retained key elements of their missile launch systems."

So it must be those pesky Russians again. Joe McCarthy warned you about them, but you just wouldn't listen, right? Jane's, which did not specify its sources, said the sea-based missile was potentially the more threatening of the two new weapons systems.

"It would fundamentally alter the missile threat posed by the DPRK (Democratic People's Republic of Korea) and could finally provide its leadership with something that it has long sought to obtain -- the ability to directly threaten the continental U.S."

Ian Kemp, news editor of Jane's Defense Weekly, said North Korea would only spend the money and effort on developing such missiles if it intended to fit them with nuclear warheads. "It's pretty certain the North Koreans would not be developing these unless they were intended for weapons of mass destruction warheads, and the nuclear warhead is far and away the most potent of those," he told Reuters. So, if you haven't dug those nuclear shelters in California and Hawaii yet, best get out the shovels...

Gates Orders Measures Against North Korea Missile (Update2)

By Viola Gienger and Tony Capaccio
http://www.bloomberg.com/?b=0&Intro=intro3

June 18 (Bloomberg) -- Defense Secretary Robert Gates said he has ordered the U.S. military to take defensive measures should North Korea attempt to fire a ballistic missile toward Hawaii, even as officials express skepticism of the possibility.

“I think we are in a good position, should it become necessary, to protect American territory,” Gates told reporters at the Pentagon today. Gates said he has directed the deployment of a missile interceptor system known as Theater High Altitude Area Defense, or Thaad, to Hawaii and the positioning of a sea- based radar system near the U.S. state.

The U.S. is making the preparations as North Korea threatens to conduct further missile tests in retaliation for a United Nations Security Council resolution approved on June 12 that imposes more penalties on the regime for previous tests.

The military also is watching a North Korean ship under the resolution’s authorization for the interdiction of vessels suspected of carrying illegal cargo for the regime’s nuclear or missile development efforts.

The U.S. Navy is tracking the Kang Nam because it may be carrying weapons technology though there is no confirmation of its cargo, two U.S. government officials who asked not to be identified said. Joint Chiefs Chairman Admiral Michael Mullen said he “wouldn’t go into any kind of details at this particular point in time,” when asked about the ship during the briefing with Gates.

Mullen said “we intend to vigorously enforce” the UN measure, under which a navy may only ask permission to board a vessel.

Development Timeline

North Korea would need at least three to five years to develop a missile that can reach the U.S., said Marine Corps General James Cartwright, vice chairman of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, earlier this week.

Japan's Yomiuri newspaper reported earlier today that North Korea might fire a long-range ballistic missile toward Hawaii, citing an analysis by the country's Defense Ministry and intelligence from U.S. reconnaissance satellites.

The report said the Taepodong-2 missile wouldn't be able to hit Hawaii's main islands because they are out of the device's 4,000-mile (6,500-kilometer) range.

The State Department expressed skepticism that any North Korean launch would hit a target.

"Their aim has not exactly been their strong suit," said Philip J. Crowley, a spokesman for the State Department.

April Test

The first stage of a ballistic missile fired by North Korea over Japan in April fell into the Sea of Japan and the remaining stages dropped into the Pacific, the U.S. said at the time.

Asked whether a North Korean missile might hit anything, even accidentally, Crowley said, "I think that's why we are concerned about the North Korean provocations, that at some point they might in fact do something intentionally or unintentionally that sparks a larger crisis."

Hawaii would be defended primarily by one of the 28 long- range interceptors in silos in Alaska and California that have had eight successful intercepts out of 13 attempts in testing since 1999.

A Pentagon official involved in the testing said last month that the U.S. system would likely knock out a long-range North Korean missile.

"I'd believe we have a reasonable chance" of an intercept, Charles McQueary said in an interview on his last day in the job.

The Lockheed Martin Corp. Thaad missile is designed to intercept incoming warheads on their descent. The long-range interceptor rockets are meant to strike enemy missiles at higher altitudes.

Banks Alerted

In a separate action aimed at thwarting North Korean efforts to move illicit money, the U.S. Treasury Department today advised banks to watch for deceptive financial steps by the regime.

Banks in the U.S. and abroad should beware of attempts by North Korea to move money through third parties and obscure the origin of funds, to buy prohibited luxury goods and to make large cash deposits, according to the Treasury statement.

PHIL SCHNEIDER SPOKE OUT IN 1995 ABOUT A COSMIC THREAT

As a matter of public record, during a lecture in September 1995, Philip Schneider (USA, 1947-1996) answered a gentleman's question about a cosmic object and said, using the name "Nemesis" instead of Nibiru:

Nemesis is a brown dwarf [...] probably hollow, maybe not a star at all [...] and it is so massive it is dragging comets and meteoric material with it, and space garbage and debris. It will be a threat. Supposedly... it will be here in 2052. Nobody knows for certain...
[source: speech of Philip Schneider at PREPAREDNESS EXPO '95, Sept 22-24, 1995.

I think that the mass indicated by Schneider (which I didn't mention here) is wrong. Maybe he was wrong by a factor of ten (ten times lighter than what he indicated, according to my knowledge...).

I think even the year [2052] indicated by Schneider is wrong (too far away) but - as he said - nobody can be sure. Perhaps he got just pieces of information, and then mixed together information about two different celestial objects of the Solar System, neither of which were officially recognized by the scientific community.

> Phil Schneider, a very brave man, lost his life due to what appeared to be a military-style execution in January 1996. He was found dead in his apartment with piano wire still wrapped around his neck.

According to some sources, he had been brutally tortured repeated before being killed. Phil Schneider was an ex-government engineer who was involved in building underground bases. Phil had a Rhyolite security clearance - the highest every to come out and tell it like it is. His work as a geologist for the government took him to over 70 countries and put him direct contact with the Alien Greys.

He was one of three people to survive the 1979 fire fight between the large Greys and U.S. intelligence and military forces at Dulce underground base. (Actually, one of several firefights, according to other sources. In May 1995, Phil Schneider did a lecture on what he had discovered. Seven months later he was tortured and killed by those for whom he had previously worked. This man's final acts should not go unnoticed.

Phil's connection to the Philadelphia experiment comes through his father Oscar. Oscar Schneider was the medical officer for the Philadelphia Experiment and kept that secret with him until he was close to death. Before he died, Oscar told Phil the true story of his past and gave him photographs to back up his claims.

Phil was the straw that broke the camel's back...after his betrayal there was no turning back for the struggle for the new world order. It became do or die.

No one would believe that the earth had reevolved repetedly over millions of years, so they had to go with all out brute war pull no punches.

It was their downfall

This does not include the Mystery Babylon series.

Most of it comes from this torrent:

I reorganized everything according to tape number/date, and lowered the file size of quite a number of audios, because some of them were ridiculously large.

Cooper Speaks of Alex Jones:

Feb 4th, 2008 - Re-Added: Whole William Cooper program talking about the Alex Jones Y2K hoax (Over an Hour long, worth it though.)

More William Cooper outing Jones (Different than the one going around) Memorial

Dear Friends,

William Cooper was a sincere Patriot. When he foretold that there would be a great attack on America and that the attack would be blamed on Osama Bin Laden he explained exactly why.

It was because about five months before 9/11 a CNN reporter walked right in on Osama and got an interview where Osama allegedly stated that there would be a huge attack on America and/or Israel.

Cooper pointed out that Osama was a wanted man and had been successfully hiding from the "world's greatest intelligence apparatus" as Cooper put it. Yet a Journalist from CNN (CIA) walks in a gets an interview with him as explained by Cooper here.

Common sense like this is not needed in the spin driven, historically bankrupt "Alternative media" that has been so completely hijacked that it's a total joke at this point. (Ha! and I get called cointelpro for pointing out highly suspicious aspects of "Alternative media". that tells me that there is no cointelpro against Jones. Or the Cointelpro is the Alex Jones movement itself.)

Cooper was onto the biggie 'agent' in the movement. Alex Jones. He called Jones a liar. If you are in the patriot movement which is synonymous with exposing 'TRUTH' and a great patriarch like William Cooper calls you a liar you can pretty much expect that Alex Jones would not be able to 'take off' the way his movement did.

Cooper's legacy is turning out to be an important one. The spotting and outing of a phony in our midst. Alex Jones, this one's for you. You lied about Cooper to the patriot movement. You are the liar, the divider, the wolf in sheeps clothing. You are the phony, the entertainer, the magician and ringleader of a multi ringed circus.

You are the Jesuit infiltrator so carefully groomed and placed in out midst with falsities guiding your every move from the very beginning.

I've come to see how the people who follow you are incredibly mentally challenged. I see this from the attacks i receive from your cult members.

I followed Jones for years but I wasn't a cult member. When I came across layer after layer of inconsistencies in his reporting I had to make the decision to back off. Then from and observational stance of his work. I was able to piece together so much information on him that it is impossible for me to look at anything he says or does as truth at all.

I wanted to concentrate on remembering William cooper today. But for me personally, I thank in my heart the truth that Cooper told. Which got him killed in a tremendously treasonous and suspicious manner outside his home on Nov 5th 2001.

In Cooper's book, "Behold the pale horse", Cooper pointed out that Pope JPII was a salesman of the chemical Zyklon B gas when he worked for IG Farben during WWII. That chemical was used to gas hundreds of thousands of Jews at Auschwitz. Yet Ron Paul sent a public letter to Pope JPII praising him as a "Pro Life figure".

I tell you something is desperately wrong. I also tell you that so much of this confusion can be straightened out if you take some time off and study into the Vatican and Jesuits and the Knights of Malta. Who the Knights of malta were and are and where they are and what they're doing.

If you do this simple thing. You will see who is of truth and who are deceived and or agents and or are passing disinformation all over the place.

Your Brother in Truth, in Patriotism, in Love of Freedom,

Thomas Richards

The circumstances surrounding Cooper's death are controversial. On November 5, 2001, officers of the Apache County Sheriff's Office decided to serve Cooper a warrant based on the above-mentioned charges. For reasons not explained, the Sheriff's Office sent deputies to Cooper's home at approximately 11:00PM, and instead of knocking on his door and announcing themselves, the deputies attempted to lure Cooper from his house by posing as civilians playing loud music on or near his property. Cooper, who was an above the knee amputee, went down to investigate the scene in his truck. It is disputed as to whether the deputies identified themselves or tried to serve an arrest warrant at that time. Nevertheless, Cooper announced he was returning to his house to contact the Eager Police Department, either to verify the warrant or to contact the local authorities in order to report what he may have still believed was a real disturbance. Before he could do so however, the sheriff's deputies tried to apprehend him, at which point shooting began. Cooper was armed and one deputy was wounded. Another deputy returned fire, killing Cooper.[8] Milton William Cooper was 58 years old.

Bro Eric,
William Milton cooper did what Jones never did and never will do.

The "Knights of Malta" are the militia of the Pope. In the book "Behold a Pale Horse" you will find research into this. It is one of the NWO SECRET SOCIETIES that are determined to trample on the gool old USA.

"Stop listening to what Buchanan says and research meticulously his history and read every column he has written. Did you know that he is on record as writing that we need a Constitutional Convention to deal with the fact that the constitution is outdated? Did you know that Ross Perot is on record saying exactly the same thing? Did you know that Buchanan was the Chairman of a super secret Intelligence group named for the number of the room in which the group met in the White House? Did you know that Buchanan has direct ties to the CIA? Did you know that William Casey, Director of the CIA was Knights of Malta? Did you know that Ollie North is Knights of Malta? Did you know that George Bush is knights of Malta and just finished a Centra and South American Speaking tour on behalf of the Knights of Malta? (James Daughterty, Newsgroup, quotes from Behold a Pale Horse, by (martyr) William Cooper.)

View Full Version: MJ-12 or PI-40 Committee

Title: MJ-12 or PI-40 Committee
Description: MWC on this group

Keith - September 21, 2008 02:12 AM (GMT)

i found this on the interent and it appears to be what MWC typed on the MJ-12 and pi 40 committee...same group with a different name involved in Alien cover-up and alien investigation.\

http://72.14.205.104/search?q=cache:_4RlPi...clnk&cd=2&gl=us

MJ-12 is an ULTRA TOP SECRET research and development Intelligence operation. MJ-12was established by President Truman on September 24, 1947. Later, MJ-12 was set up as a "Committee" inside the National Security Council (NSC) by President Eisenhower in 1954 by Secret Executive Order, "Order Number 54-12". The NSC called this group the "54-12 Committee", with the President having responsibility to approve all "Black" (covert) projects.

The MJ-12 Group since then, has been called the "Special Committee"; the "303 Committee" and currently the "40 Committee". It is described as the "Directorate" of the NSC. The "40 Committee" (PI-40) has access to advanced technology and teams to conduct "the cover-ups". In the past, this committee was headed by Dr. Henry Kissenger (Code name: "The Overseer").

OPERATION MAJORITY - CR-20M7/6.2 - FILE: MTR/K-25 MWC/JL - AFMWC/1972USN

Operation Majority is the name of the operation responsible for every aspect, project and all consequences of Alien presence on earth.

MAJESTY was listed as the code name for the President of the United States for communications concerning this information.

GRUDGE contains 16 volumes of documented information collected from the beginning of the United States investigation of the Unidentified Flying Objects (UFO's) and Identified Alien Crafts (IACs). The project was funded by the CIA, (confidential funds, non-appropriated) and money from the illicit drug trade. (It was rumored in the higher echelon's of the Air Force that participation in the illegal drug trade was justified in that it would identify and eliminate the weak elements of our society.)

The purpose of GRUDGE was to collect all scientific, technological, medical and intelligence information from UFO & IAC sightings as well as contacts with Alien Life Forms. This orderly file of collected information has been used to advance the United States Air Force Space Program, (ULTRA TOP SECRET).

JASON SOCIETY (Jason Scholars) Former President Eisenhower commissioned a secret society known as the Jason Society (or Jason Scholars) under the leadership of the following; Director of Central Intelligence, Allen Welsh Dulles, Dr Zbigniew Brzezinski, President of the Trilateral Commission from 1973 until 1976, and Dr. Henry Kissenger, leader of the scientific effort, to sift through all the facts, evidence, technology, lies and deceptions and find the truth of the Alien question. The society was made up of thirty two (32) of the most prominent men in the USA.

MJ-12 is the name of the secret control group inside the Jason Society. The top 12 members of the 32 members of the Jason Society were designated as MJ-12. MJ-12 has control of everything. They are designated by the code J-1, J-2, J-3, etc. all the way through the members of the Jason Society. The director of Central Intelligence was appointed J-1 and is the Director of the MJ-12 group. MJ-12 use to only be responsible to the President of the United States (not true anymore). The actual cost of funding the Alien connected projects is higher than anything you could imagine! Believe it or not, MJ-12 runs most of the worlds illegal drug trade. This was done to hide funding and thus keep the secret from congress and the people of the United States. It was justified in that it would identify and eliminate the weak and undesired elements of our society.

A secret meeting place was constructed for the MJ-12 group in Maryland and is only accessible by air. It contains full living, recreational, and other facilities for the MJ-12 group and the Jason Society. It is code named "The Country Club". The land for The Country Club was donated by the Rockerfeller family. Only those with ULTRA TOP SECRET - MAJI clearances are allowed to go there.

MAJI - Majority Agency for Joint Intelligence. All information, disinformation, and intelligence is gathered and evaluated by this agency. This agency is responsible for all disinformation and operates in conjunction with the CIA, NSA, DIA, and the Office of Naval Intelligence. This is a very powerful organization and all Alien projects are under its control. MAJI is responsible only to MJ-12. MAJIC is the security classification and clearance of all Alien connected material, projects, and information.

MAJIC - means MAJI-controlled (MAJI plus Controlled = MAJIC)

NOTE: MJ-1 is the classification for the Director of MAJI, who is the Director of the CIA and reports only to the President. Other members of MAJI are designnated MJ-2, MJ-3, etc. This is why there is some confusion about references of MJ-12, the group or MJ-12 the person.

* Designation for MJ-12, the group are MAJI or MAJIC * Designation in official documents about MJ-12 means the person only.

In 1947, PROJECT SIGN was created to acquire as much information as possible about UFO's, their performance characteristics and their purposes. In order to preserve security, liason between Project Sign and MJ-12 was limited to two individuals within the intelligence division of the Air Material Command whose roll was to pass along certain types of information through channels. Project Sign evolved Project Grudge in December of 1948. Project Grudge had an overt civilian counterpart named PROJECT BLUE BOOK, with which we are all familiar. Only "Safe" reports were passed to Project Blue Book.

MJ-12 was originally organized by General George C. Marshall in July 1947 to study the Roswell-Magdalena UFO crash recovery and debris. Admiral Hillenkoetter, director of the CIA from May 1, 1947 until September 1950, decided to activate the "Robertson Panel," which was designed to monitor civilian UFO study groups that were appearing all over the country. He also joined NICAP in 1956 and was chosen as a member of its board of directors. It was from this position that he was able to act as the MJ-12 "Mole", along with his team of other covert experts. They were able to steer NICAP in any direction they wanted to go. With the "Flying Saucer Program" under complete control of MJ-12 and with the physical evidence hidden away, General

Marshall felt more at ease with this very bizarre situation. These men and their successors have most successfully kept most of the public fooled up to the present, including much of the western world, by setting up false experts and throwing their influence behind them to make their plan work, with considerable success until now.

Within 6 months of the Roswell crash on July 2, 1947 and the finding of another crashed UFO at San Augustine Flats near Magdelena, New Mexico on July 3, 1947, a great deal of reorganization of agencies and shuffling of people took place. The main thrust behind the original "Security Lid", and the very reason for its construction, was the analysis and attempted duplication of the technologies of the discs. The activity was headed up by the following groups.

* The Research and Development Board (R&DB)

* Air Force Research and Development (AFRD)

* The Office of Naval Research (ONR)

* CIA Office of Scientific Intelligence (CIA-OSI)

* NSA Office of Scientific Intelligence (NSA-OSI)

No single one of these groups knew the whole story. Each group was to know only the parts that MJ-12 allowed them to know. MJ-12 also operates through the various civilian intelligence and investigative groups. The CIA and FBI are manipulated by MJ-12 to carry out their purposes. The NSA was created in the first place to protect the secret of the recovered flying discs, and eventually got complete control over all communication intelligence. This control allows the NSA to monitor any individual through mail, telephone, telexes, telegrams, and now through on-line computers, monitoring private and personal communications as they may desire.

THE "MAJIC PROJECTS"

SIGMA is the project which first established communications with the Aliens and is responsible for communications.

PLATO is the project responsible for Diplomatic Relations with the Aliens. This project secured a formal treaty with the aliens.

AQUARIUS is the project which compiled the history of the Alien presence and interaction on Earth and the HOMO SAPIENS.

GARNET is the project responsible for control of all information and documents regarding the Alien subjects and accountability of their information and documents.

PLUTO is a project responsible for evaluating all UFO and IAC information pertaining to space technology.

POUNCE project was formed to recover all downed and/or crashed craft and Aliens. This project provided cover stories and operations to mask the true endeavor, whenever necessary. Covers which have been used were crashed experimental aircraft, construction, Mining, etc. This project has been successful and is ongoing today.

NRO is the National Reconnaissance Organization based at Fort Carson, Colorado. It's responsible for security on all Alien or Alien Spacecraft connected to the projects.

DELTA is the designation for the specific arm of NRO which is especially trained and tasked with security of all MAJI projects. It's a security team and task force from NRO especially trained to provide Alien tasked projects and LUNA security (Also has the CODE NAME: "Men In Black" [MIB]). This project is ongoing.

BLUE TEAM is the first project responsible for reaction and/or recovery of downed and/or crashed Alien craft and/or Aliens. This was a U.S. Air Force Material Command project.

SIGN is the second project responsible for collection of intelligence and determining whether Alien presence constitutes a treat to the U.S. National Security. SIGN absorbed the BLUE TEAM project. This was a U.S. Air Force and CIA project.

REDLIGHT was the project to test fly recovered Alien craft. This project was postponed after every attempt resulted in the destruction of the craft and death of the pilots. This project was carried out at AREA 51, Groom Lake, (Dreamland) in Nevada. Project REDLIGHT was resumed in 1972. This project has been partially successful. UFO sightings of craft accompanied by Black Helicopters are Project REDLIGHT assets. This project is now ongoing at AREA 51 in Nevada. (Believed to have moved to Mexico at this time for testing).

SNOWBIRD was established as a cover for Project Redlight. A "Flying Saucer" type aircraft was built using conventional technology. It was unveiled to the press and flown in public on several occasions. The purpose was to explain accidental sightings or disclosures of Redlight as having been Snowbird crafts. This was a very successful disinformation operation. This project is only activated when needed. This deception has not been used for many years. This project is currently in mothballs, until it is needed again.

BLUE BOOK was a U.S. Air Force, UFO, and Alien Intelligence collection and disinformation project. This project was terminated and its collected information and duties were absorbed by project Aquarius. A classified report named "Grudge/Blue Book, Report Number 13" is the only significant information derived from the project and is unavailable to the public.

[End of Colonel Wilson's report.]

Most of this knowledge comes directly from or is a result of my own research into the TOP SECRET/MAJIC material which I personally saw and read between the years 1970 and 1973 as a member of the Intelligence Briefing Team of the Commander in Chief of the Pacific Fleet. Since some of this information was derived from sources that I cannot divulge for obvious reasons, and from published sources which I personally cannot vouch for, this paper must be treated as a hypothesis. Although, I firmly believe that this is the true nature of the Beast. It is the only scenario that has been able to cohesively bind all the diverse elements which have been driving researchers to tears in their quest for answers. It is the only scenario that answers all the questions and places the various fundamental mysteries in an arena that makes sense. It is the only explanation which shows the chronology of events and shows that the different chronologies when assembled together match perfectly. The bulk of this I know to be true. As for the rest I do not know and that is why this paper must be termed a hypothesis.

During the years following World War II the government of the United States was confronted with a series of events which were to change beyond prediction its future and with it the future of humanity. These events were so incredible that they defied belief. A stunned President Truman and his top Military Commanders found themselves virtually impotent after having just won the most devastating and costly war in history. The United States had developed, used, and was the only nation on earth in possession of the Atomic Bomb which alone had the potential to destroy any enemy, and even the Earth itself. At that time the United States had the best economy, the most advanced technology, the highest standard of living, exerted the most influence, and fielded the largest and most powerful military forces in history. We can only imagine the confusion and concern when the informed elite of the United States Government discovered that an alien spacecraft piloted by insect-like beings from a totally incomprehensible culture had crashed in the desert of New Mexico.

Between January 1947 and December 1952 at least 16 crashed or downed alien craft, 65 alien bodies, and 1 live alien were recovered. An additional alien craft had exploded and nothing was recovered from that incident. Of these incidents, 13 occurred within the borders of the United States not including the craft which disintegrated in the air. Of these 13, 1 was in Arizona, 11 were in New Mexico, and 1 was in Nevada. Three occurred in foreign countries. Of those 1 was in Norway, and the last 2 were in Mexico. Sightings of UFOS were so numerous that serious investigation and debunking of each report became impossible utilizing the existing intelligence assets.

An alien craft was found on February 13, 1948 on a Mesa near Aztec New Mexico. Another craft was located on March 25, 1948 in Hart Canyon near Aztec New Mexico. It was 100 feet in diameter. A total of 17 alien bodies were recovered from those two craft. Of even greater significance was the discovery of a large number of human body parts stored within both of these vehicles. A demon had reared its ugly head and paranoia quickly took hold of everyone then 'in the know'. The Secret lid immediately became an Above Top Secret lid and was screwed down tight. The security blanket was even tighter than that imposed upon the Manhattan Project. In the coming years these events were to become the most closely guarded secrets in the history of the world.

A special group of America's top scientists were organized under the name Project Sign in December of 1947 to study the phenomenon. The whole nasty business was contained within the shroud of secrecy. Project Sign evolved into Project Grudge in December of 1948. A low level collection and disinformation project named Blue Book was formed under Grudge. 16 volumes were to come out of Grudge including the controversial "Grudge 13" which I and Bill English saw, read, and revealed to the public. "Blue Teams" were put together to recover the crashed discs and dead or alive aliens. The Blue Teams were later to evolve into Alpha Teams under Project Pounce.
During these early years the United States Air Force and the Central Intelligence Agency exercised complete control over the Alien Secret. In fact the CIA was formed by Presidential Executive Order first as the Central Intelligence Group for the express purpose of dealing with the alien presence. Later the National Security Act was passed establishing it as the Central Intelligence Agency. The National Security Council was established to oversee the intelligence community and especially the alien endeavor. A series of National Security Council Memos and Executive Orders removed the CIA from the sole task of gathering foreign intelligence and slowly but thoroughly 'legalized' direct action in the form of covert activities at home and abroad.
On December 9, 1947 Truman approved issuance of NSC-4, entitled "Coordination of Foreign Intelligence Information Measures" at the urging of Secretaries Marshall, Forrestal, Patterson, and the director of the State Department's Policy Planning Staff, Kennan.
The Foreign and Military Intelligence, Book 1, "Final Report of the Select Committee to Study Governmental Operations with Respect to Intelligence Activities." United States Senate, 94th Congress, 2nd Session, Report No. 94-755, April 26, 1976, p. 49 states: "This directive empowered the secretary of state to coordinate overseas information activities designed to counter communism. A top secret annex to NSC-4, NSC-4A, instructed the director of Central Intelligence to undertake covert psychological activities in pursuit of the aims set forth in NSC-4. The initial authority given the CIA for covert operations under NSC-4A did not establish formal procedures for either coordinating or approving these operations. It simply directed the DCI to "undertake covert actions and to ensure, through liaison with State and Defense, that the resulting operations were consistent with American policy."
Later NSC-10/1 and NSC-10/2 were to supersede NSC-4 and NSC- 4A and expand the covert abilities even further. The Office of Policy Coordination (OPC) was chartered to carry out an expanded program of covert activities. NSC-10/1 and NSC-10/2 validated illegal and extra-legal practices and procedures as being agreeable to the national security leadership. The reaction was swift. In the eyes of the intelligence community "no holds were barred". Under NSC-10/1 an Executive Coordination Group, was established to review, but not approve, covert project proposals. The ECG was secretly tasked to coordinate the alien projects. NSC-10/1 & /2 were interpreted to mean that no one at the top wanted to know about anything until it was over and successful. These actions established a buffer between the President and the information. It was intended that this buffer serve as a means for the President to deny knowledge if leaks divulged the true state of affairs. This buffer was used in later years for the purpose of effectively isolating succeeding Presidents from any knowledge of the alien presence other than what the Secret Government and the intelligence community wanted them to know.

NSC-10/2 established a study panel which met secretly and was made up of the scientific minds of the day. The study panel was not called MJ-12. Another NSC memo, NSC-10/5 further outlined the duties of the study panel. these NSC memos and secret Executive Orders set the stage for the creation of MJ-12 only 4 years later.
Secretary of Defense James Forrestal began to object to the secrecy. He was a very idealistic and religious man who believed that the public should be told. When he began to talk to leaders of the opposition party and leaders of the Congress about the alien problem he was asked to resign by Truman. He expressed his fears to many people and rightfully believed that he was being watched. This was interpreted by those who were ignorant of the facts as paranoia. Forrestal later was said to have suffered a mental breakdown and was admitted to Bethesda Naval Hospital. In fact it was feared that Forrestal would begin to talk again and he had to be isolated and discredited.
Sometime in the early morning of May 22, 1949 agents of the CIA tied a sheet around his neck, fastened the other end to a fixture in his room and threw James Forrestal out the window. The sheet tore and he plummeted to his death. He became one of the first victims of the cover-up.
The live alien that had been taken from the 1949 Roswell crash was named EBE. The name had been suggested by Dr. Vannever Bush and was short for Extraterrestrial Biological Entity. EBE had a tendency to lie and for over a year would give only the desired answer to questions asked. Those questions which would have resulted in an undesirable answer went unanswered. At some point during the second year of captivity he began to open up and the information derived from EBE was startling to say the least. This compilation of his revelations became the foundation of what would later be called the "Yellow Book". Photographs were taken of EBE which, among others, I and Bill English were to view years later in GRUDGE 13.
In late 1951 EBE became ill. Medical personnel had been unable to determine the cause of EBE's illness and had no background from which to draw. EBE's system was chlorophyll based and he processed food into energy much the same as plants. Waste material was excreted the same as plants. It was decided that an expert in botany was called for. A botanist, Dr. Guillermo Mendoza, was brought in to try and help him recover. Dr. Mendoza worked to save EBE until mid 1952 when EBE died. Dr. Mendoza became the expert on alien biology.
In a futile attempt to save EBE and to gain favor with this technologically superior alien race the United States began broadcasting a call for help early in 1952 into the vast regions of space. The call went unanswered but the project continued as an effort of good faith.
President Truman created the super secret National Security Agency by secret Executive Order on November 4, 1952. Its primary purpose was to decipher the alien communications and language and establish a dialog with the aliens. This most urgent task was a continuation of the earlier effort and was code named SIGMA. The secondary purpose of the NSA was to monitor all communications and emissions from any and all devices worldwide for the purpose of gathering intelligence, both human and alien, and to contain the secret of the alien presence. Project Sigma was successful. The NSA also maintains communications with the Luna base and other Secret Space Programs. By Executive Order The NSA is exempt from all laws which do not specifically name the NSA in the text of the law as being subject to that law. That means that if the agency is not spelled out in the text of any and every law passed by the Congress it is not subject to that or those laws. The NSA now performs many other duties and in fact is the premier agency within the intelligence community. Today the NSA receives 75% of the moneys allotted to the intelligence community. The old saying "where the money goes therein the power resides is true. The DCI today is a figurehead maintained as a public ruse. The primary task of the NSA is still alien communications but now includes other Alien projects as well.

President Truman had been keeping our allies, including the Soviet Union, informed of the developing alien problem since the Roswell recovery. This had been done in case the aliens turned out to be a threat to the human race. Plans were formulated to defend the Earth in case of invasion. Great difficulty was encountered in maintaining international secrecy. It was decided that an outside group was necessary to coordinate and control international efforts in order to hide the secret from the normal scrutiny of governments by the press. The result was the formation of a secret society which became known as the "Bilderburgers". The headquarters of this group is Geneva, Switzerland. The Bilderburgers evolved into a secret world government that now controls everything. The United Nations was then, and is now, an international joke.

In 1953 a new president occupied the White House. He was a man used to a structured staff organization with a chain of command. His method was to delegate authority and rule by committee. He made major decisions but only when his advisors were unable to come to consensus. His normal method was to read through or listen to several alternatives and then approve one. Those who worked closely with him have stated that his favorite comment was, "just do whatever it takes". He spent a lot of time on the golf course. This was not at all unusual for a man who had been career Army with the ultimate position of Supreme Allied Commander during the war. A post which carried 5 stars along with it. This President was General of the Army Dwight David Eisenhower. During his first year in office, 1953, at least 10 more crashed discs were recovered along with 26 dead and 4 live aliens. Of the 10, 4 were found in Arizona, 2 in Texas, 1 in New Mexico, 1 in Louisiana, 1 in Montana, and 1 in South Africa. There were hundreds of sightings.

Eisenhower knew that he had to wrestle and beat the alien problem. He knew that he could not do it by revealing the secret to the Congress. Early in 1953 the new President turned to his friend and fellow member of the Council on Foreign Relations Nelson Rockefeller for help with the alien problem. Eisenhower and Rockefeller began planning the secret structure of alien task supervision which was to become a reality within 1 year. The idea for MJ-12 was thus born. It was Nelson's Uncle Winthrop Aldrich who had been crucial in convincing Eisenhower to run for President. The whole Rockefeller family and with them the Rockefeller empire had solidly backed Ike. Asking Rockefeller for help with the alien problem was to be the biggest mistake Eisenhower ever made for the future of the United States and most probably all of humanity.

Within 1 week of Eisenhower's election he had appointed Nelson Rockefeller chairman of a Presidential Advisory Committee on Government Organization. Rockefeller was responsible for planning the reorganization of the government. New Deal programs went into 1 single Cabinet position called the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. When the Congress approved the new Cabinet position in April of 1953, Nelson was named to the post of Undersecretary to Oveta Culp Hobby.
In 1953 Astronomers discovered large objects in space which were moving toward the Earth. It was first believed that they were asteroids. Later evidence proved that the objects could only be Spaceships. Project Sigma intercepted alien radio communications. When the objects reached the Earth they took up a very high orbit around the Equator. There were several huge ships, and their actual intent was unknown. Project Sigma, and a new project, Plato, through radio communications using the computer binary language, was able to arrange a landing that resulted in face to face contact with alien beings from another planet. Project Plato was tasked with establishing diplomatic relations with this race of space aliens.
In the meantime a race of human looking aliens contacted the U.S. Government. This alien group warned us against the aliens that were orbiting the Equator and offered to help us with our spiritual development. They demanded that we dismantle and destroy our nuclear weapons as the major condition. They refused to exchange technology citing that we were spiritually unable to handle the technology which we then possessed. They believed that we would use any new technology to destroy each other. This race stated that we were on a path of self destruction and we must stop killing each other, stop polluting the Earth, stop raping the Earth's natural resources, and learn to live in harmony. These terms were met with extreme suspicion, especially the major condition of nuclear disarmament. It was believed that meeting that condition would leave us helpless in the face of an obvious alien threat. We also had nothing in history to help with the decision. Nuclear disarmament was not considered to be within the best interest of the United States. The overtures were rejected.
Later in 1954 the race of large nosed Gray Aliens which had been orbiting the Earth landed at Holloman Air Force Base. A basic agreement was reached. This race identified themselves as originating from a Planet around a red star in the Constellation of Orion which we called Betelgeuse. They stated that their planet was dying and that at some unknown future time they would no longer be able to survive there. This led to a second landing at Edwards Air Force Base. The historical event had been planned in advance and details of the treaty had been agreed upon. Eisenhower arranged to be in Palm Springs on vacation. On the appointed day the President was spirited away to the base and the excuse was given to the press that he was visiting a dentist.
President Eisenhower met with the aliens and a formal treaty between the Alien Nation and the United States of America was signed. We then received our first Alien Ambassador from outer space. His name and title was His "Omnipotent Highness Krlll", pronounced Krill. In the American tradition of disdain for royal titles he was secretly called "Original Hostage Krlll". You should know that the Alien flag is known as the "Trilateral Insignia" and is displayed on their craft and worn on their uniforms. Both of these landings and the second meeting were filmed. These films exist today.

The treaty stated: The aliens would not interfere in our affairs and we would not interfere in theirs. We would keep their presence on earth a secret. They would furnish us with advanced technology and would help us in our technological development. They would not make any treaty with any other earth nation. They could abduct humans on a limited and periodic basis for the purpose of medical examination and monitoring of our development with the stipulation that the humans would not be harmed, would be returned to their point of abduction, that the humans would have no memory of the event, and that the Alien nation would furnish MJ-12 with a list of all human contacts and abductees on a regularly scheduled basis. It was agreed that each nation would receive the Ambassador of the other for as long as the treaty remained in force. It was further agreed that the Alien nation and the United States would exchange 16 personnel each to the other with the purpose of learning, each of the other. The Alien "Guests" would remain on earth and the human "Guests" would travel to the Alien point of origin for a specified period of time then return, at which point a reverse exchange would be made. It was also agreed that bases would be constructed underground for the use of the Alien nation and that 2 bases would be constructed for the joint use of the Alien nation and the United States Government. Exchange of technology would take place in the jointly occupied bases. These Alien bases would be constructed under Indian reservations in the 4 corners of Utah, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, and 1 would be constructed in Nevada in the area known as S-4 located approximately 7 miles south of the western border of Area 51, known as Dreamland. All alien areas are under complete control of the Naval Department and all personnel who work in these complexes receive their checks from the Navy. Construction of the bases began immediately but progress was slow until large amounts of money were made available in 1957. Work continued on the "Yellow Book".
Project REDLIGHT was formed and experimentation in test flying alien craft was begun in earnest. A super TOP SECRET facility was built at Groom Lake in Nevada in the midst of the weapons test range. It was code named DREAMLAND. The installation was placed under the Department of the Navy and clearance of all personnel required a "Q" clearance as well as Executive (Presidential) approval. This is ironic due to the fact that the President of the United States does not have clearance to visit the site. The alien base and exchange of technology actually took place in an Area known as S-4. Area S-4 was code named "The Dark Side of the Moon".
The Army was tasked to form a super secret organization to furnish security for all alien tasked projects. This organization became the National Reconnaissance Organization based at Fort Carson, Colorado. The specific teams trained to secure the projects were called Delta.
A second project code named SNOWBIRD was promulgated to explain away any sightings of the REDLIGHT crafts as being Air Force experiments. The SNOWBIRD crafts were manufactured using conventional technology and were flown for the press on several occasions. Project SNOWBIRD was also used to debunk legitimate public sightings of alien craft (UFOS). Project SNOWBIRD was very successful and reports from the public declined steadily until recent years.

A multimillion-dollar SECRET fund was organized and kept by the Military Office of the White House. This fund was used to build over 75 deep underground facilities. Presidents who asked were told the fund was used to build Deep Underground Shelters for the President in case of war. Only a few were built for the President. Millions of dollars were funnelled through this office to MJ-12 and then out to the contractors and was used to build TOP SECRET alien bases as well as TOP SECRET DUMB (Deep Underground Military Bases), and the facilities promulgated by "Alternative 2", throughout the nation. President Johnson used this fund to build a movie theater and pave the road on his ranch. He had no idea of its true purpose.

The secret White House underground construction fund was set up in 1957 by President Eisenhower. The funding was obtained from Congress under the guise of "construction and maintenance of secret sites where the President could be taken in case of military attack: Presidential Emergency Sites". The sites are literally holes in the ground, deep enough to withstand a nuclear blast and are outfitted with state of the art communications equipment. To date there are more than seventy-five sites spread around the country which were built using money from this fund. The Atomic Energy Commission has built at least an additional 22 underground sites.

The location and everything to do with these sites were and are considered and treated as TOP SECRET. The money was and is in control of the Military Office of the White House, and was and is laundered through a circuitous web that even the most knowledgeable spy or accountant can not follow. As of 1980 only a few at the beginning and end of this web knew what the money was for. At the beginning were Representative George Mahon, of Texas, the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee and of its Defense Subcommittee; and Representative Robert Sikes, of Florida, chairman of the House Appropriations Military Construction Subcommittee. Today it is rumored that House Speaker Jim Wright controls the money in Congress and that a power struggle is underway to remove him. At the end of the line were the President, MJ-12, the director of the Military Office and a commander at the Washington Navy Yard.

The money was authorized by the Appropriations Committee who allocated it to the Department of Defense as a TOP SECRET item in the Army construction program. The Army, however could not spend it and in fact did not even know what it was for. Authorization to spend the money was in reality given to the Navy. The money was channeled to the Chesapeake Division of the Navy Engineers who did not know what it was for either. Not even the Commanding Officer, who was an Admiral, knew what the fund was to be used for. Only one man, a Navy Commander, who was assigned to the Chesapeake Division but in reality was responsible only to the Military Office of the White House knew of the actual purpose, amount, and ultimate destination of the TOP SECRET fund. The total secrecy surrounding the fund meant that almost every trace of it could be made to disappear by the very few people who controlled it. There has never been and most likely never will be an audit of this secret money.

Large amounts of money were transferred from the TOP SECRET fund to a location at Palm Beach, Florida that belongs to the Coast Guard called Peanut Island. The island is adjacent to property which was owned by Joseph Kennedy. The money was said to have been used for landscaping and general beautification. Some time ago a TV news special on the Kennedy assassination told of a Coast Guard Officer transferring money in a briefcase to a Kennedy employee across this property line. Could this have been a secret payment to the Kennedy family for the loss of their son John F. Kennedy? The payments continued through the year 1967 and then stopped. The total amount transferred is unknown and the actual use of the money is unknown.

Meanwhile, Nelson Rockefeller changed positions again. This time he was to take C. D. Jackson's old position which had been called the Special Assistant for Psychological Strategy. With Nelson's appointment the name was changed to the Special Assistant for Cold War Strategy. This position would evolve over the years into the same position Henry Kissinger was ultimately to hold under President Nixon. Officially he was to give "Advice and assistance in the development of increased understanding and cooperation among all peoples". The official description was a smoke screen for secretly he was the Presidential Coordinator for the Intelligence Community. In his new post Rockefeller reported directly, and only, to the President. He attended meetings of the Cabinet, the Council on Foreign Economic Policy, and the ational Security Council which was the highest policy-making body in the government.

Nelson Rockefeller was also given a second important job as the head of the secret unit called the Planning Coordination Group which was formed under NSC 5412/1 in March of 1955. The group consisted of different ad hoc members depending on the subject on the agenda. The basic members were Rockefeller, A representative of the Department of Defense, A representative of the Department of State, and the Director of Central Intelligence. It was soon called the "5412 Committee" or the "Special Group". NSC 5412/1 established the rule that covert operations were subject to approval by an executive committee, whereas in the past these operations were initiated solely on the authority of the Director of Central Intelligence.

By secret Executive Memorandum, NSC 5410, Eisenhower had preceded NSC 5412/1 in 1954 to establish a permanent committee (not ad hoc) to be known as Majority Twelve (MJ-12) to oversee and conduct all covert activities concerned with the alien question. NSC 5412/1 was created to explain the purpose of these meetings when Congress and the Press became curious. Majority Twelve was made up of Nelson Rockefeller, the Director of Central Intelligence Allen Welsh Dulles, the Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, the Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Admiral Arthur W. Radford, the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation J. Edgar Hoover, and six men from the executive committee of the Council on Foreign Relations known as the "Wise Men". These men were all members of a secret society of scholars that called themselves "The Jason Society", or "The Jason Scholars" who recruited their members from the "Skull and Bones" and the "Scroll and Key" societies of Harvard and Yale.

The "Wise Men" were key members of the Council on Foreign Relations. There were 12 members including the first 6 from Government positions thus Majority Twelve. This group was made up over the years of the top officers and directors of the Council on Foreign Relations and later the Trilateral Commission. Gordon Dean, George Bush and Zbigniew Brzezinski were among them. The most important and influential of the "Wise Men" who served on MJ-12 were John McCloy, Robert Lovett, Averell Harriman, Charles Bohlen, George Kennan, and Dean Acheson. Their policies were to last well into the decade of the 70s. It is significant that President Eisenhower as well as the first 6 MJ-12 members from the Government were also members of the Council on Foreign Relations.

Thorough researchers will soon discover that not all of the "Wise Men" attended Harvard or Yale and not all of them were chosen for "Skull and Bones" or "Scroll and Key" membership during their college years. You will be able to quickly clear up this mystery by obtaining the book "The Wise Men" by Walter Isaacson & Evan thomas, Simon and Schuster, New York. Under illustration #9 in the center of the book you will find the caption; "Lovett with the Yale Unit, above far right, and on the beach: His initiation into Skull and Bones came at an air base near Dunkirk". I have found that members were chosen on an ongoing basis by invitation based upon merit post college and was not confined to only Harvard or Yale attendees.

A chosen few were later initiated into the Jason Society. They are all members of the Council on Foreign Relations and at that time were known as the "Eastern Establishment". This should give you a clue to the far reaching and serious nature of these most secret college societies. The society is alive and well today but now includes members of the Trilateral Commission as well. The Trilateralists existed secretly several years BEFORE 1973. The name of the Trilateral Commission was taken from the alien flag known as the Trilateral Insignia.

Majority Twelve was to survive right up to the present day. Under Eisenhower and Kennedy it was erroneously called the "5412 Committee" or more correctly the "Special Group". In the Johnson Administration it became the "303 Committee" because the name 5412 had been compromised in the book "The Secret Government". Actually NSC 5412/1 was leaked to the author to hide the existence of NSC 5410. Under Nixon, Ford, and Carter it was called the "40 Committee", and under Reagan it became the "PI-40 Committee". Over all those years only the name changed.

By 1955 it became obvious that the aliens had deceived Eisenhower and had broken the treaty. Mutilated humans were being found along with mutilated animals all across the United States. It was suspected that the aliens were not submitting a complete list of human contacts and abductees to MJ-12 and it was suspected that not all abductees had been returned. The Soviet Union was suspected of interacting with them and this proved to be true. It was learned that the aliens had been and were then manipulating masses of people through secret societies, witchcraft, magic, the occult, and religion. After several Air Force combat air engagements with alien craft it also became apparent that our weapons were no match against them.

In November of 1955 NSC-5412/2 was issued establishing a study committee to explore "all factors which are involved in the making and implementing of foreign policy in the nuclear age". This was only a blanket of snow that covered the real subject of study, the alien question.
By secret Executive Memorandum, NSC 5411 in 1954, President Eisenhower had commissioned the study group to "examine all the facts, evidence, lies, and deception and discover the truth of the alien question". NSC 5412/2 was only a cover that had become necessary when the press began inquiring as to the purpose of regular meetings of such important men. The first meetings began in 1954 and were called the Quantico meetings because they met at the Quantico Marine Base. The study group was made up solely of 35 members of the Council on Foreign Relations' secret scholars known as "The Jason Society" or "The Jason Scholars". Dr. Edward Teller was invited to participate. Dr. Zbigniew Brzezinski was the Study Director for the first 18 months. Dr. Henry Kissinger was chosen as the groups Study Director for the second 18 months beginning in November of 1955. Nelson Rockefeller was a frequent visitor during the study.

The second phase meetings were also held at the Marine base at Quantico Virginia and the group became known as Quantico II. Nelson Rockefeller built a retreat somewhere in Maryland which could only be reached by air for MJ-12 and the study committee so that they could meet away from public scrutiny. This secret meeting place is known by the code name "The Country Club". Complete living, eating, recreation, library, and meeting facilities exist at the location.

The study group was "publicly" closed in the later months of 1956 and Henry Kissinger published what was officially termed the results in 1957 as "Nuclear Weapons and Foreign Policy" by Henry A. Kissinger, Published for the Council on Foreign Relations by Harper & Brothers, New York. In truth the manuscript had already been 80% written while Kissinger was at Harvard. The study group continued veiled in secrecy. A clue to the seriousness Kissinger attached to the study can be found in statements by his wife and friends. Many of them stated that Henry would leave home early each morning and return late each night without speaking to anyone or responding to anyone. It seemed as if he were in another world which held no room for anyone else.

These statements are very revealing. The revelations of the alien presence and actions during the study must have been a great shock. Henry Kissinger was definitely out of character during the time surrounding these meetings. He would never again be affected in this manner no matter the seriousness of any subsequent event. On many occasions he would work very late into the night after having already put in a full day. This behavior eventually led to divorce. Later study groups would be led by Dr. Zbigniew Brzezinski again as well as others prominent men.

A major finding of the alien study was that the public could not be told as it was believed that this would most certainly lead to economic collapse, collapse of the religious structure, and national panic which could lead into anarchy. Secrecy thus continued. An offshoot of this finding was that if the public could not be told then the Congress could not be told, thus funding for the projects and research would have to come from outside the government. In the meantime money was to be obtained from the military budget and from CIA confidential non-appropriated funds.

Another major finding was the aliens were using humans and animals for a source of glandular secretions, enzymes, hormonal secretions, blood and in horrible genetic experiments. The aliens explained these actions as necessary to their survival. They stated that their genetic structure had deteriorated and that they were no longer able to reproduce. They stated that if they were unable to improve their genetic structure their race would soon cease to exist. We looked upon their explanations with extreme suspicion. Since our weapons were literally useless against the aliens MJ-12 decided to continue friendly diplomatic relations with them until such time as we were able to develop a technology which would then enable us to challenge them on a military basis. Overtures would have to be made to the Soviet Union, and other nations, to join forces for the survival of humanity. In the meantime plans were developed to research and construct 2 weapons systems using conventional and nuclear technology which would hopefully bring us to parity.

The results of the research were Projects Joshua and Excalibur. Joshua was a weapon captured from the Germans which at that time was capable of shattering 4" thick armor plate at a range of 2 miles using low aimed low frequency sound waves, and it was believed that this weapon would be effective against the alien craft and beam weapons. Excalibur was a weapon carried by missile not to exceed 30,000 feet AGL, not to deviate from designated target more than 50 meters, would penetrate 1,000 meters of tufa hard packed soil such a that found in New Mexico, would carry a 1 megaton warhead, and was intended for use in destroying the aliens in their underground bases. Joshua was developed successfully but never used to my knowledge. Excalibur was not pushed until recent years and now there is an unprecedented effort to develop this weapon.

The events at Fatima in the early part of the century were scrutinized. On suspicion that it was alien manipulation an intelligence operation was put into motion to penetrate the secrecy surrounding the event. The United States utilized its Vatican moles that had been recruited and nurtured during World War II and soon obtained the entire Vatican study which included the prophecy. This prophecy stated that if man did not turn from evil and place himself at the feet of Christ the planet would self destruct and the events described in the book of Revelations would indeed come to pass. It stated that a child would be born in 1963 who would unite the world with a plan for world peace and a false religion beginning in 1992. By 1995 the people would discern that he was evil and was indeed the Anti-Christ. World War III would begin in the Middle East in 1995 with an invasion of Israel by a United Arab nation using conventional weapons which would culminate in a nuclear holocaust in the year 1999. Between 1999 and 2003 most of the life on this planet would suffer horribly and die as a result. The return of Christ would occur in the year 2011.

When the aliens were confronted with this finding they confirmed that it was true. The aliens explained that they had created us through hybridization and had manipulated the human race through religion, satanism, witchcraft, magic, and the occult. They further explained that they were capable of time travel and the events would indeed come to pass. Later exploitation of alien technology by the United States and the Soviet Union utilizing time travel confirmed the prophecy. The aliens showed a hologram which they claimed was the actual Crucifixion of Christ, which the Government filmed. We did not know whether to believe them or not. Were they using our GENUINE religions to manipulate us? Or, were they indeed the source of our religions with which they had been manipulating us all along? Or, was this the beginning scenario of the Genuine END TIMES and the RETURN OF CHRIST which had been predicted in the Bible? No one knew the answer.

A Symposium was held in in 1957 which was attended by some of the great scientific minds then living. They reached the conclusion that by or shortly after the year 2,000 the planet WOULD self destruct due to increased population and mans exploitation of the environment WITHOUT ANY HELP FROM GOD OR THE ALIENS.
By secret Executive Order of President Eisenhower, the Jason Scholars were ordered to study this scenario and make recommendations from their findings. The Jason Society CONFIRMED the finding of the scientists and made 3 recommendations called "Alternatives 1, 2, and 3". "Alternative 1" was to use nuclear devices to blast holes in the Stratosphere from which the heat and pollution could escape into space. Change the human cultures from that of exploitation into cultures of environmental protection. Of the three this was decided to be the least likely to succeed due to the inherent nature of man and the additional damage the Nuclear explosions would themselves create. "Alternative 2" was to build a vast network of underground cities and tunnels in which a select representation of all cultures and occupations would survive and carry on the human race. The rest of humanity would be left to fend for themselves on the surface of the planet. "Alternative 3" was to exploit the alien and conventional technology in order for a select few to leave the earth and establish colonies in outer space. I am not able to either confirm or deny the existence of "Batch Consignments" of human slaves which would be used for the manual labor in the effort as a part of the plan. The Moon, code named "Adam", would be the object of primary interest followed by the planet Mars, code named "Eve". As a delaying action, ALL THREE ALTERNATIVES included birth control, sterilization, and the introduction of deadly microbes to control or slow the growth of the Earth's population. AIDS is only ONE result of these plans. It was decided since the population must be reduced and controlled that it would be in the best interest of the human race to rid ourselves of the undesirable elements of our society. The joint U.S. and Soviet leadership dismissed "Alternative 1" but ordered work to begin on Alternative 2 and 3 virtually at the same time.
In 1959 the Rand Corporation hosted a Deep Underground Construction Symposium. In the Symposium report, machines are pictured and described which could bore a tunnel 45 feet in diameter at the rate of 5 feet per hour. It also displays pictures of huge tunnels and underground vaults containing what appear to be complex facilities and possibly even cities. It appears that the previous 5 years of all out underground construction had made significant progress by that time.

The ruling powers decided that one means of funding the alien connected and other black projects was to corner the illegal drug market. A young ambitious member of the Council on Foreign Relations was approached. His name is George Bush who at the time was the President and CEO of Zapata Oil based in Texas. Zapata Oil was experimenting with the new technology of offshore drilling. It was correctly thought that the drugs could be shipped from South America to the offshore platforms by fishing boat where it would then be taken to shore by the normal transportation used for supplies and personnel. By this method no customs or law enforcement agency would subject the cargo to search. George Bush agreed to help and organized the operation in conjunction with the CIA. The plan worked better than anyone had thought and has since expanded worldwide and there are now many other methods of bringing the illegal drugs into the country. It must always be remembered though that George Bush began sale of drugs to our children. The CIA now controls all the worlds illegal drug markets.

The "official" Space Program was boosted by President Kennedy in his inaugural address when he mandated that the United States put a man on the Moon before the end of the decade. Although innocent in its conception this mandate enabled those in charge to funnel vast amounts of money into black projects and conceal the REAL space program from the American people. A similar program in the Soviet Union served the same purpose. In fact a joint alien, United States, and Soviet Union base already existed on the Moon at the very moment Kennedy spoke the words. On May 22, 1962 a space probe landed on Mars and confirmed the existence of an environment which could support life. Not long afterward the construction of a colony on the planet Mars began in earnest. Today cities exist on Mars populated by specially selected people from different cultures and occupations taken from all over the Earth. A public charade of antagonism between the Soviet Union and the United States has been maintained over all these years in order to fund projects in the name of National Defense when in fact we are the closest allies.

At some point President Kennedy discovered portions of the truth concerning the drugs and the aliens. He issued an ultimatum in 1963 to MJ-12. President Kennedy assured them that if they did not clean up the drug problem he would. He informed MJ-12 that he intended to reveal the presence of aliens to the American people within the following year and ordered a plan developed to implement his decision. President Kennedy was not a member of the Council On Foreign Relations and knew nothing of "Alternative 2" or "Alternative 3". Internationally the Operations were supervised by an Executive Committee known as the "Policy Committee". In the United States they were supervised by MJ-12 and in the Soviet Union by its sister organization. President Kennedy's decision struck fear into the hearts of those in charge. His assassination was ordered by the Policy Committee and the order was carried out by agents of MJ-12 in Dallas. President John F. Kennedy was murdered by the Secret Service Agent who drove his car in the motorcade and the act is plainly visible in the film. WATCH THE DRIVER AND NOT KENNEDY WHEN YOU VIEW THE FILM. All of the witnesses who were close enough to the car to see William Greer shoot Kennedy were themselves all murdered within 2 years of the event. The Warren Commission was a farce and Council on Foreign Relations members made up the majority of its panel. They succeeded in snowing the American people. Many other patriots who attempted to reveal the alien secret have also been murdered throughout the intervening years.

During the era of the United States initial Space exploration and the Moon landings every launch was accompanied by alien craft. A Moon Base dubbed Luna was sighted and filmed by the Apollo Astronauts. Domes, spires, tall round structures which look like silos, huge "T" shaped mining vehicles which left stitch-like tracks in the Lunar surface, and extremely large as well as small alien craft appear in the photographs. It is a joint United States, Russian, and Alien base. The Space Program is a farce and an unbelievable waste of money. Alternative 3 is a reality and is not at all science fiction. Most of the Apollo Astronauts were severely shaken by this experience and their lives and subsequent statements reflect the depth of the revelation and the effect of the muzzle order which followed. They were ordered to remain silent or suffer the extreme penalty, death, which was termed an "expediency". One Astronaut actually did talk to the British producers of the TV expose "Alternative 3" confirming many of the allegations.

In the book "Alternative 003" the pseudonym "Bob Grodin" was used in place of the Astronaut's identity. It was also stated that he committed suicide in 1978. This cannot be validated by any source and I believe that several so-called facts in the book are really disinformation. I firmly believe that this disinformation is a result of pressure put upon the authors and is meant to nullify the effect upon the populace of the British TV expose entitled "Alternative 3". The headquarters of the International conspiracy is in Geneva, Switzerland. The ruling body is made up of Representatives of the Governments involved as well as the Executive members of the group known as "The Bilderburgers". Meetings are held by the "Policy Committee" when necessary on a Nuclear submarine beneath the Polar ice cap. The secrecy is such that this was the only method which would insure that the meetings could not be bugged. I can say that the book is at least 70% true from my own knowledge and the knowledge of my sources. I believe that the disinformation was an attempt to compromise the British TV expose with information which could be proven false, just as the "Eisenhower Briefing Document" was released here in the United States under the contingency plan "Majestic twelve", and which can also be proven false.

Since our interaction with the aliens began we have come into possession of technology beyond our wildest dreams. A craft named Aurora exists at Area 51 which makes regular trips into space. It is a one stage ship called a TAV (trans atmospheric vehicle) and it can take off from the ground using a 7 mile runway, go into high orbit, return on its own power, and land on the same runway. We currently have and fly atomic powered alien type craft at Area S-4 in Nevada. Our pilots have made interplanetary voyages in these craft and have been to the Moon, Mars, and other planets aboard these craft. We have been lied to about the true nature of the moon, the planets Mars and Venus and the real state of technology that we possess today at this very moment.

There are areas on the Moon where plant life grows and even changes color with the seasons. This seasonal effect is because the Moon does not, as claimed, always present the exact same side to the earth or the sun. There is an area that wobbles in and out of darkness on a seasonal basis and it is near this area that the plant life grows.

The Moon does have a few man made lakes and ponds upon its surface and clouds have been observed and filmed in its atmosphere. It possess a gravitational field and man can walk upon its surface without a space suit breathing from an oxygen bottle after undergoing decompression the same as any deep sea diver. I have seen the photographs and some of them were actually published in the book "We Discovered Alien Bases On The Moon" by Fred Steckling.

In 1969 a confrontation broke out between the human scientists and the aliens at the Dulce underground lab. The aliens took many of our scientists hostage. Delta forces were sent in to free them but were no match against the alien weapons. 66 of our people were killed during this action. As a result we withdrew from all joint projects for at least 2 years. A reconciliation eventually took place and once again we began to interact. Today the alliance continues.

When the Watergate scandal broke, President Nixon had intended to ride out the storm confident that he could not be impeached. MJ-12, however had a different agenda. The intelligence community rightfully concluded that an impeachment trial would open up the files and bare the awful secrets to the public eye. Nixon was ordered to resign. He refused and so the first military coup ever to take place in the United States was promulgated. The Joint Chiefs of Staff sent a TOP SECRET message to the Commanders of all the U.S. armed forces throughout the world. It stated, "Upon receipt of this message you will no longer carry out any orders from the White House. Acknowledge receipt." This message was sent a full 5 days before Nixon conceded and announced publicly that he would resign. I personally saw this message. When I asked my commanding officer what he would do as obviously the order violated the Constitution, I was told, "I guess I will wait to see if any orders come from the White House and then I will decide". I did not see any communication from the White House but that does not mean that non was sent.

During all the years that this has been happening the Congress and the American people have seemed to know instinctively that something was not right. When the Watergate scandal surfaced they jumped on the bandwagon and everyone thought that the agencies would be cleaned out. President Ford organized the Rockefeller Commission to do the job. At least that is what everyone thought. His real purpose was to head off the congress and keep the cover-up going. Nelson Rockefeller who headed the commission investigating the intelligence community was a member of the Council on Foreign Relations and was the one who helped Eisenhower build the MJ-12 power structure. Rockefeller uncovered only enough to keep the hounds at bay. He threw the Congress a few bones and the cover-up rolled merrily along as always.

Later Senator Church would conduct the famous Church hearings. He also was a prominent member of the Council on Foreign Relations and he only repeated the Rockefeller act. Again the cover-up prevailed. When Iran Contra came along we thought this time it had to come gushing out. Wrong again. Despite mountains of documents that pointed to drug smuggling and other hidden monsters, the cover-up sailed through. The Congress even seemed to go out of its way to duck the issues that were just under the surface. Could it be that Congress knows the whole thing and won't touch it? Are they among the select who have been picked for the Mars colony when the Earth begins to destruct?

I cannot even begin to outline the entire financial empire controlled by the CIA, the NSA, and the Council on Foreign Relations that controls and launders the money from drugs and other intelligence community proprietary ventures but I can tell you the little that I know. The amount of money is beyond anything you can imagine and is hidden in a vast network of banks and holding companies. You should first begin to look at the J. Henry Schroder Banking Corporation, the Schroder Trust Company, Schroders Limited (London), Helbert Wagg Holdings Limited, J. Henry Schroder - Wagg & Co. Limited, Schroder Gerbruder and Company (Germany), Schroder Munchmeyer Hengst and Company, Castle bank and its holding companies, the Asian Development Bank, and the Nugan Hand octopus of banks and holding companies.

A contingency plan was formulated by MJ-12 to throw everyone off the trail should they come close to the truth. The plan was known as MAJESTIC TWELVE. It was implemented with the release by Moore, Shandera, and Friedman of the purported genuine "Eisenhower Briefing Document". The document is a fraud. The document lists the Executive Order as #092447. A number which does not exist and will not exist for quite a long time at the present rate. Truman wrote Executive Orders in the 9,000 range, Eisenhower wrote in the 10,000 range, Ford was up to the 11,000 bracket, and Reagan got only into the 12,000 numbers. Executive Orders are numbered consecutively no matter who occupies the White House for reasons of continuity, record keeping, and to prevent confusion. The plan so far has thrown the entire research community off the trail for several years and has resulted in the wasted expenditure of money looking for information which does not exist. It resulted in the total waste of a grant by the Fund For UFO Research of $16,000 which was given to Stanton Friedman to research the information. Many thousands of man hours have gone into looking for a "red herring". If you doubt the secret governments ability to run you through the rose garden you had better think again.

Another contingency plan is in force and is working upon you today. It is the plan to prepare the public for eventual confrontation with an alien race. The public is being bombarded with movies, radio, advertising, and tv depicting almost every aspect of the true nature of the alien presence. This includes the good and the bad. Look around and pay attention. The aliens are planning to make their presence known and the government is preparing you for it so that there will be no panic.

The worst contingency plan has also been implemented and is at work right now. For many years now they have been importing drugs and selling them to the people and mainly the poor and the minorities. Social Welfare programs were put into place to create a dependent non-working element of our society. They then began to remove the social welfare programs in order to develop a large criminal class that did not exist in the 50s and early 60s. They encouraged the manufacture and importation of deadly military firearms for the criminal element to use. This was intended to foster a feeling of insecurity which would lead the American people to voluntarily disarm themselves by passing laws against firearms. Incidents were to be staged to speed up the process. By using drugs and hypnosis in a process called Orion on mental patients the CIA inculcated the desire in these people to open fire on school yards and thus inflame the anti-gun lobby. This plan is well underway and so far is working exactly as planned. This plan must not succeed.

Due to the wave of crime sweeping the nation they will convince the American people that a state of anarchy exists within the major cities. They are now building their case almost nightly on tv and daily in the newspapers. When public opinion has been won over to this idea they intend to state that a terrorist group armed with a nuclear weapon has entered the United States and that they plan to detonate this device in one of our cities. The government will then suspend the Constitution and declare Martial Law. The secret alien army of implanted humans and all dissidents, which translates into anyone they choose, will be rounded up and will be placed in concentration camps which already exist throughout the country. They are each 1 mile square. Are the people whom they intend to place in these concentration camps destined to make up the reported "batch consignments" of slave labor needed by the Space Colonies? The media, radio, tv, newspapers, and computer networks will be nationalized and seized. Anyone who resists will be taken or killed. This entire operation was rehearsed by the government and military in 1984 under the code name REX-84 and it went off without a hitch. When these events have transpired the SECRET GOVERNMENT and/or ALIEN takeover will be complete. Your freedom will never be returned and you will live in slavery for the remainder of your life. You had better wake up and you had better do it now.

Phil Klass is an agent of the CIA and this was stated in the documents which I saw between 1970 and 1973. One of his jobs as an aviation expert was to debunk everything to do with UFOS. All military commanders were instructed to call him to gain information on how to debunk and/or explain UFO contacts and/or sightings to the public and/or the press if and when the need arose.

William Moore, Jaimie Shandera, and Stanton Friedman are either witting (with knowledge) or unwitting (being used without knowledge) agents of the secret government. I prefer to believe that they are unwitting although William Moore's reported use of a Defense Investigative Service ID card and his reported self confession to Lee Graham that he was an agent of the government makes me seriously doubt it, if the reports are true. Lee Graham called me at my home and when asked confirmed that Moore had indeed done this.

Stanton Friedman has told me and many others that years ago he "helped develop a nuclear reactor, to power an aircraft, that was the size of a basketball, was clean, turned out hydrogen, and worked like a dream". His words not mine. The only fuel which could go into such an engine and produce hydrogen as a by-product is water and that is precisely what at lease one type of alien craft runs on, nuclear energy and water. The only place in the universe at that time to get such technology was from the aliens. Is he really unwitting? I do not know. He was a member of the Moore, Shandera, and Friedman research team and it was they who implemented the MAJESTIC TWELVE contingency plan.

In the documents which I saw between 1970 and 1973 names of individuals were listed who were to be targeted for recruitment in order that the contingency plan known as MAJESTIC TWELVE could be introduced to the public by persons respected by the public. Bruce Macabee, Stanton Friedman, and William Moore were among those listed. I do not know if the recruitment actually took place or not. I do know that the subsequent events do not indicate that Bruce Macabee is involved but the actions of Stanton Friedman and William Moore are highly suspect.

I know that all of the major UFO research organizations were targeted for infiltration and control by the secret government just as NICAP was infiltrated and controlled. I believe that these efforts have been successful. It is very possible that the major UFO publications are also controlled.

Today MJ-12 still exists and operates as just as it always has. It is made up of the same structure, 6 from the same positions in government, and 6 from the Executive members of the Council On Foreign Relations and/or the Trilateral Commission. The Majority Agency for Joint Intelligence is publicly known as The Senior Interagency Group (SIG).

In closing it is most important to understand that the Council on Foreign Relations and its offshoot the Trilateral Commission not only control but own this country. Long before World War II they were instrumental in helping to decide policy for the United States Government. Since World War II they have been the ONLY source of policy for the United States Government. The Council On Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission and their foreign counterparts report to the Bilderburgers. Almost every high level government and military official of any consequence since World War II including Presidents have been members of the Council on Foreign Relations and/or the Trilateral Commission. All American members of the Trilateral Commission has either been or is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations.

Each foreign nation of any importance has its own offshoot of the Council on Foreign Relations and the members of each country interact with those of other countries through the Bilderburgers to further their common goals. The foreign members of the Trilateral Commission belong to their respective organizations. Even a cursory investigation by the most inexperienced researcher will show that the members of the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral commission control the major foundations, all of the major media and publishing interests, the largest banks, all the major corporations, the upper echelons of the government, and many other vital interests. Their members are elected and appointed because they have all the money and special interests behind them. All, that is, except the peoples. They are undemocratic and do not in any way represent the majority of the United States of America. These are the people who will decide who survives the coming holocaust and who does not.

The Bilderburgers, the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission are THE SECRET GOVERNMENT and rule this nation through MJ-12 and the study group known as the Jason Society or Jason Scholars and the top echelon of the government which consists mostly of their members. Throughout our history the Aliens have manipulated and/or ruled the human race through various secret societies, religion, magic, witchcraft, and the occult. The Council On Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission are in complete control of the alien technology and are also in complete control of the nations economy. Eisenhower was the last President to know the entire overview of the alien problem. Succeeding Presidents were told only what MJ-12 and the Intelligence Community wanted them to know and believe me, it was not the truth. MJ-12 has presented each new President with a picture of a lost alien culture seeking to renew itself, build a home on this planet, and shower us with gifts of technology. In some cases the President was told nothing. Each President in turn has bought the story, or no story at all, hook, line, and sinker. Meanwhile innocent people continue to suffer unspeakable horrors at the hands of the alien and human scientists who are engaged in barbarous research that would make even the Nazis look like Sunday school children. As if that is not enough many people end up as food for the insatiable alien appetite for biological enzymes, glandulars, hormonal secretions, and blood. Many people are abducted and are sentenced to live with psychological and physical damage for the rest of their lives. In the documents I saw 1 in 40 humans had been implanted with devices the purpose of which I have never discovered. The government believes that the aliens are building an army of human implants which can be activated and turned upon us at will. You should also know that to date we have not even began to become close to parity with the aliens. Is this technology worth it?

I sent 536 copies of a "Petition to Indict" to every member of the Senate and House of Representatives on April 26, 1989. As of this date, May 23, 1989, I have only received 2 replies. One reply was from Senator Daniel P. Moynihan and the other from Senator Richard G. Lugar. Both stated that they were sending my correspondence to Senator Cranston and Senator Wilson of California as a normal custom and courtesy. Both assured me that MY Senators will promptly assist me in this matter. I have yet to hear from anyone from the State of California or from any other State for that matter aside from the two mentioned above.

The conclusions are inescapable.

(1) The secret power structure believes that, because of our own ignorance or by Divine decree, planet Earth will self destruct sometime in the near future. These men sincerely believe that they are doing the right thing in their attempt to save the human race. It is terribly ironic that they have been forced to take as their partner an Alien race which is itself engaged in a monumental struggle for survival. Many moral and legal compromises have been made in this joint effort. These compromises were made in error and must be corrected and those responsible should be brought to account for their actions. I can understand the fear and urgency that must have been instrumental in the decision not to tell the public. Obviously I disagree with this decision. Throughout history small but powerful groups of men have consistently felt that they alone were capable of deciding the fates of millions and throughout history they have been wrong. This great Nation owes its very existence to the Principles of Freedom and Democracy. I believe with all my heart that the United States of America cannot and will not succeed in any effort that ignores those Principles. Full disclosure to the public should be made and we should proceed to save the human race together.

(2) We are being manipulated by a joint human/alien power structure which will result in the partial enslavement of the human race. We must use any and every means available to prevent this from happening.
(3) The government has been totally deceived and we are being manipulated by an alien power which will result in the total enslavement and/or destruction of the human race. We must use any and every means available to prevent this from happening.
(4) Something else is happening which is beyond our ability to understand at this time. We must force disclosure of all the facts, discover the truth and act upon the truth.
In any case we MUST force disclosure of the truth or no matter what happens we will surely deserve it. The situation in which we find ourselves is due to our own actions or inactions over the last 44 years. It is our own fault and we are the only ones who can change it. Through ignorance or misplaced trust we as a people have abdicated our role as the "watchdog" of our government. Our government was founded "of the people, for the people, by the people". There was no mention or intent to ever abdicate our role and place our total trust in a handful of men who meet secretly and decide our fate for us. In fact the structure of our government was designed to prevent that from ever happening. If we had done our jobs as citizens this could never have happened. Most of us are completely ignorant as to even the most basic functions of our government. We have truly become a nation of sheep. Sheep are always eventually led to slaughter. It is time to stand up in the manner of our forefathers and walk like men. I remind you all, that the Jews of Europe marched obediently to the ovens, after having been warned, believing all the while that the facts could not possibly be true. When the outside world was told of the holocaust occurring in Hitler's Europe it was not believed. I state here and now that Hitler was manipulated by these same aliens.
I have brought you the truth as I know it. I do not care what you think of me. I have done my duty and no matter what fate lies in store for me, I can truly meet my maker with a clear conscience. I believe first in God. The same God that my ancestors believed in. I believe in Jesus Christ and that he is my Savior. I believe second in the Constitution of the United States of America as it was written and meant to work. I have given my oath to protect and defend the Constitution of the United States of America against all enemies foreign and domestic. I intend to fulfill that oath.
Thank you,
Milton William Cooper

From Chapter 2

"The CFR is a secret society in that it forbids the taking of notes or the publishing of minutes of its meetings. Any member who divulges the subject or any part of any conversation or talk that took place during a meeting is terminated. The goal of the Council on Foreign Relations is a New World Order. George Bush is a member of the CFR. Knights of Malta play a powerful role in this scenario. In the 1930s General Smedley Butler was recruited to help take over the White House. He was told that he was needed because of his general popularity with the military.

General Butler blew the whistle and named several prominent Americans as part of the plot. At the top of the list was John J. Raskob, who was a founding member of the U.S. branch of the Knights of Malta. He was board chairman of General Motors. He was, at the time, the U.S. Treasurer of the Knights of Malta. Congressional hearings were held to investigate the plot, but none of those named, including Raskob, was ever called to testify and nothing ever came of the hearings. Although you will find this in the Congressional records, you will NEVER find it in ANY history book anywhere.

It is significant that the Iran-Contra episode has many similarities to the 1930s plot. William Casey was a member of the Knights of Malta. William Casey, with the help of Vice President Bush, Anne Armstrong and Donald Regan, caused the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board to be emasculated so that Bush, Casey, North and others could carry out their dirty deeds without oversight. They had also developed a plan to suspend the Constitution of the United States and were preparing to implement the plan when they were caught. These facts emerged from the hearings but were suppressed by the committee chairman, Senator Daniel Inouye of Hawaii. You must understand that tremendous power was involved in both attempts to overthrow the United States Government. William Casey was the Director of the CIA. He was a member of the CFR. Casey was a Knight of Malta. He was the head of Ronald Reagan's political campaign. He was head of the Securities and Exchange Commission. During the Nixon administration he was head of the Export-Import Bank.

Casey arranged financing for the Kama River truck factory in the Soviet Union with 90% of the funds guaranteed or furnished by the U.S. taxpayer. This factory built military truck and tank engines for the Soviet Army. It was, and may still be, the largest factory in the world and could produce more heavy trucks than all U.S. factories together. I believe Casey was murdered.

The Knights of Malta is a world organization with its threads weaving through business, banking, politics, the CIA, other intelligence organizations, P2, religion, education, law, military, think tanks, foundations, the United States Information Agency, the United Nations, and numerous other organizations. They are not the oldest but are one of the oldest branches of the Order of the Quest in existence. The world head of the Knights of Malta is elected for a life term, with the approval of the Pope. The Knights of Malta have their own Constitution and are sworn to work toward the establishment of a New World Order with the Pope at its head. Knights of Malta members are also powerful members of the CFR and the Trilateral Commission.

Piers Compton, in his book The Broken Cross, traces the infiltration of the Catholic Church by the Illuminati. He has found the use of the all-seeing eye in the triangle by leading Catholics and by the Jesuits. It was used in the seal of the Philadelphia Eucharistic Congress in 1976. It was on a special issue of Vatican stamps in 1978, announcing the final Illuminati victory to the world. Mr. Compton claims that Pope John XXIII wore the "all-seeing eye in the triangle" on his personal cross. Compton is adamant that several HUNDRED leading Catholic priests, bishops and cardinals are members of secret societies. He quotes an article in an Italian Journal that lists more than 70 Vatican officials, including Pope Paul VI's private secretary, the director general of Vatican radio, the Archbishop of Florence, the prelate of Milan, the assistant editor of the Vatican newspaper, several Italian bishops, and the abbot of the Order of St. Benedict.

The first U.S. Ambassador to the Vatican was William Wilson, a Knight of Malta. His appointment was probably illegal and, for a fact, was highly unethical. Wilson could not possibly have represented the U.S. when his allegiance was sworn to the Pope.

Wilson, if you will remember, took an unauthorized trip to Libya and met privately with Libyan officials at a time when travel to Libya had been banned by the President. President Ronald Reagan had called Gadhafi "a mad dog" and made a few strong threats. The U.S. had been resolute in bombing Libya even though civilians were killed. Following Wilson's trip, Gadhafi issued a press release stating that "an American diplomat had been sent to reduce tensions with Libya." The State Department denied that any such thing had taken place. Ambassador Wilson closed his mouth and refused any comment.

To this day he has said nothing, even though his actions made a liar of the United States and embarrassed us worldwide. A clue to what was happening is the fact that while we had cut off Libya and even bombed them and while travel by U.S. citizens to Libya was forbidden, five huge oil conglomerates were filling their pockets dealing with Gadhafi. One of the companies was headed by J. Peter Grace, President of W.R. Grace. Eight members of the W.R. Grace Company are members of the Knights of Malta. According to an article by Leslie Geld in the New York Times, administration officials had expressed concern about Mr. Wilson's activities. These actions, they said, often seem to revolve around his contacts and interest in the oil business.

Wilson should have been fired, but instead nothing happened except that he and his wife attended a Papal Easter Mass and stood next to George Schultz and his wife. In diplomatic language this indicated private approval of his actions. George Schultz, of course, is a member of the CFR, the Bohemian Club and the Bechtel Corporation, all of which have close ties to the Order and the Knights of Malta.

Wilson engaged in several other improprieties during his ambassadorship. Again, in each case nothing happened. Finally he resigned. Later, if you will remember, President Reagan suffered a fall from a horse on William Wilson's ranch in Mexico. Do you seriously think that President Reagan would have visited Wilson's home in Mexico if he had not approved of Wilson's actions while he was the U.S. Ambassador to the Vatican?

Knight of Malta Myron Taylor was President Roosevelf s envoy. Knight of Malta John McCone was President Kennedy's envoy and he was also the Director of the CIA during the early '60s. A former mayor of New York City, Robert Wagner, was President Jimmy Carter's envoy. Frank Shakespeare replaced William Wilson. Frank Shakespeare is a Knight of Malta, and so it goes. President Reagan spoke at the annual Knights of Malta dinner.

The Knights of Malta ALL have diplomatic immunity. They can ship goods across borders without paying duty or undergoing customs check. Does that ring any bells? In any case, that is power.

The Knights of Malta is held up by a backbone consisting of nobility. Nearly half of the 10,000 members belong to Europe's oldest and most powerful families. This cements the alliance between the Vatican and the "Black Nobility." The Black Nobility is mostly the rich and powerful of Europe. The head of the Black Nobility is the family that can claim direct descendancy from the last Roman emperor. Maybe now you can see that things are beginning to fall into their proper place.

Membership in the Knights of Malta entails obedience to one's superior in THE ORDER and ultimately to the Pope. Therefore, a U.S. ambassador who is also a member of the Knights of Malta faces a conflict of interest. Why is this fact ignored? President Bush appointed Knight of Malta Thomas Melledy to the post of U.S. Ambassador to the Vatican.

The Vatican has founded the Pope John Paul II Center for Prayer and Study for Peace at 1711 Ocean Avenue, Springlake, New Jersey, in a mansion overlooking the ocean. The mansion was given to the New York Archdiocese by the estate of Elmer Bobst, who died in 1978. He was a multimillionaire and chairman of Warner Lambert Company. Richard Nixon was a frequent visitor. Directors of the Center were Kurt Waldheim, former Secretary General of the United Nations and ex-nazi war criminal; Cyrus Vance, former Secretary of State under Carter and member of both the Council on Foreign Relations and the Trilateral Commission; Clare Booth Luce, a dame of the Knights of Malta; and J. Peter Grace of W.R. Grace Company, who is head of the Knights of Malta in the United States.

The Center was set up by the Vatican as a part of the Pope's new peace plan, which will bring the world together (see my paper "The Secret Government"). The Center has two roles: (1) Educate Catholics and their children to accept the New World Order. (2) Provide residence for the world-peace-solution computer and an ongoing study for peaceful solutions to any future problems which may endanger world peace. The computer is hooked to the world capitals via satellite. All nations have agreed to relinquish sovereignty to the Pope and submit future problems to the computer for solution. Of course, this will not go into effect until the New World Order is publicly announced. I believe that the New World Order was born in secrecy on January 19,1989. Now you know.

The Vatican has stated at various times that "the Pope is for total disarmament; the Pope is for elimination of the sovereignty of the nation states; the Pope is also stating that property rights are not to be considered true property rights. The Pope believes that only the Vatican knows what is right for man." In the early 1940s, the I.G. Farben Chemical Company employed a Polish salesman who sold cyanide to the Nazis for use in Auschwitz. The same salesman also worked as a chemist in the manufacture of the poison gas. This same cyanide gas along with Zyklon B and malathion was used to exterminate millions of Jews and other groups.

Their bodies were then burned to ashes in the ovens. After the war the salesman, fearing for his life, joined the Catholic Church and was ordained a priest in 1946. One of his closest friends was Dr. Wolf Szmuness, the mastermind behind the November/78 to October/79 and March/80 to October/81 experimental hepatitis B vaccine trials conducted by the Center for Disease Control in New York, San Francisco and four other American cities that loosed the plague of AIDS upon the American people. The salesman was ordained Poland's youngest bishop in 1958. After a 30-day reign his predecessor was assassinated and our ex-cyanide gas salesman assumed the papacy as Pope John Paul II.

1990 is the right time with the right leaders: ex-chief of the Soviet secret police Mikhail Gorbachev, ex-chief of the CIA George Bush, ex-Nazi cyanide gas salesman Pope John Paul II, all bound by an unholy alliance to ring in the New World Order.

The Pope has challenged world leaders by claiming that the people of the world already recognize the absolute authority of Rome because they observe the Sunday Sabbath that was ordered by the Pope in the Council of Laodicea (A.D. 364). The original Ten Commandments given Moses by God ordered that we should: Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it Holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man servant, nor thy maid servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it.

The seventh day, the Sabbath as handed to Moses by God, is Saturday The celebration of Sunday as the Sabbath is verification that the people recognize the Pope as SUPERIOR TO GOD. The only WHOLE people who have not recognized the authority of the Pope are the Jewish people, and that is why the Vatican has not and will not recognize the state of Israel. The Vatican refuses even to call it Israel. Instead the Vatican says Palestine when talking about Israel.

AGAIN, I MUST REMIND YOU THAT WHAT YOU BELIEVE MAKES NOT ONE BIT OF DIFFERENCE. THE IMPORTANT THING TO UNDERSTAND IS THAT IF THEY BELIEVE THIS, IT IS GOING TO GIVE YOU NIGHTMARES. "The Pope has a lot of charisma and in a one world system you need a religious head for power. Khomeini proved that. This Pope has enough following and charisma to make what we consider a great threat in this move." [Quote from The Mantooth Report.] "Pope John Paul II is most anxious to complete his goal. His goal is to reunite the Christian World under the LEADERSHIP OF THE PAPACY.

If at all possible, he hopes to reach his goal by the end of this century. This is the primary reason behind the Pope's many worldwide trips." [From an article by Gene H. Hogberg, Nov./Dec. 1989, Plain Truth.] Were you aware that Hitler and his entire staff were Catholic? Did you know that the Nazis dabbled in the occult? Did you know that the New York Times of April 14,1990, quotes George Bush as stating, "Lefs forgive the Nazi war criminals." I wonder why he said that? Did you know that the Los Angeles Times, December 12,1984, quoted Pope John Paul II as saying, "Don't go to God for forgiveness of sins, come to me." The Pope committed blasphemy, thus fulfilling prophecy according to the book of Revelation.

The Pope is telling us that HE IS God! REMEMBER—NEVER WORSHIP A LEADER. IF YOU WORSHIP A LEADER, YOU THEN NO LONGER HAVE THE ABILITY TO RECOGNIZE WHEN YOU HAVE BEEN DECEIVED! On July 21, 1773, Pope Clement XIV "forever annulled and extinguished the Jesuit Order." France, Spain and Portugal had independently come to realize that the Jesuits were meddling in the affairs of the state and were therefore enemies of the government. The Pope's action was a response to pressure applied by the monarchies. King Joseph of Portugal signed a decree "by which the Jesuits were denounced as 'traitors, rebels and enemies to the realm...'" Pope Pius VII in August, 1814, reinstated the Jesuits to all of their former rights and privileges.

Ex-President John Adams wrote to his successor, Thomas Jefferson: "I do not like the re-appearance of the Jesuits. If ever there was a body of men who merited eternal damnation on earth...it is this Society..." Jefferson replied: "Like you, I disapprove of the restoration of the Jesuits, for it means a step backwards from light into darkness." The Jesuits are still in trouble today as they have been throughout their existence. On February 28,1982, Pope Paul II told the Jesuits to "keep clear of politics and honor Roman Catholic tradition." U.S. News and World Report stated that the Jesuits had indeed meddled in the affairs of nations.

The article stated: "Jesuits have played leading roles in Nicaragua's Sandinista revolution. Some Jesuits have joined Communist parties. One priest in El Salvador has claimed that his order is working for the advancement of Marxism and revolution, not for God....Jesuits have joined leftwing rebel movements in Central America and the Philippines, and have advocated a melding of Marxism and Roman Catholicism in what is called 'liberation theology.'" When the United States wanted to employ the nastiest forms of the Haig-Kissinger depopulation policy in Central America it was the Jesuits who organized and prodded the people into civil war. Wherever the Jesuits go, revolution quickly follows. I am always sad when I see or hear of people being hurt; but according to my research, the Jesuit priests murdered in Central America probably deserved it.
The most powerful secret organization in the world is the Bilderberg Group, organized in 1952 and named after the hotel where its first meeting took place in 1954.

The man who organized the Bilderberg Group, Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands, has the power to veto the Vatican's choice of any Pope it selects. Prince Bernhard has this veto power because his family, the Hapsburgs, are desended from the Roman emperors. Prince Bernhard is the leader of the Black Families. He claims descent from the House of David and thus can truly say that he is related to Jesus. Prince Bernhard, with the help of the CIA, brought the hidden ruling body of the Illuminati into public knowledge as the Bilderberg Group. This is the official alliance that makes up the world governing body. The core of the organization is three committees made up of thirteen members each. Thus the heart of the Bilderberg Group consists of 39 total members of the Illuminati. The three committees are made up exclusively of members of all the different secret groups that make up the Illuminati, the Freemasons, the Vatican, and the Black Nobility.

This committee works year round in offices in Switzerland. It determines who is invited to the annual meeting and what policies and plans will be discussed. Every proposal or plan that has ever been discussed at an annual meeting of the Bilderberg Group has come to pass usually within one or two years following the meeting. The Bilderberg Group is directing the "quiet war" that is being waged against us. How can they do it? These are the men who REALLY rule the world. The numbers 3,7,9,11,13,39 and any multiple of these numbers have special meaning to the IUuminati. Notice that the Bilderberg Group has a core of 39 members who are broken into 3 groups of 13 members in each group. Notice that the core of 39 answers to the 13 who make up the Policy Committee. Take special notice that the 13 members of the Policy Commit ~END

Title: Broadsides hosted by Sherman Skolnick (Videos)

Cold - April 7, 2010 12:59 PM (GMT)

Broadsides hosted by Sherman Skolnick

Hosted by the late great Mr. Sherman Skolnick. He talks with Gerald and Linda Achor and their daughter Kim Gellert of the Village News, about the fraud that took place in Gerald Achor's case by the federal court, lawyers. Gerald Achor was employed by golf club where the late former US House Judiciary Committee Chairman Henry Hyde had many associates. The Achors discuss how one of their attorneys, Bradley Pendergast, was not licensed to be a trial lawyer.

Fritz Springmeier Back in Jail (Updated)

January 15, 2011
http://www.henrymakow.com/springmeier.html

Political prisoner! Fritz Springmeier has been removed from Oregon Halfway House in Portland. Fritz is currently being held at the Inverness Jail.

Here is his actual booking page, and as you can see, he's on a US Marshall hold with no charges: http://www.mcso.us/PAID/BookingDetail.aspx...peas1VsQnXjpA==

WEDNESDAY! U.S. Marshall's office confirmed Fritz scheduled to be returned to Sheridan. Can happen for any reason while still in custody at the half-way house. Could have been due to correspondence, any violation or perceived violation or just that the half-way house couldn't or didn't want to handle this inmate. He had said that the half-way house associates had been doing research on him.

Fritz had found a job as a telemarketer and was looking forward to regaining his freedom. He was picked up for "questioning" by the FBI last Wednesday evening.

by Henry Makow Ph.D.
(Jan 1, 2011)

In 2003, Illuminati researcher Fritz Springmeier was sentenced to 111 months in prison on the basis of no evidence. His experience suggests that at any time the Illuminati can put away anyone who irritates them.

Springmeier was convicted because a bank robber, Anthony Huntington testified that Springmeier visited his house on the same day as Bateman discussed the robbery with two accomplices.

Huntington received a reduced sentence for this testimony. He did not say he had discussed the robbery with Springmeier.

Bateman was turned in by his friend and accomplice Tony Huntington. Huntington also implicated Springmeier and received a reduced sentence for the bank robbery. Over 120 years of prison time for drugs and guns were also forgiven. Pretty good incentive to lie?

At Springmeier's trial and appeal, James A. Redden, the sentencing judge, kept repeating -- "circumstantial evidence can be used to prove anything."

Indeed, Springmeier's case is in the law books as an example of the low standard of evidence needed to convict someone. Ann J Brown, the first Federal Judge to hear the case, had said, "There is no evidence against this man."

Springmeier received an extra five years because a firearm was used in the robbery.

Forrest Bateman fired a rifle into the ceiling to get everyone's attention when he and two accomplices robbed $6000 from the Key Bank in the Portland suburb of Damascus Oct 6, 1997.

Ten minutes prior to the robbery, a "bomb" exploded at the Fantasy Adult Video Store, located six miles west of the bank. No one was injured in the explosion but police investigators believe that the bomb was set off as a diversionary tactic.

The "bomb" was a propane tank. Springmeier was nowhere near either event and had no prior knowledge of either. At the time he was working at a print shop in Eagle Creek, 10 miles SE. However the proprietor refused to provide an alibi because Fritz had offended him by criticizing Billy Graham.

The point is that Fritz served seven years in prison for a crime he did not commit. He was sold out by his lawyer, Pat Birmingham, who, when given a copy of "Bloodlines of the Illuminati" exclaimed, "Am I in this?"

There was no evidence connecting Fritz to this crime. Yes, he knew Bateman (from a Bible Studies class, of all things) but there was no evidence he knew about the crime. Bateman and his accomplices got reduced sentences for implicating Springmeier.

These days, if you're an Illuminati researcher in the US, you are guilty until proven innocent.

Last October, Fritz was released to a halfway house in Portland.

In order to regain his freedom, he needs to find approved employment and accommodation.

Until then, this gifted opponent of the New World Order is in a guilded cage, unable to leave the premises except on job expeditions. He needs to find a job within a 100 miles radius of Portland. If you can help, write to him at springmeiermessages@hotmail.com

hmakow@gmail.com

We're not sure who turned Forrest Bateman in, but he did plead guilty, and just recently got released this last September of 2010 (Huntington was released back in September, 2005. Here are the links to Bureau of Prisons (BOP), website's 'inmate locator':

Title: Fritz Springmeier Released From Prison

Jefferson Smith - October 28, 2010 11:36 PM (GMT)

http://www.henrymakow.com/fritz_springmeie...leased_fro.html

I was elated to receive a letter today from my friend Fritz Springmeier informing me that he has been transferred to a halfway house in the Portland area.

He is there to find a job and accommodation after which he will be released on probation for five years. Under the terms of his probation he won't be able to do any political work but he hopes to be able to teach people to "make good decisions" in the hard times ahead.

He is able to work within a 100 mile radius of Portland. If you can help him find a job, or just want to wish him well, he can be reached at faspringmeier@gmail.com

Fritz was imprisoned in Feb. 2003 due to his research on the Illuminati and his work deprogramming victims of Illuminati mind control. His books "Bloodlines of the Illuminati" and "The Illuminati Formula Used to Create an Undetectable Total Mind Controlled Slave" helped thousands learn about Illuminati control.

"There is a wave of positive divine energy creating a positive momentum to my release and to overcoming the difficulties in my path," Fritz wrote. "I have a good case officer and a good probation officer, and this is a good halfway house."

Fritz is still confined to the establishment and can only leave on supervised job hunting expeditions.

He writes that many people opposed to the New World Order need to put their own lives in order. "Many are just news junkies," he writes.

He foresees bad times and wonders if we are prepared spiritually. For example, if we are hungry, will we steal?

maitreyaarrived - June 27, 2010 07:56 PM (GMT)

A Message From Prison
June 6, 2010

by Fritz Springmeier

Everything we do is a choice between life and death. “See, I have set before you this day life and good, and death and evil. . . I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing; therefore choose life, that both you and your seed may live. . .” Deut. 30:15, 19.

And what kind of choices are we choosing today? God gave each of us free will to make choices. Liberty and free will are clearly more life-giving than bondage and dictatorship. A normal person doesn’t need complex definitions of freedom and liberty in order to recognize them. They are internally sensed. Still we need to keep in mind that the better part of freedom is the freedom to do the right things, and not freedom from restrictions. Life will always have restrictions and boundaries.

But how much constraint on our lives is natural (say for instance, Nature’s Law of Gravity), and how much is overkill and suffocating? Here, the California Penal Code lists 186 categories of “crimes against the Sovereignty, Executive Power, and Legislative power of the State.” Next comes 132 categories of “Crimes against the Person,” and then an additional 292 categories of crimes against Public Decency, Public Peace, Property, etc.

Liberty. Some Americans assume they have it. Some don’t care about it. Some have died for it. But no one is entirely content with the opposite state of affairs — slavery.

The supposed “happy” pre-Civil War slave burned with a desire for freedom, and would rather eat crow as a freeman, than corn bread and molasses as a slave.

But the same thinking persists, that Americans can be made to be happy slaves. In a prison lawsuit a few years ago, in which I was involved in, inmates challenged slavery in prison. The Federal Judges's decision was that there is nothing wrong with slavery in prison. Yet, many people are not aware that the Supreme Court has repeatedly declared that an inmate's Constitutional Rights don't stop at the prison wall, but extend to an inmate even while he or she is incarcerated. Or do we no longer have a Constitutional right not to be forced into slavery? Interesting question.

Must we Sacrifice our liberty for some "sacred" government? Is the individual's interests shallow compared to the government's interests? Supposedly the government is protecting us. Did the government protect America from a badly leaking oil well in the Gulf this year? They had the means, but did they use it? Who is government protecting?

We must be realistic in our expectations. A cat cannot become a mouse. But what made America great in the past was opportunity: educational opportunities, job opportunities, and spiritual opportunities. Americans developed a unique "can do" mentality, because they realized their dreams and because they had the freedom of opportunity. How much freedom of opportunity is offered by a perfectly engineered Brave New World, where our government designs and molds its citizens' niches in life?

Not everyone is happy with their government. A former patriotic government employee is quoted in David Freed's article "The Wrong Man" The Atlantic (May 2010). This former pro-government employee, Steve Hatfield, is quoted, "People think they're free in this country, don't kid yourself. This is a police state. The government can pretty much do whatever it wants. . . . I was a guy who trusted the government. Now I don't trust a * * * thing they do.

Steven Hatfield had his life ruined by Circumstantial evidence, until years later his innocence was vindicated. At my trial/appeal, my sentencing Judge kept saying over and over — "circumstantial evidence can be used to prove anything." Indeed, that's why my case got into the books. However, the first Federal Judge I went up against was more honest; she, Judge Brown, said, "There is no evidence against this man."

By law I am to receive 6 months halfway house time. That is my current struggle.

The U.S. Federal government is now a law unto itself. As Steven Hatfield learned the hard way, "The government can pretty much do whatever it wants."

I know very little of Fritz' life although I am familiar with his work. I have recently come this site and they supposedly expose Fritz. They also claim to have exposed Alberto Rivera and others.

Is this all true or is it just fabricated lies? Some deeper insights would be greatly appreciated.

Wolveshater - June 23, 2009 12:18 AM (GMT)

The guy uses a lot of government propaganda, mainstream local media news articles, and gossip, provides a so-called unsigned confession by Fritz, which doesn't say much really, he also try's to discredit Cisco Wheeler as well, He also has a church and is asking for donations, and has and established place of worship, probably has 501C3 tax exempt status, and advises that qualified people have government licenses to do business so their more trustworthy than those who do not.. pointing out that Fritz was not a licensed Minister as he himself is, another clue he is 501C3 status..As well, how does two failed marriages discredit a man or woman from being a person recognizing of the Creator, as well show one person on this planet sharing absolute 100% biblical correct accuracy and I'll show you another failed English interpretation of Scripture or and out right liar, (I even have doubts about my mothers works and she READS HEBREW)..I call bullshit, Someone said some where we are all sinners, this means Fritz too..As far as I am concerned if we are not following all leads we then are not the pure truth seeker.. PERIOD. I doubt Fritz is perfect..And then Someone certainly wants his books discredited, and having them all I can see why..The people he exposes in Bloodlines is all real, and all Illuminati..Another thing this guy says is people should not get angry when questioned and up and leave, He says this about Alberto, among others, But if you noticed he admitted doing this exact same thing himself over a dispute at a church about the order of appearance of the speakers, and not happy with the arrangement he took his crew and left..He contradicts himself...So the info amounts to his opinions, and gossip. Ever since Fritz wrote those volumes, or got those volumes into the public eye he has been under attack...

Craig,

Poppy Bush is a most important member of the Pilgrim Society and he is probably the MOST important member of MJ-12 at this time too.Poppy Bush also is the head of PILGRIM INVESTMENTS and that(Poppy that is) is the majority stockholder of Hutchinson-Whampoa which is always identified as being controlled by Li Ka Shing...the top Chinese Illuminati bloodline.As you must know..Hutchinson-Whampoa controls the Panama Canal and is very closely linked to the 100% PLA controlled COSCO which took over the largest container port on the North American west coast..Long Beach.You can Google COSCO to see ALL the western hemisphere ports that have COSCO facilities or total control in those ports.It's now come out that Murdoch is trying to wrest control of DOW JONES(it publishes the Wall St Journal)and yesterday...the chairman of DOW resigned in protest.You need to get a copy of Fritz Springmeiers' book,"Bloodlines of the Illuminati"...it is a MUST HAVE book.If you can't find a copy,I can help you do that with a good friend of mine in Denver who owns METAPHYSICAL BOOKS...let me know.Patty Springmeier,the "wife" of Fritz(she was instrumental in setting up Fritz for arrest on 100% bogus charges)lives in Denver and is the ONLY source for the book.BTW...the QWEST COMMUNICATIONS/GLOBAL CROSSINGS scam was headquartered in Denver and it(Global Crossings--hdqtrd in Bermuda)was picked up by Hutchinson-Whampoa(Poppy Bush)for cents on the dollar.....

U.S. CADRES TOO COWARDLY, WEAK AND FECKLESS TO ARREST BUSH SR. FOR FINANCIAL TERRORISM AND OPEN-ENDED WANTON MAFIOSO SABOTAGE
Saturday 10 July 2010 00:01

NEW INFORMATION:

BELOW:
CIA/MI6.OBAMA/BUSH SR./CHENEY ORDERED CHISTOPHER STORY'S ASSASSINATION AND ARE SUPRISED AND TERRIFIED THAT HE IS NOT DEAD

OBAMA AND BUSH 'SPOKEN TO' BY MEN WITH GUNS

• When 'President' Barack Hussein Obama touched down on the White House Lawn at 5:30pm on 9th July, he was 'spoken to'. Enquiries by this service confirm that those doing the 'speaking' were not Secret Service operatives. On the contrary they were men with guns.

• Within the past 24-30 hours, private citizen George Godfather H. W. Bush Sr. has likewise been 'spoken to' twice. The people doing the 'speaking' were men with guns.

• The Chinese have had enough and are ready to take drastic lethal measures.

• Private citizens George H. W. Bush Sr. and Neil Bush think they are immortal and can take the loot they are blocking to the grave.

• Obama, who answers to the private citizen George H. W. Bush Sr., is saying he's a 'national citizen'. In order to be President of the United States, under the Constitution and the Soldiers and Sailors Act, you have to be a NATURAL citizen born in the United States or born in a US military family serving abroad.

CIA/CHENEY/MI6/OBAMA/BUSH SR. HAVE ATTEMPTED TO ASSASSINATE

CHRISTOPHER STORY

A detailed report on this assassination attempt and the horrible illness inflicted on the Editor as a consequence will be published as soon as feasible.

•We now have proof that the CIA/MI6/Obama/Bush/Cheney issued an assassination order against this Editor. We have proof that they are suprised that the Editor is not dead.

• We use simple, plain English so that people can understand what we say.

As you can see from the above, we have closed down all our communications because of interminable and intolerable harassment from the United States. We have also added a large number of parties to our 'Black List' so that their incessant emails bounce.

NEW REPORT STARTS HERE:

• KEY POINTS:

• The Lienholders exercised a foreclosure and management takeover on Friday 2nd and Saturday 3rd July 2010 of Deutsche Bank, Frankfurt, Germany and of Bank of America, Charlotte, NC. They took this action due to ongoing sabotage by the US official keptocracy.

• They immediately removed people in both banks working for the saboteurs and opponents of the necessary resolutions and cleared derivatives (toxic debt) off the balance sheets.

• This took Deutsche Bank out of the control of Bush Sr.'s agent [see earlier reports: Archive], Chancellor Angela Merkel, and the saboteurs in Germany.

• Likewise they took the CIA's compromised Bank of America out of the control of the corrupt bankers and CIA saboteurs in the United States.

• Her Majesty The Queen signed the necessary authorities for the Refunding Programme, the Loan Facility and other necessary papers during her visit to New York, as expected.

• As a result of the above the necessary funds were available for distribution on Tuesday 6th July 2010.

• As usual, George Bush Sr. interfered, as a consequence of which the Chinese parties had a 'talk' with the corrupt, demonic Godfather Bush Sr.

• By 7th July (Wednesday) a full meeting of Compliance Officers had taken place and the parties were again said to be prepared to initiate the transfers.

• Whereupon the corrupt Leon Panetta, Director of Central Intelligence (CIA), pathetically following 'instructions' issued by a private citizen named George H. W. Bush and issued to his poodle in the White House, the gutless Barack Hussein Obama, issued instructions to banking authorities the 'placate but do not pay' (accounting for the immediate lies summarised below), thus 'preventing' the feckless and terrified banking authorities from making any transfers.

• Bush Sr.'s poodle, Barack Hussein Obama, is too weak and lacking in backbone to grasp that Bush Sr.'s threats [see below] are BLUFF. He lacks the spine to stand up to this crook and face him down, which is the only way to deal with these possessed 'Black' US Nazi operatives, as we have amply demonstrated on this website

• On 7th July, the Chinese authorities then had another talk' with Bush Sr., as a consequence of which the payout procedures were put back in place on that date, to start up at 3:00pm EDT..

• Having thus lied as usual to the Chinese parties, private citizen Bush Sr. contacted Barack Hussein Obama and INSTRUCTED HIM not to allow the release of the funds.

• In that telephone call to the White House, Bush Sr. also threatened that if Obama authorised release of the funds, Bush Sr. would go to the Supreme Court and have Obama's Presidency terminated' [see earlier reports, notably the Biden comment on this score].

• As a consequence, the terrified and gutless Obama obeyed the private citizen George H. W. Bush and the agreed-upon payout of the Settlement funds has not taken place.

• Michael C. Cottrell, BA, M.S., was duly advised on Tuesday 6th July that the preliminary payment due to him would be satisfied on that date and that the Loan Facility would be in place on Thursday 8th July 2010.

• On Friday 9th July 'the word went out' that Mr Cottrell was not to be paid, the opposite of what had been categorically stated earlier.

• The payments agreed to and set out in the Basel List have not been affected as a direct consequence of this sabotage.

• Given the above, Gold Badges, US Law Enforcement, the corrupted US military under the former CIA Director Robert Gates, et al., are all in continuing dereliction of their duty in failing to arrest and lock up the Financial Terrorist George H. W. Bush Sr., either because they, like Joseph Biden, are all blackmailed and compromised, or because they fear that Mr Bush Sr.'s thuggists will murder them, and because they lack the intelligence to understand that Bush Sr.'s behaviour amounts to nothing more than the familiar childish, weak Psy-Ops BLUFF and bullying overfamiliar to students of the Mafiosi Godfathers, of which this criminal is the most ruthless and dangerous operative alive today.

• US law enforcement, Gold badges, feckless CIA operatives, cloth-eared, arrogant and corrupt US military cadres have accordingly dragged the reputation of the United States below sewer level in the eyes of all in the know at highest levels worldwide, with their gutless behaviour.

• Everyone who is anyone in positions of relevant importance worldwide is fully aware of this scandalous state of affairs, not least from this website, which has enormous clout 'where it matters'. They had better exercise their powers to put an end to what is undoubtedly the biggest financial terrorism and corruption crisis in world history.

Re: U.S. Dollar Refunding Project

Dear Honorable George Osborne:

I write to you once more in furtherance of matters raised in my prior correspondence of June 25, 2010; I understand that you have received instructions regarding my approach, and the various points raised in my earlier messages. Your assistance is most urgently required in addressing these matters, and the apparent disavowal of earlier agreements made and reaffirmed at previous G-8 meetings concerning the U.S. Dollar Refunding Project. I write on behalf of my clients Michael C. Cottrell, B.A., M.S., of Erie, Pennsylvania, USA, and his corporations: Pennsylvania Investments, Inc., registered in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and Cottrell Securities Limited, registered in England and Wales.

The events of the past week are difficult to understand, and impossible to tolerate. I am advised and understand that the Lienholders executed a foreclosure and management takeover Fri-Sat 2-3 July of Deutsche Bank in Frankfurt, Germany, and of Bank of America in Charlotte, NC.

They “cleaned out” both banks of people working for the opponents and cleared toxic debt [including derivatives] off the bank balance sheets. Accordingly, they took DB out of the control of Angela Merkel and opponents in Germany, and they took BOA out of all possible control by the opponents in this country. As a result of these actions, it was expected that the World Global Settlement funds could be distributed this week.

These funds were available for distribution on Tuesday, July 6. Because George Bush Sr. was initiating interference, the Chinese authorities then had a “talk” with Bush Sr. By Wednesday afternoon a full Compliance Officer meeting had been conducted, and the appropriate parties were again prepared to initiate the transfers when Mr. Leon Panetta, pursuant to instructions from President Obama and George Bush Sr. issued instructions to the banking authorities to “placate but do not pay”; this prevented the authorities from making any such transfers. I am advised that the Chinese authorities then had another “talk” with Bush Sr., and all was ready again on today, July 7, and set to commence @ 3:00 PM EDT.

At approximately 3:00 PM EDT, I am told by several sources, George Bush Sr. apparently contacted President Obama and instructed him not to allow release of the funds. Bush Sr. then advised the President that if the funds were released, Bush would “go to the Supreme Court and have Obama’s Presidency terminated”. In accord with these instructions, the payout of the World Global Settlement funds has not proceeded.

THE PAYMENTS PREVIOUSLY AGREED TO AND SET FORTH ON THE BASEL LIST HAVE NOT BEEN MADE AS A DIRECT RESULT OF THESE CONTINUED DELAYS. Direct intervention through your good offices on behalf of the Royal Monarchal Power, is absolutely required to bring this matter to conclusion. To secure release of these Settlement funds, it is imperative that your power as one of the U.S. Treasury Lienholders, be exercised with such force as may be required to effect completion.

I respectfully plead that you utilize the inherent Royal Monarchal Power at the earliest possible moment to ensure completion of this funding. Thank you in advance for your assistance; please contact me directly if I can provide any additional information or help.

Sincerely,

HODGES AND ASSOCIATES
A. CLIFTON HODGES

BEWARE OF MALICIOUS IMITATIONS: It has come to our notice that certain websites have been in the habit of copying reports from this site, attributing the reports to the Editor of this service, but at the same time INSERTING TEXT NOT WRITTEN BY THE EDITOR.

• This is a very old, malevolent US counterintelligence DIRTY TRICK.

Therefore, you should be advised that the GENUINE ORIGINAL REPORT is, by obvious definition, accessible ONLY FROM THIS WEBSITE. If you come across an article elsewhere that is attributed to the Editor of this service, you should refer to the ORIGINAL ARTICLE HERE and you should bear in mind that the illegally duplicated article may contain text that was NOT written by the Editor of this service, but which was inserted for malicious purposes by counterintelligence.

Likewise, although we haven't yet had time to elaborate this issue, we have taken drastic steps around the world to close off the malicious piracy of our books. One technique used by several disreputable sites (in the United States, the Netherlands and Switzerland) is to copy our title(s) and (a) to display an image of the front cover WITHOUT THE ISBN DATA at the top of the cover; and (B) to DELETE THE COPYRIGHT PAGE.

In so doing, the criminal pirates proclaimed that they knew perfectly well that they were/are engaged in theft and can be prosecuted for stealing copyright.

NON-U.S. INTERNET SECURITY SOLUTION CD AVAILABLE: FAR BETTER THAN NORTON ETC
It has now been established that the National Security Agency (NSA) works with/controls Microsoft, Norton, McAfee, and others, in pursuit of the Pentagon's vast BIG BROTHER objective, directed from the 'highest' levels (not the levels usually referred to) which seek to have every computer in the world talk direct to the Pentagon or to NSA's master computers.

This should come as no real surprise since the cynical spooks even assert this 'in-your-face' by advertising 'INTEL INSIDE', which says exactly what it means. More specifically, NSA have made great strides in this direction by having a back door built into Microsoft VISTA. Certain computers, especially those labelled with the logo of the 'fully collaborating' firm Hewlett Packard, have hard-core setups which facilitate the remote monitoring and controlling of personal computers by NSA, Fort Meade. We now understand that if you are using VISTA* you MUST NOT enable 'file and printer sharing' under any circumstances. If you say 'YES', so to speak, to 'file and printer sharing', your computer becomes a slave at once to NSA's master computers.

DO NOT ENABLE SHARING.

Unfortunately, this abomination is so far advanced that this may not be the only precaution that needs to be taken. As long as Microsoft continues its extensive cooperation with NSA and the NSC (National Security Council), the spying system which assists the criminalised structures, and thus hitherto the Bush-Clinton 'Box Gang' and its connections, with their fraudulent finance operations, NSA may be able to steal data from your computer. The colossal scourge of data theft is associated with this state of affairs: data stolen usually include Credit Card data, which the kleptocracy regards as almost as good as real estate for hypothecation purposes. Even so, you can make life very much more problematical for these utterly odious people by NOT USING U.S.-sourced so-called Internet Security and anti-virus software. Having been attacked and abused so often, we offer a solution.

We use a proprietary FOREIGN Internet Security program which devours every PC Trojan, worm, scam, porn attack and virus that the National Security Agency (NSA) throws at us. We are offering this program (CD) to our clients and friends, at a premium. The program comes with our very strong recommendation, but at the same time, if you buy from us, you will be helping us finance ongoing exposures of the DVD's World Revolution and the financial corruption that has been financing it.

The familiar US proprietary Internet Security programs are by-products of US counterintelligence, and are intended NOT to solve your Internet security problems, but to spy on you and to report what you write about, to centralised US electronic facilities set up for the purpose. You can now BREAK FREE from this syndrome while at the same time helping us to MAINTAIN THE VERY HEAVY PRESSURE UPON THE CRIMINALISTS WE HAVE BEEN EXPOSING, by ordering this highest quality FOREIGN (i.e., non-US) INTERNET SECURITY SOLUTION that we have started advertising on this website. This offer has been developed in response to attacks we have suffered from the NSA nerds who appear to have a collective mental age of about five years, judging by their output.

• To access details about the INTERNET SECURITY SOLUTION, just press THE LIVE LINK YOU HAVE JUST READ, or else press SERIALS in the red panel below. This opens up our mini-catalogue of printed intelligence publications. Scroll right down to the foot of that section, where you will see details of this service. When you buy this special product, you will also, as we clearly state above, be paying a special premium by way of a donation to help us finance these exposures.

The premium contains a donation for our exposure work and also covers our recommendation based on the Editor's own experience that this INTERNET SECURITY SOLUTION will make your Internet life much easier. The program has an invaluable 'Preview before downloading' feature.

• It is suitable for PC's but not for Mac computers. As with all such programs, the License is renewable at a modest annual fee. This is done on-line in the usual way [direct with supplier].

This is very sad news John. Clearly shows to what length TPTB will go to to maintain their agendas. Thank you Chris S for all that you did to help awaken the rest. We are in your debt.

This doesn't make sense to me.

Why would he be walking the streets without protection of body guards?

Why would he be walking the streets of London, the Capital of the Corporation's of the World. London is the main headquarters for some of the most powerful bankers and elitists in the world. It's like walking around in the hornets nest.

He knew they were trying to assassinate him. Why wasn't he protected by "good guys"?

Could this be a rumor to throw off the bad guys. If they believe he is dead then they wont try to track him down any more.

I say Chris is still in hiding waiting for announcements and waiting to take the stand as a witness and person with evidence to take down the Cabal. He is too important.

The question remains

Were the police and M16 in on this.

Did they allow his protection to disappear like the secret service fell back during the JFK hit.

Perhaps this what the Hague run up is all about.

this is bad new's of the worst kind. looks like the battle lines are in the dirt. as william baret travis said at the alamo, there is no way we survive this battle. your are all released from your obligations, and are free to leave as for me if i have to i fight this battle on my own. he then drew a line in the sand and told them anyone that wants to fight with me you must cross ovet this line. everyone of them did. we must also like chris story decide if the battle for our world is worth it and cross that line. maby a little sappy. but this is a revolting development to say the least.

CIA/MI6.OBAMA/BUSH SR./CHENEY ORDERED CHISTOPHER STORY'S ASSASSINATION, AND ARE SUPRISED AND TERRIFIED THAT HE IS NOT DEAD.
OBAMA AND BUSH ‘SPOKEN TO’ BY MEN WITH GUNS
• When ‘President’ Barack Hussein Obama touched down on the White House Lawn at 5:30pm on 9th July, he was ‘spoken to’. Enquiries by this service confirm that those doing the ‘speaking’ were not Secret Service operatives. On the contrary they were men with guns.
• Within the past 24-30 hours, private citizen George Godfather H. W. Bush Sr. has likewise been ‘spoken to’ twice. The people doing the ‘speaking’ were men with guns.
• The Chinese have had enough and are ready to take drastic lethal measures.
• Private citizens George H. W. Bush Sr. and Neil Bush think they are immortal, and can take the loot they are blocking to the grave.
• Obama, who answers to the private citizen George H. W. Bush Sr., is saying he’s a ‘national citizen’. In order to be President of the United States, under the Constitution and the Soldiers and Sailors Act, you have to be a NATURAL citizen born in the United States or born in a US military family serving abroad.
CIA/CHENEY/MI6/OBAMA/BUSH SR. HAVE ATTEMPTED

TO ASSASSINATE CHRISTOPHER STORY
A detailed report on this assassination attempt and the horrible illness inflicted on the Editor as a consequence , will be published as soon as feasible. •We now have proof that the CIA/MI6/Obama/Bush/Cheney issued an assassination order against this Editor. John

In the July 10 worldreports.org update you speak of Chris Story actually posted an update saying that there had been an assassination attempt but he SURVIVED it. But he had been given a "horrible disease".

He wrote that he would post the whole story in due time.

Perhaps there's still hope that your intel is wrong and CS is still alive?

Looking forward to a progress report on all of this. Funny how it did not make the MSM papers who usually report on all shootings regardless of ourcome. shows you why gun control is bad, especially during these times.

Christopher Story's last two articles have been pulled off his web site.This is quite odd because In his last article, C. Story had spoken of an assassination attempted on him by the usual suspects here in the USA and Britain, He went on to report that he had survived this attack on his life, and further that the assassins or their Bosses were surprised that he was indeed still alive, but that as he was still recovering from that attempt, he would not be detailing and revealing more of this story until after he became well enough to do so.
As of today, that attempted assassination article, as well as his regular July 10th article entitled "WORST FINANCIAL TERRORISM SABOTAGE IN HISTORY" @ http://www.worldreports.org/news/296_worst...tage_in_history .... have been pulled from his web site. I wonder if he has been Killed? LA S /////

It is sad that Christopher Story did depart prior to the end of this terrible mess, however,in saying that he was well aware that there is no death as such, only transition to a higher body. He still works even at this time he is finding his way in more comfortable quarters and giving his assistance to the changing of the guard which is inevatable. His protection was his 'faith and trust' and in my own experience I have found that protection more powerfull than men with guns. I have looked down the barrel more than once and stood in my faith and trusted that all was well. To carry a gun would negate the higher protection given freely to any that ask. Christopher Story was a rare man of immense talent who brought truth to the world in the most difficult times.

Fortunately for you John, you are not nearly as important a figure as Christopher Story was. There are a lot of bigger fish to fry before the dark ones turn their attention on you. Mr. Story apparently had quite a network of highly placed contacts as well as mainstream exposure via his international financial publications. His professional credibility made his assertions something that could not be easily ignored by the self-appointed ruling elite. Even his blind and naive view that his beloved Queen Elizabeth II was a spotless saint determined to serve mankind was nevertheless endearing as was his apparently deep and sincere Christian faith. Mr. Story, God bless you on the other side. Thank you for serving mankind. My deepest condolences to his family and friends. One thing that I can say about him is that Christopher Story was a genuinely good man and a hero.

craig-oxley - July 30, 2010 04:35 PM (GMT)

Unfortunately, i cannot get into too much detail. i've probably said too much already, but i've been on the watch list since before i was born, so it's really whatever at this point, but i'll try my best to not be too aloof...

anyone who has been reading story for a number years knows that many a deal have been struck with those holding the settlements hostage & those to whom the payouts are due. you would also know that the hostage takers have reneged every single time.

also - an avid reader would know that attempts on story's life have been made many, MANY times before & after the last attempt, those who made the attempt were told to back off or else face full on warfare in which all of their lies, deceptions, etc. would be exposed to all the world

(edit: "warfare" in this sense would be financial which would entail the total collapse of all fiat monies [in particular - the $] & stock exchanges the world over as the exposure of these criminal doings by high level government agencies who would admit that, yes, indeed these things have transpired. this would cause these criminals to lose all their perform some due diligence. look at holland. they are already taking measures to go back to a gold standard. there are many other nations who have been performing this fleeing from a fiat monetary system for a long time. this is all in preparation for this possible "warfare" - as well as a way to avoid getting sucked in to "short end of the stick" in fraudulent finances such as derivatives trading ie. greece, ireland, portugal, etc amongst many other issues, but i digress...).

now, the week of his death - but before the rumor mill started churning about his demise - i had a very interesting conversation with someone regarding the settlements (for some perspective: this conversation happened friday, the 22 of july. his death was first heard by us that saturday night/sunday morning). according to this source, it was disseminated that the settlements have been finalized & would be released beginning of august. i cannot go into details as to how/why this source is impeccable in this regards, but just know it is regarding something that story himself has reported on many times in the past - a proverbial picking up of the torch, if you will.

during our discourse, i mentioned how very interesting their statement re: the settlements was seeing as how story's july 10th report has been taken down. immediately we were thinking, well, maybe he was taken out. also, it could have been because he was asked to remove it until the event of the deadline passing with no action. one thing that is missing in the reposts in these boards i've been reading are the letters sent by attorney hodges. most of them were reposts by story. however, i noticed that hodges had also sent one to someone else. unfortunately, i was unable to print out the report before it was removed so i cannot say who the last letter was to, but i do remember thinking "DAMN! he is no longer pulling any punches!" it basically equivocated to going to the superintendent of schools after the principal ignores your repeated requests - if the similitude can be seen.

the other thought was that he was not going to repost it until he was back in london as it is known he does not post while on north america for a plethora of reasons.

obviously, our initial thought was most accurate, unfortunately.

the point of the above, long-winded diatribe? well, you're going to have to make some connections between the above & the below.

first of all - story was not in the uk when he fell "ill."

when i first heard the tale of his death, it went that he was summoned (sorry, even though i'm already saying too much, i will not give this detail away but have left a trail for you to try & connect the dots - hopefully) somewhere where he was then infected with this government viral agent. it was all hearsay - especially with all this "killed assassination style in the streets of london talk"...until i read the telegraph death notice. a "brief illness"?!? alarm bells went OFF in my head. obviously, the poisoning aspect of what i heard is true. therefore, i have to believe that the summoning & the place to which he was summoned is also true.

let us not think of good guys v. bad guys in this case. there are black hats & white hats in every intelligence community within every government. there are cia agents & mi6 agents alike who are either pro or con story.

knowing these dialectal serpents & all of their past actions - i would not put it past them to make such a ludicrous demand as to be able to take the life of someone who has the protection of the payees in order to make good on releasing the funds. now, when we examine all of the above as one giant geo-socio-politico chess game, sometimes, yes, you must sacrifice your rook in order to get your advantage. in this entire drama, story has been quite a strong rook. however, we all know there comes a time when they must be sacrificed.

seeing as how there has yet to be exposures at the highest levels of these criminals, & yet they've been able to remove story from the board without repercussions as of yet, it says to me that, yes, a deal was struck & he was sacrificed for the greater good. if you know the full implications of the settlements & what it will mean to all the people & nations & what they will all be able to do - either collectively, individually, or any combination of the two - then you will be able to see this as well.

i will tell you this much - if come close of business EST monday, 2 august 2010 the settlements are NOT released? - get your hands on as much gold, silver, gems, etc. as you can & get yourself some firearms & PLENTY of ammo. the as of yet inflicted repercussions for taking story out will be laid out IN FULL FORCE if this does not transpire - THAT i can promise you.

here's another lovely piece of evidence to prove story's demise.

if you click on this link (http://worldreports.org/news/296_worst_fin...tage_in_history) -as has been posted in this thread - it will take you to the july 10th report.

notice how it's blank? if story had taken it down, the above link would be invalid. yet, the fact that the link is still valid yet the page contains no data & has been removed from the home page proves that whoever removed it could invalidate the link.

CHRISTOPHER STORY (ALLEGEDLY & APPARENTLY DECEASED): REFLECTIONS ON A SUSPECTED BRITISH COUNTER-INTELLIGENCE DIVERSIONARY AGENT

Christopher Story, Her Satanic Majesty's long serving British Counter-Intelligence agent - IF he was taken out by MI6 (SAS more likely, commissioned by MI6), then it was no doubt because he had outlived his usefulness - only the most completely naive & credulous among the conspiracy research arena were still taken in by his never-ending, go nowhere cliffhanger claims, full of fictitious international banking groups & equally fictional intelligence agencies that amazingly only he (& his readers) had heard of. His death would give credibility to his diversionary nonsense, that ultimately distracted attention away from the Jesuit-directed Papal Roman Empire & of the fact that the New World Order is the Roman World Order. If we were to believe Story it is a German New World Order being orchestrated from Dachau by his invention (or the Jesuits' invention more likely): the DVD (Deutsche Verteidigungs Dienst).

Equally likely that the strain of being called out as a controlled charlatan had got too much for him, leading him to reflect on a life squandered in serving the British Establishment via a career built upon lies upon lies. The fact that his base of operations in Horseferry Road was highlighted by myself in February this year as being on the same road as the MI5 HQ's Thames House (& not too far from MI6's "Babylon-On-Thames" building) would have certainly been a little too "close to home" for comfort - although I should add that I take no great satisfaction from contemplating that this may have been a turning point leading to the demise of his life force.

Though the MI5 had only been in Thames House since 1994, it had operated out of buildings in the area long before this. Story's World Reports Ltd's Global Analysis International Intelligencehad of course been operating out of its Horseferry Road operations base for a number of decades until his death. I would not be surprised if this Counter-Intelligence operation keeps on running - after all it was quite possibly going even before Christopher Story's involvement. The company was registered in 1963, a date that only recently seems to have been asserted to have been the date from which Christopher Story's connection to World Reports Ltd began.

It seems that he hadn't got around to using this date at his own site.

World Reports Limited was registered with Companies House on the 6th of August, 1963. Type of business: "Unknown":

http://www.webcitation.org/5nXcvaeBg

I note that a key date in his back story (no pun intended) has changed at his Wikipedia entry. There it used to state:

> QUOTE

> In 1963, he formed his own publishing company specialising in intelligence and founded World Reports Limited in 1969.

Now it states:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Christopher_Story

>
> In 1963, he formed his own publishing company specialising in intelligence and founded World Reports Limited in 1963.

This sentence now no longer flows naturally, with 1963 pointlessly mentioned twice.

Note that there is no evidence (or claim) at his website that he was publishing before 1969:

In addition, his exceptionally extensive knowledge and understanding of 'hidden' intelligence operations, policies and dimensions, derived from many years of deep analysis and intelligence community contacts, enables him to elaborate and explain financial, geopolitical and intelligence issues which 'mainstream' analysts may not understand, or even recognise to be issues requiring investigation.

Its first venture was International Currency Review, launched in London that year, which remains, to this day, the world's unique currency-oriented financial journal for the international financial community. In 1972, World Reports Limited augmented this service with London Currency Report, a global gold, currency and economic information system together with a filing binder. This was followed in 1977 by Interest Rate Service, modelled along similar lines, and which specialises in monetary and interest rate intelligence and analyses.

The classic, prototypical cover story of a controlled oppositional agent.

Was Story even involved with WRL in 1963? I have my doubts.

While I do not wish to speak ill of the dead, I may as well call it as I feel it: Good riddance to bad rubbish.

As I have stated before:

Christopher Story of World Holdings Ltd, 105 Horseferry Road, London SW1P 2EF, is [now "was" in Story's case] as controlled opposition as that other Christopher, (Dame of the Royal Order of Francis I) Margaret Thatcher's former advisor & (verifiable) Officer of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, a Knight of Honour and Devotion of the Sovereign Military Order of Malta, and a member of the Roman Catholic Mass Media Commission, Lord Christpher Monckton of the British Intelligence Monckton Dynasty.

I was right about Monckton & I have no doubt that I was right about Story: two infiltrating peas in a pod.

Today's International Recognition of the Order

Much like the Order of Saint Januarius and the Sacred Military Constantinian Order of Saint George, the Royal Order of Francis I remains an ancient, dynastic and internationally recognized institution. ... Today the Order is bestowed by HRH The Duke of Castro, as Head of the Royal House of Bourbon of the Two Sicilies, and a great-great grandson of the Order's founder. ...

The spiritual head of the Order of Francis I, is His Eminence Mario Francesco, Cardinal Pompedda, who is also Grand Prior and Ecclesiastical Counselor by appointment of His Holiness Pope John Paul II to the sister dynastic order of Sacred Military Constantinian Order of Saint George. ...

The Royal Order of Francis I is bestowed upon worthy individuals regardless of nationality or creed who have contributed to public life, science, the arts, agriculture, and commerce. The Order also plays a significant role in recognizing those that have contributed to inter-faith and inter-church dialogue and understanding. All principal faiths and denominations are represented at both delegation and international level.

Among the Order's prominent knights and dames are HE President Bashar al-Assad of Syria, HRH Princess Benedikte of Denmark ... , HE President Ali Abdullah Saleh of Yemen, HRH Prince Khalid Al-Faisal bin Abdul Aziz Al-Saud of Saudi Arabia (right below) , former British Prime Minister The Rt. Hon Baroness Thatcher ..., His Grace The Duke of Westminster ... Sir Sigmund Sternberg, Lord Denman, former Speaker of the Northern Ireland Assembly Lord Alderdice, Sir David Durie, former HM Governor and Commander-in-Chief in Gibraltar, His Excellency Mr. Mohammed Belmahi, Ambassador of HM The King of Morocco to the Court of St James and Professor Nasser David Khalili.

Religious Leaders among Those honored

Among the leaders of other Christian denominations who have been invested with the Royal Order of Francis I in recognition of their ecumenical achievements are, His Grace The Most Reverend and Right Honorable Dr Rowan Williams, Lord Archbishop of Canterbury and Primate of the Anglican Communion ... , and His Eminence Archbishop Gregorios of Thyateira and Great Britain, Head of the Greek Orthodox Church in Great Britain ... .

The Royal Order of Francis I, together with its sister Order, the Sacred Military Constantinian Order of St George, continues to lead the way among lay Catholic knightly associations and brotherhoods, in its commitment to inter-church and inter-faith dialogue.

soulinspiration I recommend you stop repeating your mistakes. It's getting annoying. Go back to page five of the Wanta/Story topic I started and read my post here.

http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...60#entry2967221

The author of wikipedia, in the old days, got mixed up because of all the dates and didn't know what the hell they were doing. Story himself has said on his site before that he started in 1963. So in other words, world reports did start in 1963, but International Currency Review BEGAN in 1969, and then he took over it in 1970. That 1969 was the starting date of ICR, and the author of wikipedia conflated that by mistake with the 1963 start of his world reports company with the start of the ICR in 1969.

Now I think I know what Craig meant when he accused you of counterintelligence. Attacking someone without having all your ducks in a row. When you found that ukdata page that says world reports limited was started in 1963, and you can't find any corrobration outside wikipedia that Story started WRL in 1969, it probably means you haven't discovered anything. What it means is that WRL started in 1963 and that 1969 was the starting date of Story's most famous journal International Currency Review; ergo, the wikipedia page is wrong in saying that WRL started in 1969!

QUOTE

And as for 1963, wikipedia (without a footnote) states that this was the year Christopher Story himself started his publishing company and only six years later in 1969 did he start his world reports. Let's look at the footer at the end of one of his reports.

We are a private intelligence publishing house and have no connections to any outside parties including intelligence agencies. The word 'intelligence' on this website and in all our marketing material is used for marketing/sales purposes only and has no other connotations whatsoever: see 'About Us' on the red panels under the Notes on the Editor, Christopher Story FRSA, who has been solely and exclusively engaged as an investigative journalist, Editor, Author and private financial and current affairs Publisher since 1963 and is not and never has been an agent for a foreign power, suggestions to the contrary being actionable for libel in the English Court.

So Story himself says he has been active since 1963 as a "financial and current affairs publisher." So far the consensus is that world reports limited did not come out until 1969. But this is where you disagree and say, World Reports Limited started in 1963.

http://www.ukdata.com/company-credit-repor...TS-LIMITED.html

What was Story doing for those first six years and in what magazines if WRL didn't start until 1969?

Okay. We have verified a few things:

* Story was/is a master obfuscator.

* Story claims (at: http://www.worldreports.org/news/250_si) that he himself set up WRL in 1963.

* If Story was/is telling the truth about his founding of WRL in 1963, then he has a six-year gap until he started publishing in 1969 when he was doing: Nothing verifiable.

> If Story was/is telling the truth about his founding of WRL in 1963, then he has a six-year gap until he started publishing in 1969 when he was doing: Nothing verifiable.

It means there was a six year gap between when he started to publish any kind of serial. If you knew a little more, you'd know that each serial he has, he didn't necessarily originate himself. He purchased SOVIET ANALYST almost twenty years ago and took it over. He also purchased ARAB-ASIAN affairs from none other than David (Mossad drug runner) Kimche's brother back in the seventies I believe.

Story has also stated that he used to get his editorials published in papers like The Guardian and Telegraph. But that was a long long time ago. If you had bothered to spend time on his website, you would see that not all of his serials have as many volumes as other ones. For example, International Currency Review, which started in 1969, but was taken over by Story ONE YEAR LATER in 1970, made it up to it's 34th or 35th volume. His Global Analyst Serial however is only up to Volume 3. He started different things at different times.

So overall, we don't have proof that he wasn't publishing anything between 1963 and 1969. Hell, back in those six years, before ICR, he may have only had one small newsletter that was gernal and talked about nearly everything. Kind of like his own newspaper. I don't know. I would love to know and see what he obviously did do in those six years. But if he says he started world reports in 1963, and a ukdata page says so as well, that means he's telling the truth. It also means that the wikipedia page in the old days got it wrong when they said he started world reports in 1969.

For the last few years of his life, Story published hundreds of pages of material EVERY YEAR. One particular ISSUE of ICR ran over 500 pages a year or two ago. It probably wasn't the first time. If you expect me to believe that in his younger days, he wasn't putting anything out between 1963 and 1969, you're stretching the limits of credibility. A man of his calibre wouldn't be doing nothing when younger and faster.

As I stated: "Nothing verifiable".

You have always been very touchy about Christopher Story haven't you Antisionist? What gives?

I notice that you avoid commenting on my comparison of him with that other advisor to 1980's UK Prime Minister (& Papal-loyal Dame) Maggie Thatcher: Christopher Monckton of the Monckton Papal knighthood/British Intelligence dynasty. Monckton is a clear illustration of how these British Intelligence infiltrators work. Some may find this "revelation of the method" offensive.

"A man of his calibre". Yes lone wolf in the wilderness Story, exposing the inner workings of the New World Order in a publications never seen or read by anyone - or more likely orchestrating the Tavistock-conceived material of the English "Underground" literary scene so important as a seminal influence on Sixties pop culture, before making ready for the more parapolitical material that we know him for. If anyone has any better suggestions for what he was doing during this time then feel free to contribute.

Sole source?: Christopher Story.

Is he also your source for insisting that Prince Philip is the head of world "regular" Freemasonry & not the Duke of Kent? After all, his material is such a great source of "facts".

If Story had also pushed this "fact" that rivals the factuality of his many other "facts" known only to himself, then that would explain a lot.

By the way: Fredrik Crichton Stuart (as the Order of Malta's Grand Prior for England) is the head of the Knights of Malta in England:

http://www.orderofmalta.org.uk/the_grand_p..._of_england.asp

http://www.burkes-peerage.net/familyhomepa...N=STUART-AZ-772

The Queen is the Sovereign head of the Order of St John - essentially a franchise of the Order of Malta & in alliance with the latter order, as well as its European Johanniter Orden counterparts.

I maintain that only the Jesuit Superior General, the Pope & the King of Spain (as head of the Order of the Golden Fleece) are her senior due to her position as head of the Order of the Garter. The heads of the Order of the Holy Sepulchre, Constantinian Order & Order of Malta are at best her equals, although her royal bloodline suggests that any such "equality" would be merely a diplomatic courtesy.

Vatican Cardinals (like EOHS Grand Master John Foley) & SMOM Grand Masters (like Matthew Festing) are Papal Princes, but today's European & British royal heads are also Papal Princes & Princesses, although their status within the Papal Roman Empire is reinforced & elevated by their genealogically-assured bloodline positions.

Those heads of such Orders as the Fleece & Garter (as Juan Carlos I & Elizabeth II are) have even more clout.

And what was the creation date of world reports according to that ukdata website? 1963. Now what did Christopher Story also say on another of his pages?

1969, is when he first started publishing stuff in ICR because ICR started in 1969.

In other words, Christopher Story published writings on financial and current affairs starting in 1963. In other words, just general news like a regular newspaper.

Then six years later in 1969, he began writings on currency, economic geofinancial and intelligence services. In other words, he got more specific and more detailed in his reporting once he started publishing his work in serials, the first serial being ICR.

Completely different. There is no logical contradiction like you claim there is. Period.

When all else fails, play psychologist, eh? Okay, I can stoop to your level. Maybe you just don't like me correcting your misinterpretations of what Story has tried to convey, because you're still mad that I busted you on your Jewish Talmud apologetics a while back in that JEWS MUST FACE THE DARK SIDE OF JUDAISM thread where I tore to shreds your freemasonic website reference that was whitewashing all the bad things in the Talmud line by line. There was nothing to deny. It was good work on Monckton you did. It could very well be that Story was an agent, but in your own words, there is nothing verifiable. There is nothing inherently contradictory about Story being an old cold warrior who was so afraid of the Soviets and Germans that he couldn't see how bad the British were. In fact, in one of his journals I have, he says John Coleman has done some good work, but he doesn't like Coleman blaming the British for starting world war one. Story says the Germans were jealous of the British power, while Coleman says the British were working to attack Germany. There is some truth to what Coleman says given what happened at Versailles.

Leave it to you to take things out of context. I guess I will have to put it back in the right context since it obviously escapes you. When you read the words that surrounded that clause of mine, you will see I was referring to the incredible amount of work he writes and publishes every year. And based on all the work he was able to do as an old man, I would find it hard to believe he did nothing at all for six years in between 1963 and 1969.

It was my own mistake which Craig corrected. It was your mistake to think I got it from Story. In fact, if you cared enough to look at context (once again), you would see I was anti Story for a bit when I was saying, "What is Story thinking with Hodges corresponding to the highest levels of the British royalty asking for help to stop the financial criminalism in the USA, when they are involved in freemasonry? I just used that youtube clip to illusrtate said point of mine. If one member of the British royalty is in freemasonry, they obviously all are. We have evidence for that too.

Incase you forgot, it was me who started that Leo Wanta/Christopher Story topic in Agents, which Craig subsequently moved, where I always attacked Story for his love of the British elite family which in fact are part German. Story's shortcomings were never lost on me. But neither were his strong points.

Hi, Folks -

Here's Benjamin Fulford's blog entry for August 2:

Christopher Story murdered, other journalists targeted in new fascist campaign
Prominent veteran financial journalist Edward Harle (working under the pen name Christopher Story) wrote before his recent death that George Bush Senior, Barak Obama and other members of the criminal Washington D.C. establishment had ordered him killed.
Story was poisoned during a March, 2010 visit to the US with a virus created by the Fort Meade biological warfare facility, according to close associates of Story who spoke to him the day before his July 14th death. Although there exists an antidote for this virus, Story was unaware he was poisoned with it until recently by which point his liver damage had progressed too far for treatment, according to the sources.

Although Story is now dead, his sources will continue to provide the public with vital information about the secret financial war that is now raging towards its conclusion. The murder of Story will not go un-avenged, according to several sources inside the U.S. and UK military-industrial complex.

The murder of Story is part of a broader, but doomed campaign to silence journalists. Jane Burgermeister, who did much to expose the pharmaceutical industry’s involvement in the creation of the H1N1 virus, contacted this writer today saying she feared for her life. She is the victim of systematic harassment by Austrian security service thugs and their corporate/government bosses.

This writer has also been the target of multiple murder attempts. The same cabal that killed my colleague Paul Klebnikov (the former Forbes Moscow Bureau Chief) and killed Daniel Pearle of the Wall Street Journal, has been systematically murdering journalists around the world as a part of their effort keep in power and fool the public with their fake “war on terror.”

Below is a copy of Christopher Story’s last report. There has been a systematic effort to remove this report from the internet so please disseminate it far and wide.

Below that you will find a copy of an e-mail from Jane Burgermeister.

Below that, you will find a list of the members of the Knights of Malta, who are a major part of the criminal cabal that is trying to turn Western Civilization into a fascistic dictatorship. When the White Dragon roars, their reign of terror will finally end.

Edward Harle’s (Christopher Story’s) last report:

craig-oxley - August 2, 2010 12:56 PM (GMT)

Sadly I can confirm that my friend Christopher Story was assassinated by the German DVD covert intelligence agency on 14th July 2010, mode of assassination bio-weapon, slow-acting and administered, possibly in the US, in or around December 2009.

Official cause of death is apparently being given as liver failure.

HM Coroner for Oxfordshire has been informed.

Christopher told me he had received a number of death threats in the first part of 2009, although sadly he broke off contact in July, having been fed false information about me by a DVD agent or conduit (ie passing on disinformation fed to him) in Erie PA, or Washington DC, with whom he was in contact.

I first got an alert last weekend when some one monitoring his website told me he had ceased posting and was claiming, correctly, to have been poisoned.

A source close to the CIA confirmed it on Thursday July 29 and indicated it was the Germans, then an announcement of his death went up on his website on Friday July 30.

Christopher's statement that 'President' Obama (Christopher was quite correct to state that Obama was not born in the USA and is not a US Citizen) had signed off on the hit seems to me to be accurate, as DVD penetration assets in the CIA were involved.

There is no reason to believe Vice-President Cheney was in the loop, indeed I am sure he was not. Dick Cheney is an honorable man, as I kept telling Christopher!

Christopher was close to British Intelligence (not MI6) and it is reasonable to suppose that retaliatory hits will be sanctioned. Whilst it is a matter for them it is unlikely that a targeted killing of 'President' Obama would be authorised. Christopher's assassination will see a ramp-up in the Intelligence War between Britain and Germany, war may go hot if the Germans are not careful.

The UK has privately indicated to Moscow that we would not oppose a Russian land attack on Germany through Poland, Poland also likely to support after the Polis President and General Staff were assassinated by the DVD in April.

-Michael Shrimpton

yes2truth - August 2, 2010 03:32 PM (GMT)

There is no reason to believe Vice-President Cheney was in the loop, indeed I am sure he was not. Dick Cheney is an honorable man, as I kept telling Christopher!

Mr Shrimpton's piece was very convincing until this? LOL Can a barrister be anything but a disso agent?

AntiSionist - August 2, 2010 10:42 PM (GMT)

Not to mention he blames the Germans for what happened to those Polish politicians in that plane accident months ago. Sorry but that was a Soviet operation. They didn't like the Polish getting to close to the USA with missle shield deals. Second of all, it's called the second Katyn massacre for a reason. Katyn was previously blamed on Germany, but historians figured out the Russians did it and tried to blame Germany. Revisionists always have a field day with that one.

Story was poisoned in 2005 while in the US doing work but he survived. I guess not this time. Very sad. They obviously went after his liver, like they want after Vialls' kidneys.

AntiSionist - August 2, 2010 11:26 PM (GMT)

Cheney is not an honourable man. He abused Cathy O Brien and countless others. Christopher Story knew this. He also knew that Cathy O Brien told a lot of truth in her book, and that Brice Taylor was also the real deal. F*#@ Michael Shrimpton.

I am sorry to hear that something might have happened to Christopher Story.

I have just watched the video posted of Christopher Story speaking at the Lawful Rebellion conference, which I hadn't seen before.

He mentions Roger Hayes, who is involved with the Bruges Group, set up by Alan Sked, (of the London School of Economics, founded at Adelphi House, 1-11 John Adam St London) who also founded UKIP.

The Bruges Group representative in Washington is John O'Sullivan, also the chair of the Hudson Institute, which Kissinger is involved in.

Kissinger, mentioned by Story, is involved with the International Institute for Strategic Studies (IISS), which was founded at the Royal Society of the Arts (RSA), at 18 Adam St, London.

Also, the EU founding meeting was held at Savoy Place, just metres from the RSA.

Researchers should note that Christopher Story, according to his website, is a fellow of the Royal Society of the Arts (where, apparently, the IISS was founded)

The wiki discuss page, though, makes some very interesting comments:

However, I am sorry to hear that something might have happened to Christopher Story.

Mr Story is now among the longest-serving editors of any publication in the world, having edited and published International Currency Review since quite shortly after it first appeared in 1969. This means that his experience of geofinancial and global economic analysis is virtually unparalleled. In addition, his exceptionally extensive knowledge and understanding of 'hidden' intelligence operations, policies and dimensions, derived from many years of deep analysis and intelligence community contacts, enables him to elaborate and explain financial, geopolitical and intelligence issues which 'mainstream' analysts may not understand, or even recognise to be issues requiring investigation.

In 1972, World Reports Limited augmented this service with London Currency Report, a global gold, currency and economic information system together with a filing binder. Nothing psychological about it my friend. You have been the number one promoter of Story's CounterIntelligence diversions on the internet in recent years. Even though you dropped the occasional piece of criticism of Story within your reposts of his never ending fantasist ramblings, that amounts to little more than a getout clause when backed into the corner over your lengthy regurgitation of this laughable transparent PsyOp material.

As for being mad about anything, it is unlikely to be about my being "busted" for having "Jewish Talmud apologetics"! Laughable nonsense worthy of Story himself. I have never defended the Talmud. As I pointed out to you at the time: I have never read it. Those quotes attributed as being translations of it, if accurate would make it one of my most despised texts in existence.

If I remember the gist of our sparring in the thread that you refer too (why not give the URL to it & let others decide? Maybe that would reveal that your charge of "Jewish Talmud apologist" is a stretch of the imagination to put it mildly. I also recall being quite diplomatic & suggesting that you had made some interesting points. Not much of a sign of being in some kind of prolonged rage that has supposedly lasted till now.

As for "correcting me" about what Story was trying to convey, you've done nothing of the sort. What had Story tried to convey? Decades worth of diversion from Rome - Plain & simple! Did Story ever expose the way that the Jesuits & the Papacy use their Frankist Sabbateans & Labor Zionists? Their Romish Rabbis? Did he even expose Shimon Peres' likely British intelligence (specifically MI6) status as indicated via his knighthood into the Order of St Michael & St George that virtually every MI6 head has been a high-level member of, not too mention most of the heads of GCHQ & at least half of the MI5 chiefs? Not likely: Even more reason to believe that he (Story) was working for British Intelligence himself. Perhaps he should have checked out the following resource:

http://realityresearch.wordpress.com/categ...court-zionists/

I guess that "Quantity, not Quality" was Story's motto though.

By the way: the Grand Master of the Order of St Michael & St George is headed by the Duke of Kent - that's right the one & the same individual as the Grand Master of the United Grand Lodge of England (not Prince Philip, the Queen's husband) & thus the world head of "regular" Freemasonry. Notably he is also the head of the Royal Arch. Now do a search on "Royal Arch Freemasonry MI5 MI6" together & see what you find! Add the name Putin to those search terms & you will find some even more thought provoking material that Story would never us the likes of. Far more interesting than his useless, endless meanderings.

Coleman & Story could easily take opposing stances on key points yet still be on the same team. Both smack of British Intelligence diversion operations. Coleman has at least admitted to being "former" MI6. "Former" - aha…

Ever read his book THE NEW UNDERWORLD ORDER? The whole sixth chapter is an attack on the Vatican. Granted he doesn't put them at the top of the pyramid like Phelps does, but he busts them for their Illuminist activities, their pedophilia, their connects to Opus Dei, knights of malta and even Scientology. Once again, you know very little about this man and his work. So you shouldn't speak on his body of work if you don't know much about it outside of his website.

He didn't make a connection between the Jesuits he attacked in the sixth chapter and the sabbatean Jews he attacked in the seventh chapter. Unfortunately. He had his shortcomings. In fact I have PM'd craig oxley many times with my analysis of his book. If you want to see them, ask him for them incase he still has them.

Story did expose MI-6 in terms of their drug running and their role in Afghanistan poppies in his book and also in some newsletters which I possess. But it was in the third chapter which was about ALL MAJOR INTELLIGENCE AGENCIES running drugs and thus being self funding and being a government within a government. He did also make note of the Illuminati symbols in MI-5's logo in the first chapter too. If you really studied his work and read it like I have, you would note that MI-6 has in fact not been very happy with Story. Read his report on securitisation. You'll find it in the Story archive

Craig has up here. It's called SECURITISATION IS 100% ILLEGAL UNDER U.S. LEGISLATION and it dates from march 10th.

Well Story does write a lot. But he also publishes a lot from others that he gets their permission to print. Such as book excerpts. Not every words in his journals is his. Hell in one of his economic intelligence review issues, he says that the analysis about the illegality of securitisation was based largely on the work of some US lawyer whose name and location he gave.

Plus I think it's wrong to say Icke writes a lot all the time. If you have read his books like me, you would see a lot of it is in fact recycled and reused. That's the key to Icke's operation. He simply copies himself all the time. As for his devotion to the Queen, I don't have to do this dance again, because I have already said how mistaken he was about it.

I was wondering why Fulford would promote Story's death as a murder after Story attacked him last year. Maybe Fulford doesn't care. But we don't need Fulford to reasonably assume Story was murdered. Story knew his life was attempted on recently and he wrote about it just before he died. Also, he was poisoned in 2005 while in America. He lived. I think he was poisoned in America earlier this year when he last visited. That's how I think he was taken down. The real operatives are people claiming he was shot in the street or that Dick Cheney was a good man. Story was right not to deal with the latter who said that ridiculous thing about Cheney.

Have I ever mentioned serials? No.

What am I talking about regarding obfuscation? OK, let's look at those quotes & highlight it & get this over with:

Honestly, one can mince words & be pedantic till the cows come home, but if you don't find the above sentences to be chronologically confusing then I would suggest that you have a rather obscure take on basic communication.

Using the above examples I stated that Story was an "obfuscator." Repeatedly referred to by yourself as my declaring these statements to be "contradictory". Close, but not quite what I was saying.

Dictionary time:

"render obscure, unclear, or unintelligible: [e.g. "the spelling changes will deform some familiar words and obfuscate their etymological origins."]
• bewilder (someone) : [e.g. "it is more likely to obfuscate people than enlighten them."]

Hopefully this analysis of my statement is enlightening and not obfuscating.

I don't find it confusing because I have read more of Story's work than you and so I can explain away any apparent contradiction you think you may see. Any chronological confusion. Look at how many times he mentions he started in 1963.

It's easy. He starts world reports in 1963 and deals only in private financial and current affairs. Then starting in 1969 he gets into intelligence publishing.

Right. So that was using these 1963 search date.

OK. So let's look at the 1969 date too then & compare:

"christopher story" "publishing" "since 1969"

"Look at how many times he mentions he started in 1969."!

Subject: murder of Christopher Story....moving forward
Received by email from GORDON DUFF

All,

As we have gone a day without any odd emails, I will put out the list.

Michael [former CIA agent] wrote the following on the death:

Very sad news about the murder of Christopher Story on the 14th. I first heard he had been murdered late yesterday, from a source close to the CIA, and his death has been confirmed today in a brief message on the World Reports website. Mode of assassination was poison. I had heard of an attempt to poison Christopher in late June, but I was under the impression it had failed (we weren't that close and he didn't confide in me).

I assume the delay in making the announcement was to try and head off calls for a serious autopsy and an inquest. Sadly a toxic combination of callous coroners and pathetic pathologists makes this country a happy hunting ground for DVD/GO2 (ie German) death squads, as the hopelessly inadequate investigation into Raoul Moat's murder by the police makes clear (by the way I gather he was shot by a handgun, a Glock 9 mm, and his body moved to the scene in an ambulance driven by a police officer, and the 'shouting ' was staged for the benefit of Sky News, who have not been told the poor man was murdered, although they will be).

It is reasonable to assume Christopher Story was onto something new, unless the assassination was revenge for his courageous 2005 exposure of Sir Edward Heath and Roy Jenkins as German spies, or to stop his further reporting on MTN trading or the stolen funds being used to support the euro.

There ought to be an inquest, feeble remedy though that is, and a second pathologist's report, assuming the poor man has not been cremated during the 16 days in which his death was kept quiet. There has yet to be an obituary, sadly.

There won't be a serious police inquiry into his death, unless it is handed over to another force (TVP Special Branch is penetrated by GO2, hence their participation in the Kelly assassination, several officers reported to be involved in the murder of David Kelly, albeit only as accessories, were reportedly involved in the Special Branch monitoring of Christopher, presumably with a view to gathering intelligence to pass over to the German death squad). Clearly TVP are conflicted out, indeed it may be necessary to charge several TVP Special Branch officers as accessories.

There must be a memorial service, does any one know if any one is organising one? Christopher was a great patriot and will be sadly missed.

The grisly work of the German GO2 death squads in Britain must be stopped. At this rate we shall end up like El Salvador in the 80s.

CIA were clearly in a bit of a flap yesterday and no wonder. An assassination as high profile as Christopher's, which was an Act of War by Germany against Her Majesty, justifying general hostilities, must have been approved at a senior level by the German Government. German (ie Biderberg/ Trilateral) penetration of the Coalition Government and the Cabinet Office rules out a formal response - as far as the government are concerned British life has no apparent value and hostile states, or piorates, or terrorists, know they can murder our fellow subjects at will.

Intelligence are another matter altogether and whilst it is entirely a matter for them they may follow the effective Israeli tactic of targeted killings, using retired members of the Special Forces. Clearly the assassination of some one as important as Christopher Story FRSA would normally call for the counter assassination of several key figures in say the Federal German Government, the EU or the DVD. Naturally as a lawyer I cannot be involved in decisions of that sort, but I would not be surprised if a warrant were now to be issued for the execution of the DVD Director, assuming NSA and GCHQ verify an audit trail to him of the assassination tasking. His first name by the way is Georg, but I cannot say any more than that at this stage. The directing staff at GCHQ mostly report to Germany but as is well-known British Intelligence has successfully penetrated GCHQ and there are ways and means of getting memory sticks out of the building.

Georg is known to have dual nationality and there is reliable reporting that he has on occasion used a US passport, apparently a valid one (ie unlike 'President' Obama's), therefore there are diplomatic considerations, to which Intelligence will no doubt give careful weight.

After this disgraceful murder it would be reasonable to expect an escalation of the Intelligence War between Britain and Germany. British Intelligence can pack a punch, as I suspect a bunch of Pakistanis hoping for a smooth landing may have found out to their cost yesterday, when their Airbus made a less than smooth landing on the approach to Islamabad.

For Eurosceptics an escalation of the Intelligence War to targeted killings of German high value assets may have some interest, as several EU Commissioners are known to be close to the German DVD. If our chaps were to bag a couple of commissioners (of course as a barrster one could not approve), it being a matter for them, Anglo-European relations would undoubtedly be affected, although I suspect in a positive way.

If you know any one who used to be in the SAS do not be too surprised if they suddenly book a European holdiay.

May Christopher Story rest in peace, God Bless him.

We have had some issues as to direction. The issues are seen as Gaza, 9/11, Af-pak, Israel, Iran...and I suggest several others can be added.

There is an underlying nexus behind these and other issues, including and especially the financial incentives begun in the derivatives market, oil, narcotics and the massive corruption in Afghanistan and Iraq. Much of this money will funnel back into the US political system for the midterm elections further turning the US into a danger to itself and others.

Everyone on this email knows the score. This is not the public. For some time, Veterans Today along with Debbie, has been coordinating research and journalistic efforts, if you excuse the term. We have been making sure the right stories hit and that, when something does hit, a version gets out there that contains the truth for those "who can handle the truth."

Some of us here are ex-military. Many of us have had special operations commands. That we come from different cultures and backgrounds is our strength.

This is my list only. It is going to have to grow to something much larger.

We need a couple of capabilities:

"Round Robin" we need to be able to get hard intel to everyone involved as quickly as possible. Intel is useless if we don't put it to play in a timely manner. Too often some of us are forced to sit on things that could be useful. As we have operational troops from the US, Afghanistan, Pakistan and "other" organizations at risk, opsec will always be a consideration. Mutual Protection. If you don't know how many journalists have had accidents, I am sure we can compile a list. It will be much longer than any of us guess. Sources Between us, we have sources into every intelligence agency and military command in the world. We aren't spies (not anymore, anyway). But we can raise the standards of journalism, producing timely and quality work that will capture the attention of the public. (and put all of us at risk in doing so) There is room for all of our individual issues, our "personal projects." There will be a common enemy, that part will become clear. When Shrimpton wrote about Story, he lacked some of the background on the relationship between Merkel and her handlers in Moscow and, eventually, Tel Aviv. Story always understood debt and entropy. Much was missed also.
If we are to succeed, and I believe we have no choice, we must build our lists, a single blind list while many of us control private distribution.

As this sounds a bit like an organization, something all of us shun, I cringe writing it. Anyone opting out, let me know and we will do this immediately.

The world no longer has a reliable news service of any kind. Reuters, AP, UPI and the MSM are useless.

"Look at how many times he mentions he started in 1969."!

See that logic works both ways.

You have an incomplete, imprecise thought there. You didn't finish. Started what in 1969? World reports and private financial affairs news? Or his intelligence publishing? The answer resides in my previous posts in this topic.

Great laughs. Many thanks Antisionist! You write: "You have an incomplete, imprecise thought there. You didn't finish." So what do you call that second sentence of yours? Finished? I'm not even sure that it was started! With your devious, deceptive method of argument it is clear that you're highly skilled in jesuitical diversionary rhetorical methodology. Hopefully for you your talents aren't being wasted.

Let's reread the relevant portion of my post again:

Right. So that was using these 1963 search date.

OK. So let's look at the 1969 date too then & compare:

"christopher story" "publishing" "since 1969"

http://www.google.ca/search?hl=en&q=%22chr...l=&oq=&gs_rfai=

"Look at how many times he mentions he started in 1969."!

See that logic works both ways.

So in fact we see that rather than my statement "See that logic works both ways" is a completion of an illustration, not a case of my having "an incomplete, imprecise thought there. You didn't finish." as you put it in some kind of attempt at Vulcan-like Spock speech. What kind of English is that anyway? It's not even good Vulcan - at least that would be logical - & precise! Talk about projection.

You ask "Started what in 1969?", clearly oblivious to the fact that my illustration of using your methodology was echoing your urging myself & any other readers to "Look at how many times he mentions he started in 1963." You yourself don't state what Story started in 1963 in that sentence of yours, which I was illustrating as being a false argument that could be easily substituted with "Look at how many times he mentions he started in 1963" accompanied by a similar search link to yours, but substituting 1963 with 1969.

However: Let's examine your search terms & mine as used in the above two links:

Yours: "christopher story" "Publisher since 1963"

Mine: "christopher story" "publishing" "since 1969"

So again, more devious jesuitical deception on your part. Clearly I was referring to when he started publishing. Trying to catch me out? Nice try.

Can someone other than antisionist and soulinspiration explain to me what exactly it is they are fighting over, and also why that would be important enough to make accusations of being a Jesuit agent?

soulinspiration - August 4, 2010 05:27 PM (GMT)

Halvor

Although you did request for someone other than myself or Antisionist to explain what we are sparring over, I am glad that you asked & feel that it may be of interest for some for me to respond here.

I had ended up wondering myself. But that is the hallmark of jesuitical rhetoric & debate: To get one's opponent arguing about matters that are ultimately tangential & of little consequence to the bigger picture.

Hence my statement:

>
> With your devious, deceptive method of argument it is clear that you're highly skilled in jesuitical diversionary rhetorical methodology

Why not leave it one may ask (as indeed Antisionist did)?

> QUOTE

Because this is simply an untenable option when one is accused of being ignorant, incomplete, imprecise, ignoring context, & being thick headed - & even more so when the "evidence" for this is based on misrepresentation, contrivance, avoidance, projection, selectivity, straw man tactics, prevarication, equivocation & false evidence. All of which I consider - especially when taken in combination - to be devious jesuitical deceptive methods.

I have talked about both years, not just 1963. What the hell are you trying to pull? Furthermore, that rough quotation of me that you have, is incomplete (again). You don't specify what he was publishing.

At least I care enough to provide details.

Now I'm a jesuit coajutor, because you can't figure out where my 'complete' thoughts were ealier that explained everything about the 1963 versus 1969 issue? Such as my posts dated

Again, STARTED WHAT? My question was rhetorical because I wanted to see how much you had been paying attention? Your claim that Story is deliberately confusing people because he allegedly has two starting dates is untenable because Story started two different things on two different dates. Time for a refresh.

versus

See the difference?

Six years after he starts world reports, he changes the types of things he publishes. I have already stated this as far back as the middle of page two. Thus, my rhetorical question, 'started what' was intended to get you to go back and do some reading and try and recall what I had posted earlier so that your questions about this ALLEGED contradiction would be answered. What interests me is that after my explanations of the differences between what he did starting in 1963 and what he began starting in 1969, you were so desperate to save face, that you stripped so much away and used general, vague, language with the phrase "Look how many times he stated he started in 1969."

Again, STARTED WHAT? Publishing financial and current affairs (1963), or his intelligence serials (1969)? By ignoring this difference, combined with your use of a vague question, you could pretend Story has contradicted himself. Then to pathetically claim victory, you call me a master of jesuitical trickery on top of it. :lol:

> I had ended up wondering myself. But that is the hallmark of jesuitical rhetoric & debate: To get one's opponent arguing about matters that are ultimately tangential & of little consequence to the bigger picture.

First it was an important issue to clarify the issue about the two dates because it was a supposed attempt on Story's part to obfuscate. Now it's a tanget and irrelevant? Wonderful. You get to change your mind whenever you want. Accusing me of engaging in distraction? Hah. Says the man who plays language tricks and moves towards vague, general, imprecise terms because that's the only way he can keep the debate going by ignoring my answers to the reasons for the two dates of 1963 and 1969 and the differences between what was put out in those seperate times. I'm done with you. This time I mean it.

A couple of roosters, ruffling their feathers I suspect.

soulinspiration - August 5, 2010 08:25 PM (GMT)

Antisionist, you should calm down man, you'll blow a gasket! :D

Halvor, I suspect that Antisionist's non-stop pushing of this Christopher Story fiction may not an argument as such, but a last-gatepost type multiple diversion. I hope for his sake that I'm wrong about this & that he's merely deluded, however he's an incredibly intelligent & articulate (well normally that is - he seems to have some trouble with acuity in recent posts) individual & this is a real red flag to me, considering his promotion of such obvious non-stop cattle-crap.

Nevertheless, whether Antisionist's part in this diversion is witting or unwitting, the "assassination" phase of the Christopher Story diversion can be clearly seen to weaken the focus on the latest breakthroughs regarding the non-fictional David Kelly assassination (falsely called a suicide) case (a.k.a. "Operation Mason"):

http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...showtopic=36052

Antisionist has resorted to using the tactic that I suspected that he would - that is: repeating himself ad infinitum, recycling the last few pages of his posts on this thread. He is asking questions over & over again that have already been answered in the clearest communicational language possible. He has either completely lost it or has run out of other options.

I can hear him now typing out in caps lock:

"OPTIONS??!! WHAT OTHER OPTIONS????!!!!"

Oh deary me - great laughs! Pity though that all of this is distracting the attention of internet info-activists away from the David Kelly case & other real events.

Too bad that Antisionist has swayed Craig via his PM's & posts promoting Story. I think that Craig is smart enough that he will eventually see through this bunkum, just as he eventually did with David Icke, Michael Tsarion & Jordan Maxwell. Who knows where that will leave Antisionist. Pushing some new diversion I suspect, as he is fond of doing as demonstrated in the past with the likes of Greg "Stalin & Mao were both Rothschilds" Hallett for example.

Just remember who originally challenged the consensus opinion at this forum regarding Jordan Maxwell & Tony Alamo. I also warned Craig Oxley, Eric Phelps, Thomas Richards & others via email regarding these deceivers. Who supports either of these two now? To date I also believe that I have been the first person within our Rome-exposing research network to challenge the standard passive, uncritical acceptance of Fritz Springmeier's authenticity & work. In time I firmly believe that Story too will be seen for the master diversionist that I maintain he was.

Take it or leave it, that's my honest appraisal on this whole thing.

They are arguing about two dates: 1963 and 1969 and the significance of those dates in relation to what type of work Edward Harle aka Christopher Story was doing at these different times.

From the prophetic view point, what is interesting is that the German (Assyrian) dimension is being overlooked here in their argument. By this I mean in terms of the German (Assyrian) threat to Britain and The USA (Israel). We are heading for a repeat of 725 BC when the Northern Kingdom of Israel and many Judahites were taken into captivity.

On this German threat, Edward Harle, when he spoke at the BCG in London, was spot on.

soulinspiration - August 6, 2010 11:36 AM (GMT)

Ah, the old Germany = Assyria myth.

Newcomers to this notion can view the history of this propaganda here:

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Assyria_and_G...Anglo-Israelism

Unfortunately seductive for Protestants (due to some truth regarding Rome being spun into the mix) this is without doubt a masterpiece of Jesuit falsehood used to justify both of the World War One & World War Two genocides against Jews & Protestant Christians.

I can see why Story would have been an advocate of this devious fable.

Here is a copy of the last report Christopher made and was taken down either before his death or just after, but at any rate this report made be what got him killed. We have truly lost one of our own and and will always be remembered as a great man with incorruptible Journalistic Integrity the likes of who can only be compared to other greats such as Sherman Skolnick, William Cooper and Eustace Mullins. May they all rest in peace.

NEW INFORMATION:

BELOW:
CIA/MI6.OBAMA/BUSH SR./CHENEY ORDERED CHISTOPHER STORY'S ASSASSINATION AND ARE SUPRISED AND TERRIFIED THAT HE IS NOT DEAD

OBAMA AND BUSH ‘SPOKEN TO’ BY MEN WITH GUNS

• When ‘President’ Barack Hussein Obama touched down on the White House Lawn at 5:30pm on 9th July, he was ‘spoken to’. Enquiries by this service confirm that those doing the ‘speaking’ were not Secret Service operatives. On the contrary they were men with guns.

• Within the past 24-30 hours, private citizen George Godfather H. W. Bush Sr. has likewise been ‘spoken to’ twice. The people doing the ‘speaking’ were men with guns.

• The Chinese have had enough and are ready to take drastic lethal measures.

• Private citizens George H. W. Bush Sr. and Neil Bush think they are immortal and can take the loot they are blocking to the grave.

• Obama, who answers to the private citizen George H. W. Bush Sr., is saying he’s a ‘national citizen’. In order to be President of the United States, under the Constitution and the Soldiers and Sailors Act, you have to be a NATURAL citizen born in the United States or born in a US military family serving abroad.

CIA/CHENEY/MI6/OBAMA/BUSH SR. HAVE ATTEMPTED TO ASSASSINATE CHRISTOPHER STORY
A detailed report on this assassination attempt and the horrible illness inflicted on the Editor as a consequence will be published as soon as feasible.

•We now have proof that the CIA/MI6/Obama/Bush/Cheney issued an assassination order against this Editor. We have proof that they are suprised that the Editor is not dead.

For many years this website has carried a statement at the foot of the reports stating in crystal clear English that we will NOT enter into correspondence concerning the current and earlier reports posted on this website.

• We use simple, plain English so that people can understand what we say.

• We correspond with known and trusted correspondents only. Stray questions about of the blue on matters connected with the Settlements are not answered.

As you can see from the above, we have closed down all our communications because of interminable and intolerable harassment from the United States. We have also added a large number of parties to our ‘Black List’ so that their incessant emails bounce.

NEW REPORT STARTS HERE:

• KEY POINTS:

• The Lienholders exercised a foreclosure and management takeover on Friday 2nd and Saturday 3rd July 2010 of Deutsche Bank, Frankfurt, Germany and of Bank of America, Charlotte, NC. They took this action due to ongoing sabotage by the US official keptocracy.

• They immediately removed people in both banks working for the saboteurs and opponents of the necessary resolutions and cleared derivatives (toxic debt) off the balance sheets.

• This took Deutsche Bank out of the control of Bush Sr.'s agent [see earlier reports: Archive], Chancellor Angela Merkel, and the saboteurs in Germany.

• Likewise they took the CIA's compromised Bank of America out of the control of the corrupt bankers and CIA saboteurs in the United States.

• Her Majesty The Queen signed the necessary authorities for the Refunding Programme, the Loan Facility and other necessary papers during her visit to New York, as expected.

• As a result of the above the necessary funds were available for distribution on Tuesday 6th July 2010.

• As usual, George Bush Sr. interfered, as a consequence of which the Chinese parties had a 'talk' with the corrupt, demonic Godfather Bush Sr.

• By 7th July (Wednesday) a full meeting of Compliance Officers had taken place and the parties were again said to be prepared to initiate the transfers.

• Whereupon the corrupt Leon Panetta, Director of Central Intelligence (CIA), pathetically following 'instructions' issued by a private citizen named George H. W. Bush and issued to his poodle in the White House, the gutless Barack Hussein Obama, issued instructions to banking authorities the 'placate but do not pay' (accounting for the immediate lies summarised below), thus 'preventing' the feckless and terrified banking authorities from making any transfers.

• Bush Sr.'s poodle, Barack Hussein Obama, is too weak and lacking in backbone to grasp that Bush Sr.'s threats [see below] are BLUFF. He lacks the spine to stand up to this crook and face him down, which is the only way to deal with these possessed 'Black' US Nazi operatives, as we have amply demonstrated on this website

• On 7th July, the Chinese authorities then had another talk' with Bush Sr., as a consequence of which the payout procedures were put back in place on that date, to start up at 3:00pm EDT..

• Having thus lied as usual to the Chinese parties, private citizen Bush Sr. contacted Barack Hussein Obama and INSTRUCTED HIM not to allow the release of the funds.

• In that telephone call to the White House, Bush Sr. also threatened that if Obama authorised release of the funds, Bush Sr. would go to the Supreme Court and have Obama's Presidency terminated' [see earlier reports, notably the Biden comment on this score].

• As a consequence, the terrified and gutless Obama obeyed the private citizen George H. W. Bush and the agreed-upon payout of the Settlement funds has not taken place.

• Michael C. Cottrell, BA, M.S., was duly advised on Tuesday 6th July that the preliminary payment due to him would be satisfied on that date and that the Loan Facility would be in place on Thursday 8th July 2010.

• On Friday 9th July 'the word went out' that Mr Cottrell was not to be paid, the opposite of what had been categorically stated earlier.

• The payments agreed to and set out in the Basel List have not been affected as a direct consequence of this sabotage.

• Given the above, Gold Badges, US Law Enforcement, the corrupted US military under the former CIA Director Robert Gates, et al., are all in continuing dereliction of their duty in failing to arrest and lock up the Financial Terrorist George H. W. Bush Sr., either because they, like Joseph Biden, are all blackmailed and compromised, or because they fear that Mr Bush Sr.'s thuggists will murder them, and because they lack the intelligence to understand that Bush Sr.'s behaviour amounts to nothing more than the familiar childish, weak Psy-Ops BLUFF and bullying overfamiliar to students of the Mafiosi Godfathers, of which this criminal is the most ruthless and dangerous operative alive today.

• US law enforcement, Gold badges, feckless CIA operatives, cloth-eared, arrogant and corrupt US military cadres have accordingly dragged the reputation of the United States below sewer level in the eyes of all in the know at highest levels worldwide, with their gutless behaviour.

• Everyone who is anyone in positions of relevant importance worldwide is fully aware of this scandalous state of affairs, not least from this website, which has enormous clout 'where it matters'. They had better exercise their powers to put an end to what is undoubtedly the biggest financial terrorism and corruption crisis in world history.

Re: U.S. Dollar Refunding Project

Dear Honorable George Osborne:

I write to you once more in furtherance of matters raised in my prior correspondence of June 25, 2010; I understand that you have received instructions regarding my approach, and the various points raised in my earlier messages. Your assistance is most urgently required in addressing these matters, and the apparent disavowal of earlier agreements made and reaffirmed at previous G-8 meetings concerning the U.S. Dollar Refunding Project. I write on behalf of my clients Michael C. Cottrell, B.A., M.S., of Erie, Pennsylvania, USA, and his corporations: Pennsylvania Investments, Inc., registered in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and Cottrell Securities Limited, registered in England and Wales.

The events of the past week are difficult to understand, and impossible to tolerate. I am advised and understand that the Lienholders executed a foreclosure and management takeover Fri-Sat 2-3 July of Deutsche Bank in Frankfurt, Germany, and of Bank of America in Charlotte, NC.

They "cleaned out" both banks of people working for the opponents and cleared toxic debt [including derivatives] off the bank balance sheets. Accordingly, they took DB out of the control of Angela Merkel and opponents in Germany, and they took BOA out of all possible control by the opponents in this country. As a result of these actions, it was expected that the World Global Settlement funds could be distributed this week.

These funds were available for distribution on Tuesday, July 6. Because George Bush

Sr. was initiating interference, the Chinese authorities then had a “talk” with Bush Sr. By Wednesday afternoon a full Compliance Officer meeting had been conducted, and the appropriate parties were again prepared to initiate the transfers when Mr. Leon Panetta, pursuant to instructions from President Obama and George Bush Sr. issued instructions to the banking authorities to “placate but do not pay”; this prevented the authorities from making any such transfers. I am advised that the Chinese authorities then had another “talk” with Bush Sr., and all was ready again on today, July 7, and set to commence @ 3:00 PM EDT.

At approximately 3:00 PM EDT, I am told by several sources, George Bush Sr. apparently contacted President Obama and instructed him not to allow release of the funds. Bush Sr. then advised the President that if the funds were released, Bush would “go to the Supreme Court and have Obama’s Presidency terminated”. In accord with these instructions, the payout of the World Global Settlement funds has not proceeded.

THE PAYMENTS PREVIOUSLY AGREED TO AND SET FORTH ON THE BASEL LIST HAVE NOT BEEN MADE AS A DIRECT RESULT OF THESE CONTINUED DELAYS. Direct intervention through your good offices on behalf of the Royal Monarchal Power, is absolutely required to bring this matter to conclusion. To secure release of these Settlement funds, it is imperative that your power as one of the U.S. Treasury Lienholders, be exercised with such force as may be required to effect completion.

I respectfully plead that you utilize the inherent Royal Monarchal Power at the earliest possible moment to ensure completion of this funding. Thank you in advance for your assistance; please contact me directly if I can provide any additional information or help.

Sincerely,

HODGES AND ASSOCIATES
A. CLIFTON HODGES

NON-U.S. INTERNET SECURITY SOLUTION CD AVAILABLE: FAR BETTER THAN NORTON ETC
It has now been established that the National Security Agency (NSA) works with/ controls Microsoft, Norton, McAfee, and others, in pursuit of the Pentagon's vast BIG BROTHER objective, directed from the 'highest' levels (not the levels usually referred to) which seek to have every computer in the world talk direct to the Pentagon or to NSA's master computers.

This should come as no real surprise since the cynical spooks even assert this 'in-your-face' by advertising 'INTEL INSIDE', which says exactly what it means. More specifically, NSA have made great strides in this direction by having a back door built into Microsoft VISTA. Certain computers, especially those labelled with the logo of the 'fully collaborating' firm Hewlett Packard, have hard-core setups which facilitate the remote monitoring and controlling of personal computers by NSA, Fort Meade. We now understand that if you are using VISTA* you MUST NOT enable 'file and printer sharing' under any circumstances. If you say 'YES', so to speak, to 'file and printer sharing', your computer becomes a slave at once to NSA's master computers. DO NOT ENABLE SHARING.

Unfortunately, this abomination is so far advanced that this may not be the only precaution that needs to be taken. As long as Microsoft continues its extensive cooperation with NSA and the NSC (National Security Council), the spying system which assists the criminalised structures, and thus hitherto the Bush-Clinton 'Box Gang' and its connections, with their fraudulent finance operations, NSA may be able to steal data from your computer. The colossal scourge of data theft is associated with this state of affairs: data stolen usually include Credit Card data, which the kleptocracy regards as almost as good as real estate for hypothecation purposes. Even so, you can make life very much more problematical for these utterly odious people by NOT USING U.S.-sourced so-called Internet Security and anti-virus software. Having been attacked and abused so often, we offer a solution.

We use a proprietary FOREIGN Internet Security program which devours every PC Trojan, worm, scam, porn attack and virus that the National Security Agency (NSA) throws at us. We are offering this program (CD) to our clients and friends, at a premium. The program comes with our very strong recommendation, but at the same time, if you buy from us, you will be helping us finance ongoing exposures of the DVD's World Revolution and the financial corruption that has been financing it.

The familiar US proprietary Internet Security programs are by-products of US counterintelligence, and are intended NOT to solve your Internet security problems, but to spy on you and to report what you write about, to centralised US electronic facilities set up for the purpose. You can now BREAK FREE from this syndrome while at the same time helping us to MAINTAIN THE VERY HEAVY PRESSURE UPON THE CRIMINALISTS WE HAVE BEEN EXPOSING, by ordering this highest quality FOREIGN (i.e., non-US) INTERNET SECURITY SOLUTION that we have started advertising on this website. This offer has been developed in response to attacks we have suffered from the NSA nerds who appear to have a collective mental age of about five years, judging by their output.

• To access details about the INTERNET SECURITY SOLUTION, just press THE LIVE LINK YOU HAVE JUST READ, or else press SERIALS in the red panel below. This opens up our mini-catalogue of printed intelligence publications. Scroll right down to the foot of that section, where you will see details of this service. When you buy this special product, you will also, as we clearly state above, be paying a special premium by way of a donation to help us finance these exposures.

The premium contains a donation for our exposure work and also covers our recommendation based on the Editor's own experience that this INTERNET SECURITY SOLUTION will make your Internet life much easier. The program has an invaluable 'Preview before downloading' feature.

• It is suitable for PC's but not for Mac computers. As with all such programs, the License is renewable at a modest annual fee. This is done on-line in the usual way [direct with supplier].

Title: One year since Christopher Story died
Description: A eulogy from Ashley Mote in 2010

AntiSionist - July 15, 2011 07:40 AM (GMT)

Tribute to Christopher Story
August 1, 2010 | Comments Off
Only a day or so ago I finally heard that my distinguished friend Christopher Story died on 14th July 2010 (Bastille Day – the symbolism of which would not have been lost on him). He apparently suffered liver failure.

He had been complaining of not feeling well for some months, had recently skipped a trip to the USA and had lost a good deal of weight since Christmas. It is entirely possible his death was from natural causes.

The world is a much poorer place for his passing. I mourn his loss as I would mourn the loss of a brother. He was the staunchest champion of all that was honest and upright in life, a courageous investigative journalist, an indefatigable writer, an audacious publisher, and a powerful intellect.

I have lost a true friend whose company and integrity I valued beyond words. His loss is truly devastating.

Over the last decade or so, ever since I became actively involved in European politics, I have met and had dealings with an extraordinary number of extraordinary people. To be frank, some I loathed.

But the company of many others was hugely stimulating, greatly valued, and much enjoyed. Christopher Story was right at the top of that list.

I first met Christopher at a Bruges Group meeting in the days when they were held on the top floor of a cramped London pub. We immediately sensed a mutual liking for each other and met regular from that time on. We had been due to meet for lunch a few days hence.

Far more important than our meetings, however, was the rapid development of our continuous exchange of information by emails, telephone and snail mail – which we quickly found to be by far the safest means of communication. Both of us knew our lines were tapped. Sometimes we deliberately traded information just to let whoever was listening know what we knew! Or to mislead…!

Christopher Story had the energy of a man half his age. He regularly wrote more words in a day than I might write in a week or more. His range of knowledge and experience of the global financial markets and – much more importantly – the power broking that went on behind it, was utterly breathtaking at times. His regular newsletters – International Currency Review, Economic Intelligence Review, Global Analyst, Soviet Analyst, Arab-Asian Affairs, Eastern Europe Analyst, World Reports, and several other occasional titles – to say nothing of his many books based of these newsletters, might have been the work of ten men.

But Christopher researched, wrote, designed, printed and distributed every one of them himself, with the aid of a handful of others whom he knew could be trusted. He was a one-man, self-appointed, self-financing, international investigation agency which specialised in researching the deployment and accountability of public money, the manipulation of currencies, and power laundering by the world's ruling elites.

This work took him into some of the most dangerous places on earth – not just geographically, but intellectually as well. As a result he made many powerful enemies. They all knew that when he found a racketeering spade, whoever it was, he would call him a bloody shovel, and publish that news to the whole world – or at least to those willing to listen. For most of the world's media, his conclusions and commentaries were far too hot for them to handle – hence the self-publication.

Much of Christopher's best investigative work was done in the USA, where he had highly valued internal sources of information within the Federal Reserve Bank, the CIA, and within the financial and political communities as a whole. At times, he became personally and dangerously embroiled in some of the financial trails he was following, on occasion at his consideration personal risk. He was a truly brave man.

The common thread running through all Christopher Story did could be encapsulated in a single phrase – the misuse of power! Indeed it was he who sparked one of my own more memorable epithets – 'those attracted to power are the least suitable to wield it'.

One of my earliest meetings with Christopher was in Oxford, near his home, when he took the greatest pleasure in showing me around his old college. He was immensely proud of having graduated at Oxford University, and rightly so. It had instilled or reinforced that innate and shining honesty that distinguished all he did.

In later years we more usually met in Brussels, when he came to visit the European Parliament for a day or two. Often these trips were carefully timed to coincide with meetings of the Budget Control Committee, on which I had a seat, and when I planned to raise issues briefed by him beforehand. Sometimes he admitted later to having the greatest difficulty sitting at the back, in the public gallery, trying hard to suppress his urge to intervene.

Perhaps the best and by far the most famous question I ever raised in the European Parliament was based entirely on a briefing by Christopher Story. It concerned the Global Security Fund. Like all speeches in a plenary session it was recorded on videotape and can now be found on literally scores of websites around the world. Even today, almost five years later, new postings of that one-minute speech are regularly uncovered by the Google search-engine.

This was what I said :

“Mr President, I wish to draw your attention to the Global Security Fund, set up in the early 1990s under the auspices of Jacob Rothschild. This is a Brussels-based fund and it is no ordinary fund: it does not trade, it is not listed and it has a totally different purpose. It is being used for geopolitical engineering purposes, apparently under the guidance of the intelligence services. I have previously asked about the alleged involvement of the European Union’s own intelligence resources in the management of slush funds in offshore accounts, and I still await a reply. To that question I now add another: what are the European Union’s connections to the Global Security Fund and what relationship does it have with European Union institutions?”

At the time, with the House almost empty as usual, I got no reply. Later I asked a near-identical written question, the answer to which understandably told us precisely nothing. After all, how could Brussels’ elite bureaucrats admit that they had a hand in a gigantic illegal trust fund? It was estimated by undercover overseas financial investigators at 65 trillion dollars, we knew it had been set-up for ‘Illuminati rainy days’ and when needed in a crunch situation for bribery, state-inspired black operations and activities to divert attention from the world’s banking and political mafia.

Christopher’s original briefing also told me that, “while the fund is cloaked in secrecy” it was made possible by the US Federal Reserve banking system. However I decided, in the context of the EU, not to follow up that potential second line of attack.

No wonder there is still so much interest in that original question. It was possibly the first occasion anyone had mentioned the existence of the Global Security Fund in any public arena, anywhere.

It would be an entirely appropriate and well-deserved tribute to Christopher Story’s life’s work if, one day, the truth finally emerges about the Global Security Fund and those responsible for the monumental misuse of public funds are finally exposed and brought to book.

Meanwhile, I shall continue to mourn the loss of a true friend, and there is no greater tribute I can pay Christopher Story than describing him thus.

(PS: Two requests and a question:

If anyone knows how to communicate this tribute to any of Christopher Story's family, I would be most grateful. I have been unable to make contact since the news of his passing broke.

Also, I would also be glad to know about any memorial service planned in his honour.

Question : What, if anything, is to be done Christopher's massive and priceless collection of private papers? Whilst this is understandably not the right time to focus on the question, I feel I must at least raise it in the wider public interest.)

http://z13.invisionfree.com/THE_UNHIVED_MI...opic=24825&st=0

Read those through and see what kind of a mess we had. We had Christopher Story promoting the Leo Wanta thing even long after Greg Szymanski brought up the Vatican and put it to the Wanta gang who simply sidestepped it. We then had Greg report that Christopher Story claim the Vatican wanted to help repatriate lost Wanta funds but were blocked by Cheney and that also the Queen of England was on the side of the good guys.

Now a couple years later as you can see in this thread starting on page two http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...opic=4814&st=15 and continuing on to page three http://z10.invisionfree.com/The_Unhived_Mi...opic=4814&st=30
Christopher Story has done a 180 on the Leo wanta issue and no longer considers Wanta to be authentic. He and Heneghan are now accusing each other of being agents. Heneghan says Wanta is real. Story now says no.

I still can't get over Christopher Story making the Queen of England and the Vatican look good back in 2007. You guys make up your minds. Especially in light of what he has written in his book NEW UNDERWORLD ORDER. Makow talks about Story's NUO book here.

and
http://www.savethemales.ca/002030.html

Story also has another book out.
Red Cocaine: The Drugging of America and the West (Paperback)
by Joseph D. Douglass (Author), Christopher Story (Author), Ray S. Cline (Author)

I'll comment on this later. Suffice to say that Story loves to blame the Communists, the Russians, and makes it like the KGB has infiltated all intelligence communities, including the American and British. Hell, that's how it was stated in this video. Story never disagreed.

In his book THE NEW UNDERWORLD ORDER, he gets into the black nobility and talks about a few key bloodlines including the Orsinis. He takes the view that the Jews intermarried into black nobilities and took them over. When I track down that passage someone gave to me, I will put it up here.

AntiSionist - October 12, 2009 01:46 AM (GMT)

Keep in mind Christopher Story once said that Alan Greenspan was arrested. On the old board I showed that didn't seem to be the case and I provided this link to show how others thought very little of it
http://forums.randi.org/showthread.php?t=85697

He also reported that Henry Paulson was once arrested in Germany.
http://educate-yourself.org/cn/paulsonarre...ny30dec06.shtml

And that he was also shot in the chest.
http://www.worldreports.org/news/109_henry...t_in_the_chest_

We went over this on the old unhived mind board and for Story to be correct, the current Paulson we see would have to be a doppleganger. If I recall correctly, Oxley wasn't buying the story. Edit: Yep, I was correct.

Here is what I think. I think Story who was pro Queen and pro Vatican has been keeping an eye on what the real truthsayers are saying on the net, and now he is somehow trying to incorporate that into his work - which may explain his turnaround on Wanta. Reminds me of Heneghan saying Phelps was a fraud in 2007, and then in his 2008 return to the cloakanddagger (which was brief), he basically said that the jesuits rule the monarchs of Europe. Saying what others have said after you slagged them off for saying it just to keep your own head above water and retain some level of credibility.

AntiSionist - October 12, 2009 03:04 AM (GMT)

As promised, an exceprt from Story's book THE NEW UNDERWORLD ORDER.

The principal 'Black Nobility' families, with extensive Jewish content, as most of their names reveal - due to the pre-eminence of Jewish (Khazar) bankers and monopoly merchants among those who consolidated power in city states and principalities all over Europe during the Middle Ages - are listed as: The House of Windsor (Guelph), Britain; The Belgian House of Wettin; The Swedish House of Bernadotte; The House of Liechtenstein; The House of Oldenberg, Denmark; The House of Hohenzollern, Germany; The House of Hanover, Germany (second in importance to the House of Guelph (Windsor); The House of Bourbon, France; The House of Orange, Netherlands (William of Orange was originally the Jew William Stradholder who was first elevated to the rank of Captain-General of the Dutch Forces); The House of Grimaldi, Monaco; The House of Wittelsbach, Germany; The House of Braganza, Portugal; The House of Nassau, Luxembourg; The Austrian House of Hapsburg; The House of Savoy, Italy; The House of Karadjordevic, Yugoslavia; The House of Wurttemberg, Germany; and The House of Zogu, Albania. All the listed families are connected with the House of Guelph, one of the original Venetian 'Black Nobility' families.

The Guelphs are so intertwined with the House of Hanover that the various connections would take pages to elaborate. Almost all European royal houses originate from the House of Hanover and accordingly from the Guelphs, fountainhead of the 'Black Nobility'. Without reviewing the issue of rights to rule that 'Black Nobility' families continue to claim, the key point for our purposes here is that these people refuse to recognise any government other than what they historically consider to be their own 'divine right' to rule (handed down in the secular realm in parallel with the apostolic succession in the spiritual realm).

Therefore, they are said to consider that the United States continues to belong to Great Britain, for instance. Every European royal and so-called noble dynasty, past and present, has a representative on the 'Committee of 300' which, according to Dr John Coleman, was established in the 18th century, although its present form was assumed in 1897. Dr Coleman was unable to bring forward documentary proof of this Committee's existence, perhaps because of fear of assassination. But writing in a publication printed in Vienna (24th December 1921), the Jewish financial adviser to the Rothschilds and Socialist politician, Dr Walter Rathenau, stated that 'only 300 men, each of whom knows all the others, govern the fate of Europe. They select their successors from their own entourage. These men have the means in their hands of putting an end to [any] form of State which they find unreasonable'. Exactly six months later, Rathenau was assassinated.

Among the old-line 'ruling families' which are not actually 'royal' at all but which consider that their Jewish ('Khazar') or Frankist lineage entitles them to ex officio or, at some stage, co- opted membership of the globalist ruling elite, with some still claiming descent from ancient and 'Holy' Roman Emperors, are the following dynasties: Rothschild, Kuhn, Loeb, Lehman, Rockefeller, Sachs, Warburg, Bush, Lazard, Sieff, Goldman, Schiff, Morgan, Schroeder, Harriman, and Du Pont (who actually consider themselves to be descended from Pontius Pilate). Other such families and patriarchs include the Giustiniani family, 'Black Nobility' of Rome and Venice who trace their lineage to the Emperor Justinian; the Hambro banking family; Pierpaolo Luzzatti Fequiz, with lineage dating back six centuries to the ancient Luzzattos, 'Black Nobility' of Venice; Umberto Ortolani, also from an ancient 'Black Nobility' family; the Doria family, financiers of the Spanish Hapsburgs; the French Rothschilds; the late Baron August von Finck; Franco Orsini Bonacassi, of the ancient Orsini 'Black Nobility' that traces its lineage to an ancient Roman senator; the Agnellis; the Alba family; and Baron Pierre Lambert, cousin of the Belgian Rothschilds. Among these, there is not a single family that is not of Jewish/Khazar descent.

pages 477-479.

AntiSionist - October 12, 2009 03:35 AM (GMT)

P.S.

I think the Guelphs had to intermarry with one of those papal bloodlines to get anywhere. Was it the Aldobrandini family like the Rothschilds? Or was it the Orsini family?

These people have finally been more or less completely stopped in their tracks as a consequence of these exposures. Your assistance will be sincerely appreciated and will make a real difference, hastening the OVERDUE resolution of the worst financial corruption and linked financial fallout in world history. IMPLICATIONS OF THE 'INTERNATIONAL COLLEGES OF SUPERVISORS'
In the preceding report we noted that one of the most embarrassing and painful new realities for the big geocriminal financial enterprises has been the insistence, first publicised via the Group of Seven's formal statement at the IMF/World Bank Spring Meetings in April 2008, that 'international supervisory colleges' must be attached to these institutions, as a means of ensuring that they do not revert to their old corrupt financial bad habits.

As we also pointed out, the report that the Editor wrote overnight on 10th/11th October in the IMF Press Room was subsequently terminated by the NSA/NSC/CIA 'mental defectives' just at the point where the Editor noted that this demand for supervision stemmed from Michael C. Cottrell's call for an 'oversight panel' to govern transactions under what was still then (in the first quarter of 2007) referred to here by this Editor's term 'The Wanta Plan'.

As will be seen in International Currency Review, Michael Cottrell made it plain that as Treasurer of Wanta's corporation (prior to Mr Cottrell's welcome but irregular dismissal by Wanta), he wouldn't be prepared to handle a single cent of the funds unless such an oversight panel were installed.

He needed this panel not least for his own protection, given Wanta's approach to finance.

At this suggestion, Wanta flew into a rage and expostulated on the Editor's voicemail that 'if I need an 'oversight panel, I shall appoint an oversight panel' and that since it would be 'his' money, he would do what he liked with the funds without guidance from anyone else.

After Wanta 'fired' Michael Cottrell irregularly (Wanta was later informed that firing Cottrell was 'the stupidest thing you ever did'), the Editor in turn realised (admittedly very late on the uptake) that if Wanta couldn't be bothered to repay the Editor's $35,000 loan which fell due on 11th June 2007 plus interest, how could he possibly be trusted with the vast sums of money that he was claiming?

WHY WE CLOSED DOWN WANTAGATE: BRIEFLY EXPLAINED
THE EDITOR'S RESPONSE TO ANOTHER WEBSITE'S MISUNDERSTANDING

Check out how he ends this second report. Very strange.

QUOTE

No, I am not MI6 or MI anything. But I AM a loyal subject of Her Majesty, and proud of it. Her Majesty, who has served our country and the world impeccably throughout her very long reign, is the one remaining upholder of the Rule of Law left.

(This statement may trigger the usual knee-jerk, ignorant American Black propaganda against our Monarch. Those lies come from the same sewer that we are jointly exposing. The criminalists want the British Monarchy out of their way, as it is the one power still standing for the Rule of Law, as may soon become clear).

Christopher Story

Story and Heneghan accusing each other of being intelligence agents reminds me of Hufschmid and Jayhan or Hufschmid and Piper calling each other agents. :lol:

If you read that Oct 22 report, it's just a reposting of his previous WANTA A FINANCIAL TERRORIST WORKING FROM WITHIN report that comes with a disclaimer at the top.

I think it just may exist Christopher Story. I think you may be mistaken. I think it does exist but that Wanta is not the ambassador and is hiding behind real Australian patriots. Do you really think a mouthpiece on the Australian embassy in Ireland would know about some judicial misconduct that would lead to secession? If he did, do you honestly think he would acknowledge it?

> PURPOSE OF THE 'SNAKE HILL' OPERATION: TO STEAL MONEY
> This fake Principality of Snake Hill, which of course is not recognised by the Australian or by any other Government, is 'located' close to Mudgee, northwest of Sydney. Please stay with us, because we will demonstrate that, as usual, this is a 'corporate' operation that exists solely for the purpose of stealing and diverting money.
>
> One of the most disturbing dimensions of this deception is an imprecise indication of British Royal connections. These are tentative and spurious, but at the same time, the whole operation reeks of yet another scam perpetrated by US criminal intelligence, with possible rogue MI-6 input, against the British Monarchical Power, which is meticulous in its respect for the constitutional status and integrity of the established political sovereignty of all countries belonging to the Commonwealth, and especially of the great Dominions.
> C.I.A. TREATS AUSTRALIA AS ITS OWN FIEFDOM
> As previously mentioned, the criminalised US Intelligence Power (CIA) treats Australia as its own territory, figuring that the Australians are too besotted by 'sport' to know what has hit them. INCOMPETENT 'VIRTUAL REALITY' 'SNAKE HILL' WEBSITE
The website of the Principality of Snake Hill is both naïve in the extreme, and partially defunct. When you press some of the links – for instance, for the 'Central Bank of Snake Hill' – they don't work: for good reason. The Central Bank of Snake Hill doesn't exist other than as a virtual reality construct; and to the extent that it may represent that it does exist, no bank would ever deal with it.

Even though its purpose is to launder money, as it has no recognized status whatsoever. Indeed the 'Principality of Snake Hill' had slightly more substance a year ago, when a delegation of Bush Crime Family associates flew down to Australia drooling at this supposed opportunity to acquire tax-free status and property, than it has today, suggesting that this operation may have been closed down, or redirected, even though Wanta continues to 'maintain' it's still functioning.

The naïve 'Snake Hill' website, which boasts a flag (sky blue on a navy blue Scandinavian cross on a white background), a motto {'Finis Coronat Opus' – 'To complete the work of the Crown' in Latin), and a fraudulent do-it-yourself coat of arms which is not recognized by the Garter King of Arms, proclaims as follows on its Home Page:

'The Principality of Snake Hill was formed by peaceful secession from Australia on 2nd September 2003. It was necessary to secede from Australia because some of our properties and income were stolen, and the Australian and New South Wales governments did nothing to help us'.

A novel doctrine indeed! You have a dispute with the central and local governments that remains unresolved: so your township or village secedes and proclaims itself by virtual (electronic) means to be a sovereign nation state? Actually, this IS precisely what the World Revolutionary nutcases would be happy to see occur: let every dispute trigger the fragmentation of the nation state, or US States, or any other political territory.

The naïve text continues:

'We were terrified we would lose everything'.

'The Head of State is Prince Paul' [no further details – Ed.], 'who is a very fair and democratic leader'. [Jolly good show! – Ed.].

'Snake Hill is located close to Mudgee, which is northwest of Sydney. It is about 900 metres above sea level and is 1.6 square kilometres in size' [Note: Australians don't DO metres and kilometres: they do FEET and MILES].

'As we are a religious state, our Constitution is based upon the Ten Commandments and other Biblical teachings'. [Problem: No Constitution text exists].

'We have still not received any offer of compensation, restitution or reimbursement'.

The fake 'religiosity' line is contradicted by the symbol of 'The Principality of Snake Hill', which is a Crucifix around which is entangled – a serpent, representative of Satan. If it wasn't for the sinister criminal theft intent of this operation, the naïve stupidity of what has already been divulged here would be more than enough for the subject matter to be dismissed out of hand.

There was an 'original website' which doesn't function properly and a 'second website' which is no better and in fact breaks down altogether. The original website invites one to 'visit the Church, University, Shop, Embassies, Bank and Post Office' from our Links page, but as indicated only some of these links 'work', and the information revealed is both childish and threadbare.

APPROPRIATELY, YOU ARE GREETED BY A SNAKE
When you do manage to 'bring something up' (like a sorcerer) you are greeted by a SNAKE.

The 'Shopping Centre' (Centre spelt in British English mode) states that 'all prices are quoted in Snake Hill Dollars as well as Euros' – which don't circulate in Australia: never have. 'All businesses at Snake Hill accept Snake Hill Credit Card'. There is a list of virtual 'goods' and services – Snake Hill Real Estate, Handknitwear, Snake Hill Souvenirs, Snake Hill Car Rentals, Building Designers [normally referred to as 'Architects} – Ed.) and Builders, Snake Hill Health Products, Snake Hill Boats, Snake Hill Ladieswear, Scarves and Ties, Sheets and Towels, Beads and Bangles, Timber and Hardware, Snake Hill Art Gallery, 'Marketplace', Snake Hill Bargain Store' goodies.

The repeated reference to 'Snake Hill Credit Card' suggests a line of enquiry: are we looking at an element of actual, virtual or prospective credit card fraud (for hypothecation purposes) here?

Under 'Snake Hill Real Estate', a virtual map devoid of all details apart from generic virtual locations and suggestions of an airport and a 'gas station', is accompanied by: 'Housing lots available now on very attractive terms. Please send email for details. Snake Hill Credit Card accepted. commercial district on long-term leases. Please send email for details. Snake Hill Credit Card accepted' – the expectation doubtless being that there are enough terrified fools trying to hide ill-gotten gains who will 'buy' virtual real estate sight unseen, with or without a Snake Hill Credit Card (if it exists).

Leaving aside other web pages which proclaim the variety of 'Snake Hill bird life', the 'very hilly topography with some cliffs', the false Principality's 'rare stamps' which are 'for sale in beautifully presented display packets of 6 stamps' (an attempt to exploit the inflatable prices obtainable from philatelists for 'rare stamps'), we proceed to a statement that 'the Principality's Embassy in Australia is located at Castle Hill, which is a suburb of Sydney' – although the separate listing of 'Embassies' makes no mention of any 'Snake Hill' Embassy to Australia.

Then we learn, all on the same flabby page:

'It is possible for foreign nationals to apply for citizenship in the Principality of Snake Hill. Please contact us for details'. However if this is a Principality, the residents wouldn't be 'citizens', they would be 'subjects'.

'At night the people of the Principality enjoy beautiful views of the night sky which is ideal for amateur astronomy' [You don't need to reside in Snake Hill to enjoy Australia's night sky! And the prospect of 'amateur astronomers' flocking to 'Snake Hill seems a far-fetched marketing gimmick].

'Some popular activities:
Bushwalking, Bird watching, Fishing, Swimming, Enjoying the Beautiful Views'.

'The Principality is a truly democratic nation where law and justice are upheld' ['Wunderbar!]

SUDDENLY, IT'S 'THE PRINCIPALITY OF NEW WALES'
After wasting time absorbing this mixed-up, fabricated, superfluous tripe, one comes a cross a 'Links' page, displaying the blasphemous cross and the entwined serpent again. But instead of proclaiming here that we are dealing with 'The Principality of Snake Hill', the name of the virtual Principality suddenly becomes: 'The Principality of New Wales'.

• In other words, this virtual 'microstate' can't make up its own mind what its name is supposed to be, due to some deception glitch or other. Lousy, slapdash tradecraft again, eh?

The 'Links' – to Snake Hill Church ['Meetings are held every Sunday and alternative Wednesdays], St Expedite Independent Catholic Church ['St Expedite'? How about 'St Leverage, St Hyothecate or St Theft? – Ed.], Snake Hill Post Office, The Bank of Snake Hill – do not work.

LIST OF NON-EXISTENT MAKE-BELIEVE 'SNAKE HILL' 'MINISTERS'
There is a sordid display of 'Litigation that led to our secession'. After something about 'St Paul Ottawa Global [sic!] College & University', which states that 'SPOGC&U is a Global University with its own Royal Charter' [no details, natch], the only remaining light relief here is the List of Ministers in the 'Snake Hill Parliament'. This hilarious list consists of the following wholly make-believe 'virtual' characters, in order of their appearance, none of whom exist in real life [if they did, there would be more Barons and Baronesses squeezed into one square mile than anywhere on earth]:

• Prime Minister: The Right Honourable [British spelling] Sir Terence Tamba.
• Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Finance: The Right Honourable Sir Mark Dockrey.
• Attorney-General and Minister for Foreign Affairs: The Right Honourable Sir Wayne Levick
• Minister of Immigration and Housing: The Right Honourable Sir Michael Vescio.
• Minister for Defence and Police: The Right Honourable Sir Jouni Ahola
• Minister for Permaculture and Forestry: The Right Honourable Sir Rodney Forshaw
• Minister for Ageing and Multicultural Affairs: The Right Honourable Sir Karl Hoermann
• Minister of Roads and Transport: The Right Honourable Sir Leigh Whitley
• Minister for the Arts: The Right Honourable Lady Faye [family name omitted!*]
• Minister for Education and Training: The Right Honourable Sir Norman [family name omitted!*]
• Minister for Health: The Right Honourable Lady Alexandra [family name omitted!*]
• Surgeon-General: The Right Honourable Sir R. L. Levene MD [No! MD is an Americanism!]
• Minister for Mental Health [sorely needed in this madhouse, one would have thought – Ed.]: The Right Honourable Sir B. A. Levene, Ph.D., ABPP [In the British Commonwealth, we don't 'DO' the US style 'Ph.D.; and ABPP: what does it stand for? Absolute Bunk Perpetrated Permanently? – Ed.] Board Certified in Clinical Psychology [another US usage]
• Minister for Industry, Tourism and Resources: The Right Honourable Sir Robert Scarff • Minister for Community Services and Indigenous Affairs: The Right Honourable Sir Alan Rutland.

• In British nomenclature, you can't have 'Sir Norman' or 'Lady Faye': It's got to be 'Sir Norman Snooks' and 'Lady Faye Garbage', or whatever. This kind of ludicrous schoolboy howler again reveals yet more slapdash CIA deception tradecraft.

• FACT: As indicated above, none of these people exist in real life.

If you press 'contact the Parliament', nothing happens. Because there is no 'Snake Hill Parliament', brothers and sisters, and neither are there any 'Snake Hill MPs'.

BUT: The American Ambassador to the fake, virtual 'Principality of Snake Hill' (no mention of 'The Principality of New Wales' here) and the Chairman of the fake 'Central Bank of Snake Hill' is listed as Lee Emil Wanta; while the fake Consul General is Mr Thomas Melville.

• The pathetic websites are full of bugs and malfunctioning links.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CRUDE WANTA EMAILS
As indicated above, Wanta was sending the Editor emails from the fake 'Principality of Snake Hill Central Bank: Office of the Chairman' as late as 12th September 2009. After the Editor discussed this on the open telephone line very shortly after his arrival in New York, these unwanted emails CEASED, as our telephone conversations are bugged by Fort Meade and Wanta will have received a phone call ordering him to remove Story from his garbage email list. No doubt 'they' realised that this nonsense was about to be exposed. What, THEN, was the purpose of those irrelevant emails?

The emails purported to 'embed' the crude concept of 'The Principality of Snake Hill' (a.k.a. 'The Principality of New Wales', presumably reflecting some deception twist) in the consciousness of targeted recipients who haven't yet understood that the CIA's ongoing 'Operation Mockingbird' programme to deceive the American people by controlling the 'mainstream' media has been vastly expanded by means of an immense Internet operation inter alia to substitute lying virtual reality for reality – the main purpose, as always, being to OBFUSCATE ONGOING, NEVER-ENDING FINANCIAL THEFT BY THE PENETRATED CRIMINAL INTELLIGENCE POWER, which is in thrall to German 'Black' intelligence thanks to its subservience to George H. W. D. V. D. Bush.

• Langley is not entitled 'The George Bush Center for Intelligence' BY ACCIDENT, you know.

'WRAPPING HIMSELF IN THE FLAG' FOR DECEPTION PURPOSES
While promoting the 'Snake Hill' fabrication, Wanta also uses these emails to 'wrap himself in the flag', celebrating everything American, 'Americana', 'Our Great Nation', American football, and any other sentimental stuff he can lay his hands on, intermingled with crude 'Scripture lessons', chain letters promoting shallow philosophical notions, and 'sad American stories' – all designed to mask the fact that, as exposed below, he is in reality a rabid, long-term enemy of the United States who is and has been systematically engaged, in collaboration with Godfather Bush Sr., in 'taking down' the United States from within.

THE PURPOSE OF THIS CRUDE C.I.A. 'SNAKE HILL' DECEPTION
The original purpose of the 'Snake Hill' deception was to establish a virtual entity with a virtual central bank that could be used by Wanta, on CIA/Bush Sr.'s instructions, to alienate the $4.5 trillion to Australia, so that the CIA/Bush Sr. could get their hands on the money.

Given the decay and lack of attention that has been paid to these two successive malfunctioning 'Snake Hill' websites (2003 and 2007), the likelihood is that this operation may have been essentially closed down – although this is contradicted by the evidence of the emails bearing the spurious 'Snake Hill' address which the Editor was receiving as late as 12th September 2009. It is possible that this deceit has outlived its usefulness but that Mr Wanta hasn't been informed; or there may be some other equally nutty explanation.

• Another possibility is that the websites have been deliberately allowed to decay and malfunction, but that the virtual infrastructure for the intended diversion of funds remains intact. In that case, the purpose of the malfunctioning websites would be to throw the likes of US off the scent.

WHAT WE KNOW ABOUT THE BEHAVIOUR OF THESE SNAKES
Whatever the truth of the matter, the substitution of poorly executed virtual reality ops. for reality, leads the observer Through the Looking Glass (as is intended) and back again, and not much the wiser. Except that:

• We KNOW (because we know both Wanta and Melville) that this scamming operation is/was intended to facilitate a gigantic theft.

• We KNOW that 'micronations' are promoted through the United Nations and that 'passports' for 'The Principality of Snake Hill' have been issued. We understand that anyone entering Australia on a 'Snake Hill' (thus fraudulent) passport will, at the very least, be detained and required to obtain an Australian visa. He may be deported.

• We KNOW that the degree of cunning and arrogance displayed by these snakes is matched only by their inherent blindness to their own stupidity and by their poor execution and tradecraft, their pathological lying and inability to discern when their lies have idiocy associated with this lying which deceives them into assuming that they will always get away with their deceptions.

• We KNOW that these endless lies are ALWAYS associated with MONETARY THEFT. If you can somehow imagine what it is like to have stolen, or to have been an accomplice in stealing, funds belonging to others, you may be able to understand why these people continue with their lies and stupid games. Because, having committed or aided and abetted financial theft, they cannot turn back and are 'locked into' their own web of deceit. Wanta recycles the adjective 'lawful' for a reason: to cover up the fact that what he is addressing is or was UNLAWFUL.

• Since Wanta professes to be a Catholic, if not a Christian (the two being mutually exclusive in practice), he should be informed enough to be in a position to reflect that Christ condemned ALL LIARS, indicating that if they don't repent, they face ETERNAL DAMNATION. This reveals that his 'in-your-face' religiosity is, like his fake 'Americana', just part of his cynical deception cover act.

MICRONATIONS AND HERITAGE SITES VS. THE NATION STATE
The 'micronations' operation serves the same purpose as the parallel plague of 'Heritage Sites'. Naïve observers are pleased when, say, Durham Cathedral is 'selected' for UN Heritage Site status. What they don't realise is that this is a deliberate, surreptitious, incremental strategy to pepper nation states with holes. All of a sudden, we will wake up to discover that swathes of national real estate are not national, but international, territory.

The same applies to these 'micronations'. They are wholly illegitimate and spurious, are not recognised by any real nation state (although some are 'registered' with the subversive, globalist United Nations) and are designed precisely to pepper nation states with holes – that is to say, like every other dimension of the World Revolution, to destroy the nation state and property.

What say you on these documents you can get to from here? Are they all fakes like all those names above you claim? Although I will say your point about principality of new wales (seen here) is a good one. What's odd is that this page has links to Canadian and American embassies for the principality of snake hill. No address or authentic phone numbers even. The Canadian embassador is named as DENNIS ROSS ROBINSON and there is no contact information for him. The embassy for Snake Hill in America reads as follows.

QUOTE

The Ambassador and Trade Commissioner is

His Excellency Ambassador Lee E. Wanta. Email

The Consul and Deputy Trade Commissioner is

His Excellency Consul Thomas J. Melville. Email

So Story, you may be correct about Wanta being a crook and hiding behind something called Snake Hill. I differ and say that some Waco type victims had to secede, but that Wanta and other crooks took advantage of this and ingratiated their names into this real, patriotic, secessionist Snake Hill. If you deny Snake Hill's existence based on some flimsy websites that you would probably grant were made up by Wanta type crooks if not Wanta himself, then I don't blame you. However I think that one family's story of having to secede is real. On the other hand, I doubt they made these crap websites too. I think that was also the work of Wanta and his ilk. Story, you illustrate a good point here too.

I will say this about Story. He has some interesting words about Szymanski in WANTA A FINANCIAL TERRORIST. Observe in the Greg Szymanski thread if you will.

Tom Heneghan has another dig at Christopher Story. I guess that's why Story on October 22nd 2009 put up his anti Wanta report again that was originally posted in late September. Story isn't letting it go. Keep in mind above that Story has stated that Wanta is a Catholic and that Story claimed to be a reader of the King James Bible and said above that Catholicism and Christianity are totally different. Keep in mind that Heneghan is an admitted Catholic too. - AntiSionist

P.P.S. At this hour we can divulge that there are forces in the United Kingdom, which are demanding Queen Elizabeth II abdicate her throne given the fact that new evidence has surfaced linking her to criminal financial activity involving the U.S. Federal Reserve System, including trying to RAID the U.S. Social Security Trust Fund.

We can also divulge that sources in the United Kingdom are ready to produce evidence that the House of Windsor aka German House of Hanover actually forwarded troop locations and army movements of both the British Expeditionary Forces and French Military divisions during the period of 1939 and 1940 at the beginning of World War II.

This HIGH Treason by the German House of Hanover aka British House of Windsor contributed to the British-French defeat at Dunkirk in June of 1940.

And, of course, it gets worse!

Aiding and abetting the TREASONOUS German-British monarchy was none other than the late Prescott Bush, father of former President George Herbert Walker Bush and grandfather of nation-wrecker, election-stealer, Constitution shredder, cocaine snorting, homosexual in-the-closet, AWOL, U.S. Treasury embezzler and war criminal, George W. BushFRAUD.

Prescott Bush actually operated as a German NAZI spy during World War II and was actually questioned by the FBI concerning his PRE-knowledge of the allied invasion of Normandy, which numerous FBI investigators at the time thought Prescott was about to leak to Adolf Hitler himself.

The New York Times is sitting on this story concerning allegations that Prescott Bush was actually a NAZI spy during World War II.

P.P.P.S. The current attempt to smear the late former French President Francois Mitterrand with stories appearing in the French press accusing Mitterrand of sexual misconduct are stories being bought and paid for by British Intelligence operatives Christopher Story and Michael Cottrell and noted Bush-Clinton Crime Family Syndicate 'black op' operative, Nazi Colonel Dana Wilcox.

It should be noted that former White House occupant BushFRAUD was given a $6.2 TRILLION loan by his business partner, British NAZI Queen Elizabeth II, in order to have BushFRAUD implement the Wanta-Reagan-Mitterrand Protocols.

BushFRAUD and his daddy, along with their business partners, Bill and Hillary Clinton, proceeded to STEAL the money and then lost it in illicit trading made through the Galleon Group hedge fund tied to their secret trading platforms in India and Pakistan.

Now Queenie Pooh wants her money back from her business partner BushFRAUD who refuses to give it to her.

So now you see, folks, why Christopher Story and Michael Cottrell are attacking American Patriot Ambassador Leo Wanta, along with the late President of France, Francois Mitterrand, because the $6.2 TRILLION are under the administrative control of Ambassador Leo Wanta, NOT the British Monarch or George W. BushFRAUD.

It is the U.S. and French Treasuries that are due these funds NOT the British.

AntiSionist - October 23, 2009 02:58 AM (GMT)

Does Christopher Story read this site? Or is he talking about someone else questioning his pro Queen stance? As far as I know, Greg Szymanski and Tom Heneghan have publicly stated their uneasiness with Story's support of that Germanic Jesuit controlled bitch, but they aren't anonymous. I think he may be talking about someone else and not me or anyone else on the unhived mind. Maybe rumormillnews perhaps.

IN MEMORIAM AND HORIZONTALISATION NEWS UPDATE
ASSASSINATIONS CONNECTED WITH THE COVER-UP, CLEAN-UP, AND RESOLUTION
Sunday 18 October 2009 03:00

•The statement on a website that 'Chris Story is WORKING for the Queen' is false. This service has been completely independent for 39 years, has no affiliations other than normal commercial and cooperative arms'-length arrangements, has no UK intelligence support whatsoever, was directly OPPOSED BY MI-6 as previously reported at great length both on this website and in our financial journal, and stands precisely by the text which appears at the foot of these reports. He has NO PROTECTION of which he is aware and is supported exclusively by the quest for the truth and by sustaining faith in Jesus Christ, a choice which is open to us all. None of the criticisms made by these operatives have any purchase, relevance or accuracy whatsoever; and nor can they ever be proven. There is no plot or ulterior motive other than CONTROLLED, PRODUCTIVE ANGER directed at those who subvert, confuse, contaminate and mislead the public of Britain and the United States, and operate as a Fifth Columm from within the structures of both countries.

The self-appointed ANONYMOUS liar who states the above cannot be held accountable for his lie since he is a coward who disguises his identity and cannot prove his statement because there is no proof, as the statement is false. This is well known among our subscribers, many of whom have been with us for decades or multiple years, and subscribe precisely because of our complete and well-known independence. Such inaccurate assertions are the product of idle and ignorant minds. The Editor has a very sharp pen: it's deployed specifically where it NEEDS TO BE DEPLOYED, in the interests of our two nations alone, and for no other motive whatsoever. He is just as vulnerable as anyone else who's fighting these hideous battles, to adverse, malicious consequences. As was previously mentioned, instead of promulgating lies, the liar in question has the option of phoning the Editor of this service to make any enquiry he or she likes. And as also previously mentioned, a tell-tale sign of an intent to deceive is the failure of such people to reach for the phone.

One is also entitled to deduce that those who may feel inclined to attack this Editor in the prevailing context support the record and behaviour of the US criminal operatives headed by George Bush Sr., thereby identifying their true allegiance and 'blowing their own covers'.

DIVERSIONARY COVER-UP DISINFORMATION TO MASK A MASSIVE DEFEAT FOR THE CROOKS
Self-evidently, it is not necessary for us to refute fabrications by counterintelligence cokeheads.
But the hysterical lies, diversionary claptrap and disinformation that has circulated on certain web sites over the past week or so, concerning inter alia HM The Queen, reflect the consummation of a process whereby the stealing of the $6.2 trillion of sovereign LOAN funds made available for the US Dollar Refunding process by the Bank of England on the 19th and 20th June 2007 to Bank of New York (Mellon), which then hijacked the funds after which they were illegally deployed to finance the corrupt carousel until the discontinuity of 10th-12th September 2008 referenced in earlier reports, has been or is in the process of being rectified. This matter is too sensitive for this arms'-length observer to feel comfortable elaborating upon at this stage: a basic rule of thumb in this business is that one MUST NOT PRESUMPTUOUSLY GET AHEAD OF EVENTS, WHICH ARE THE SPECIFIC PREROGATIVE OF OTHERS TO DETERMINE.

However the nub of the matter is that the attacks on The Queen, which are of no consequence as of course they are all false and based upon childish make-believe, are motivated by the urgent need for a scapegoat given the comprehensive defeat that is being inflicted upon the criminal cadres within and associated with the US Government.

In this connection, Obama's public whitewashing and fumigation, for public consumption, of Bush Sr., can be seen as a further component of the CIA's vast diversionary barrage which is intended to bury the REALITY, which is that these US criminals HAVE BEEN FORCED TO CONCEDE.

The attempted fumigation of Bush Sr. cannot 'work', because the world's most ruthless criminal stinks to high heaven; and it is reported that the stink of Bush Sr. is already infesting the clothing of the 44th President, as he will have discovered when he removes his jacket, shirt and pants on returning to the White House. He'll NEVER be able to rid himself of that stench.

Meanwhile, all sane observers are staggered at the extraordinary carelessness and stupidity of those who suggest that The Queen was involved in international affairs aged 14 or 15! Such crass ignorance betrays the low calibre of the brainwashed defectives who disseminate such drivel.

We thought that when we demonstrated the idiocy of Wanta's 'Principality of Snake Hill' invention and the stupidity of his attorney, Thomas Henry, stating that he represented parties connected with the non-existent 'Principality of Snake Hill', the point that these US operatives' tradecraft is crude beyond belief might have sunk in, at least in patches. Instead of which we have an operative who alleges that a 14-year-old teenager 'made a secret pact with Hitler and the Nazis'. What are we going to be told next? That Hitler (Shickelgruber) is still alive and that Himmler lives in Chicago?

Those who take this low drivel seriously and rush onto websites to provide readers with the benefit of their 'take' on the latest batch of ignorant lies, make themselves look even more idiotic than the perpetrators of these deliberately confused distortions, which are designed, as we have explained, to OBFUSCATE AND COVER UP the fact that the perpetrators have been EXPOSED, that they have NOT GOT THEIR WAY, that they are being PROGRESSIVELY TAKEN DOWN, and that the entire 9/11 mass murder operation and what it covers up, is in the process of unravelling.

Christopher Story in his latest blog continues to defend the Queen of England. He takes a jab at Fulford but it's not as good as Jew baiter Makow's. I can't believe I'm about to defend that Jew basher, but how dare Story accuse Makow of attempting to cloud things by calling out the British. He says Fulford is a liar about how bad the Queen of England is. I was going to post this in the anti Fulford topic but then I realized, Story by making the Queen look good, is making himself look bad. Especially to guys like us who know the real deal about the British. So, here goes. I give you the full article. Story may have busted Greg Szymanski on a technicality here about Wanta's exit from jail, but Szymanski has the goods on Story for making the Queen and the Vatican look good. Anyone who thinks the Clintons and Bushes are bad guys who are against the British need to have their head checked.

DISCREDITED OFFENSIVE AGAINST THE BRITISH MONARCHY
FULFORD DISPENSES OUTRAGEOUS LIES ABOUT QUEEN ELIZABETH II
Tuesday 27 October 2009 00:01
Original report posted October 26, 3:08 PM: Manhattan Headlines Examiner

• Reminder: ALL 'information' signed off by specifically ANONYMOUS sources, meaning sources that deliberately choose anonymity and that are too cowardly or controlled to reveal their identities and coordinates, is UNPROVENANCED and prospectively SPURIOUS 'information' for which the sources cannot be held responsible, and therefore should prudently be discounted. ANONYMITY implies intelligence community cover, making such sources of 'information' doubly suspect. Any denial of intelligence community cover by an anonymous source is by definition worthless.

• VIRTUAL KEYBOARD DEVICE: Given the 'questions' that have been raised as to the veracity and credibility of ANONYMOUS sources, certain controlled NAMED sources have been activated in the past week or so to front an operation which has the following objective. Its purpose is to generate preparatory confusion so that when the really devastating exposures surface, false 'alternative' versions of the events will have been swilling around in the undergrowth sufficient to generate a protective fog of lies and diversionary 'noise' to afford the perpetrators an added layer of sorely needed 'protection'. The technique being used is to redistribute old reports, on the pretext that we should all immediately drop everything and 'connect the (false) dots' amid a heightened cacophany of CIA/DVD redirection stories that are in fact designed to maximise the potential for confusion.

Do not be fooled by this cynical diversionary operation. Its purpose is to CONFUSE YOU so that when the exposures take place you will be bogged down with old, recycled, diversionary 'lines' and will (they hope) fail to see the truth when it's stuck, pardon the expression, right under your nose. Watch and wait in patience. The abominations will not be obfuscated by this cynical operation.

• THIS OPERATION has been broadened to embrace ignorant attacks on the British Head of State which have had to be 'corrected' with further disinformation almost immediately, as the reality of developments behind the scenes continues to cause extreme panic among the Bush-Clinton-DVD operatives, who imagine that wanton attacks of this nature can change things from their twisted perspective, which is out of the question. So they are left with nothing but abuse spewed out via controlled outlets which lack all discernment and exist purely for disinformation purposes. The overall picture is of a discredited US agitation and propaganda apparat that is falling apart at the seams, and making a dirty mess as it implodes and its full nastiness is revealed for all to see.

• IN MEMORIAM AND HORIZONTALISATION NEWS:
This report and its 'SUDDEN DEATH SYNDROME' Listing dated the 18th October 2009 has been EXTENSIVELY UPDATED effective 26th October 2009, to take account of the FAST EMERGING PANDEMIC OF HORIZONTALISATIONS anticipated earlier by this service.
